AUBURN WEEKLY COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....JANUARY 26, 1899

ST. JOE.

Grandma Filley who has been quite sick is much better.

Mrs. H. M. Bowman has returned home from Michigan.

A bright new baby boy came to the home of Frank Carle last Sunday, papa and mamma are doing well. It is grandpa and grandma Sechler now.

Mort Foot of Harlan came over Sunday, and judging from the smile on his face, we would say he was happy in the love of some fellow's sister.

M. F. Body who has been quite poorly for some time, is convalescing quite rapidly, and for a man who is confined to his home all the time enjoys himself quite well.

A rise of the water and cold weather caused the bottoms south of town to be covered with ice sufficient to make splendid skating.

The B. & O. gang of carpenters are placing new ties on the railroad bridge.

Rev. Johnson of the M. P. church commenced a series of meetings at that church last Sunday evening.

There is talk of a canning factory for St. Joe, and still there is more talk of a grist mill.

The home of the late James Ryan will be sold at public auction Feb. 4, 1899, at 10 a. m.

Died at Newville Saturday forenoon, Nelson Fusselman. He was in St. Joe on Friday and appeared as well as usual. Saturday morning he came down town but in a few minutes complained of not feeling well and returned home and in less than an hour was dead. Heart failure is supposed to have been the cause. He leaves a wife and five children.

BUTLER.

The M. E. revival effort continues with some success. Rev. Hutson, Presiding Elder filled the pulpit last Sunday morning and evening.

Rev Bloyd of the Church of God commenced a protracted effort at their church last Sabbath.

William Richards is slowly improving after a serious attack of grip.

Three or four boys and young men, and one woman, were arrested last week for stealing coal from the railroad yards and trains.

A quite a number of persons in different parts of town are more or less seriously affected by grip.

Coroner E. V. Campbell was called to Garrett last Saturday to hold an inquest over the remains of Elmore Dorman, a B. & O. Engineer who was accidently killed under his engine there that day. It seems that he had just come in from the east on engine number 797 had cut his train for the crossing and had gone beneath the engine to do some repairs when a number of cars were shunted down the track by the yard engine forcing a short distance, crushing him between the fire box and the surface of the trace. He was 32 years old, had lived at Dayton, Ohio, and leaves a wife and two children.

Sun Time is Legal

An important point of law was settled by Judge Hartman, when he gave his instructions to the jury in the case against Ryan. Ryan's witnesses said he had closed a little before 11 p. m standard time. The witness for the state, said his saloon was open a few minutes after 11 standard time. And Ryan said he was running by standard time. If the legal time for closing had been on sun time, then by the testimony on either side, the saloon was open after 11. But if the time followed was standard time, then one side said he was safely within the law. Judge Hartman instructed the jury that each place had its own sun time determined by the unvarying movements of the sun, and that this alone must, be considered in law cases. Standard time is an artificial time, made by man, for the convenience of certain lines of business and has no force in a law point like this. So it will be seen that hereafter, saloons, in closing must do so by sun time.

Free Lecture Course.

Prof. Miles Grant of Boston, Mass., will begin a series of lectures at the Auburn Christian Mission on Monday, Jan. 30, at 7 p. m. and close the series on Sunday evening Feb. 12. They will treat of Bible studies and theology, on the prophecies, on spiritualism, sacred history, etc. He uses a chart 68 ft long and 7 ft wide to illustrate his lecturers. He brings to his aid also, a fund of knowledge obtained by extensive travels in nearly every state in the Union and in countries all over the world. All should hear him. There is no charge, no collection. It is absolutely free.

MR. RHODES

Dr. Hines reports this morning that, when he and Dr. Casebeer left Mr. Rhodes, yesterday evening he was resting as well as could be expected after such a severe operation. He was under the influence of chloroform over three hours. They had to cut off the left hand entire, amputating just above the wrist. The right hand was all removed except the thumb, which they stitched up and will try to save. But even the thumb is torn and shredded, a spike having ripped along the whole length of it. It is a serious case. The poor man will hardly be able to feed himself, much less to do work. But he is in a fair way to recover.

Evenly Divided.

When the first twelve men of the struck jury were seated in the jury box yesterday, it was noted as a queer concidence, that the men on the back row were democrats, and the six on the front row were all republicans. It was also remarked that two opposite conditions affected each set of six. The republicans, though having the front seat, had the lower seat, while the democrats though on the back seat, had the higher one. So much for location, but the attorneys on both sides said they were a fine body of men for any trial.

COURT NEWS.

Perry Smurr, a Wilmington township farmer, was arrested and brought into court on a charge of wife beating Saturday. He gave bail in $200 for appearance at court, and was released.

We find the following work done on the probate list, not heretofore reported:

ADJUSTMENTS.

H. E. Sarber allowed $5. in a claim against the Thomas Gard estate. W. E. Shenk allowed $4.65; J. M. Smith $1.31; Dr. Clevenger allowed $43.80; A J. Smith allowed $7.50; John Zeek, $3.65, in same estate.

In the James F. Gushwa estate, sale of land to C. L. Elson for $1,333 33 approved and deed ordered.

In James Ryan estate, G. W. Woodcox, admr, ordered to sell realty at ⅓ cash, rest in six and twelve months

Cleo C. Conner estate, a minor, Frances A. Gron guardian. Appraisement filed at $132. Sale ordered at not less than appraised value, ⅓ down, and ⅓ in 12 and 18 months.

John G. Raub estate, G. O. Denison and S W. Guthrie admrs. Wm. XX McDonald appointed guardian ad-litem for Artie Guthrie minor legatee. Property ordered sold at private sale, ⅓ cash ⅓ in 12 and ⅓ in 18months.

THE STRUCK JURY.

Today, Monday, the case before the struck jury came up. It was the case of Clem Jackson vs the Ft. Wayne Consolidated Railway Co. that is, the city railway, for an injury done plaintiff last year. It had been brought here on a change of venue, and here, both parties united in asking for a struck jury. So the jury commissioners had to make a list of 40 men for a jury. The attorneys in the case met and objected 12 off on a side, leaving 16. These 16 were the ones that came in to-day, having been notified by the sheriff. Clerk Long began at the head of the list and called the names in order, the men, to the number of 12 taking their seats in the jury box. Of the other four, two, J. D. Myers and Wm. F. Wise, were sick and did not come. The two left out were S. J. Brandon and M. B. Willis. The entire list of 16 is J, D. Williamson, John B. Ketcham, John Neff, John W. Brady, J. D. Myers, Eugene Carper, F. M. Teeters, I. B Gœteschius, F W. Stoops, W. D. Boyle, Ira Brandon, Art Steele, J. W. Sherwood, M. B, Willis, Wm. F. Wise and S. B. Brandon.

But the case could not be tried, on account of sickness in the family of Mr. Harris, one of the attorneys at Fort Wayne. So it is put off till next term The judge instructed the men to be careful and form no opinions, as it might happen that the parties would still have them to try the case. So they were discharged. The expense incurred will be paid by the parties in the suit. If this jury should be called in again, it will be a mere letter from the County clerk.

WEEKLY CLUB NOTES

The L. L. C. held a very interesting session at the residence of Mrs. J. A. Barns on Saturday afternoon. The topic for the day was the state of New York with Mrs. Nellie Hartman as leader. She gave an interesting paper on New York, Past and Present, bringing to the club with the assistance of some of the members many items of importance.

Mrs. Ford gave an account of her "Trip on the Hudson from Troy to New York City" which was fine and full of interest to the club.

Mrs. Willis' paper, "Through the Mokawk Valley," was also an account of a trip taken by her some few years ago through this beautiful and historic valley, and was greatly appreciated.

Items of interest about New York by the club, closed the literary program Current News which is a part of each session's work followed.

A committee was appointed to arrange for Guest Day which is in two two weeks The committee is Mrs. Tillie McCord, Mrs. Nellie Hartman and Mrs. Holmes. Adjourned to meet next Saturday with Mrs. Josie Brown.

The Auburn Culture Club met with Mrs. Moss on Saturday. Mrs. Moody was leader for the day. After the lesson was finished, a recitation was given by Mrs. Etta Ryan, entitled "Airly Days," followed by a Question Box. Arrangements have been made to give a Valentine Party at the home of Mrs. C. C. Shaffer on the afternoon of Feb. 14. The Club will meet Saturday with Miss Laura Ober.

THE BRINKERHOFF SALE

At the Brinkerhoff sale on Saturday, there was but a small attendance, as somehow people did not seem to think there would be anything of value to sell. But they were greatly mistaken. He had a very desirable library of well selected books on law, on theology and and of general literature, He was evidently a scholar. The books went for a trifle. Attorney Lirk got several of the law books that will be valuable and there being no second bid, got them for a mere song, Mrs. Clara McClellan bid 50 cents on a good coal stove, to start it, and to her surprise no one else made a bid and she got it. Everything else went about the same way.

County Seat War.

Newton Co., this state has a county seat war. Kentland is the county seat, but Morocco in the north part of the county wants it. Both sides are making life a burden for the legislators at Indianapolis. They want the laws fixed so that a petition signed by 300 or 400 voters, will compel the commissioners to call an election. Then at the election, the Morocco folks will like to have a 55-per-cent vote do the business.

Something For Nothing.

We have heard of the boy who wanted to eat his cake and keep it too, but never before of a business man who sold his goods and then gave the purchaser credit for the amount paid. To learn about this send to James Vicks Sons of Rochester, N. Y., who agree to do this in their Guide. The Golden Wedding edition of Vick's Garden and Floral Guide is certainly an artistic work, with its twenty four pages lithographed in colors, and nearly one hundred more pages filled with handsome half-tone illustrations, photographed from Flowers, Fruits, Vegetables and homes.

While this Guide is really too expensive to give away, they it with a Due Bill for 25 cents worth of seeds for only 15 cents. Another new feature is the doing away with the old packet of Vegetable Seeds and stating the quantity in each case, the buyer getting more for his money.

FAIRFIELD CENTER.

Miss Maud Elson is working for Albert Buchanan's.

Mrs. Jacob Deetz, north of town is very low at this writing.

Crushed by a Tree.

As we go to press, Dr. Adams is starting for Smithfield, word have come here that Douglass Kelley had been crushed by a falling tree, and would probably be dead when he gets there.

The Deadly Corn Husker.

This terrible machine got in its work again today. Just afternoon, the men were running Wm. Moudy's corn shredder, at the Hi Weaver farm up northeast of town, and Philip Rhodes was feeding it, when he somehow got both hands into the machine. His right hand was torn to shreds up into the palm, and the left had part of the fingers torn off. Mr. Moudy came in haste to town and got Drs. Hines and Casebeer, who hurried out there, One hand will be rendered useless and the other, partly so.

We learn this morning, Wednesday, that Mr. Kelley is dead. It seems he was cutting down a tree, and it caught on another, breaking off a limb which flew back and struck him, crushing in the back of his skull. Two or three men were working with him, and at once carried him home and summoned Dr. Darby. But he died about the time the Doctor got there, living only about two hours It is one saddest accidents we have recorded for a long time. He was one of the most intelligent and progressive of our young farmers, and universally respected. He leaves a young wife and two small children, besides his mother, Mrs. Dr. Adams and the sister Carrie, who lives with Mrs. Adams. Carrie is the last of seven children of Mr. and Mrs. James Kelley —The two Garrett papers are inclined to lecture and give advice to Auburn papers, because, we each wrote about ten lines, criticizing each other in respectful language. —Senator Nusbaum has introduced a bill to allow a free peddlers' license to all ex-union soldiers. At once there came up the usual fight over it for fear it would include ex-rebels. It was however learned that the author of the bill, John W. Kern, did not intend to include rebels, and quiet was restored.

—The Dayton Herald wants the state constitution changed to provide that every member of the general assembly who introduces or votes for a bill which is afterwards declared unconstitutional shall be fined $300 for the first offense and imprisoned for the second. That is in the line of reform, and we mention in the hope that the Indiana law-makers will accept the Ohio suggestion.

—Senor Gonzalez de Quesada, president of the Cuban Junta, passed through Fort Wayne yesterday morning, and stopped off long enough to get breakfast. He later on took a Grand Rapids train to Ionia, Mich., where he was to lecture last evening. It was his "Junta" or body of Councillors that has been located at New York and kept alive the Cuban rebellion since it began three years.

She told of her prayer to her grandmother, who said: "Well, why can't you pray tonight that may be warmer tomorrow so grandma's rheumatism will be better?" All right; I will," was the response, and that night as she knelt incorporated this in her little prayer, "O, God, make it hot for grandma."—Ex

"A night at the Circus" which is well known as one of the most unique as well as one of the most original comedies ever produced before the American public, has been secured by the Manager Henry as his next attaction and will be seen on next Friday, Jan. 27. The play deals in a highly interesting manner with circus life and the mysteries of behind the canvas and under the tents and an exceptionally clever company will be seen here in it. Seats will be at popular price 25 and 35 cents; children under ten years, 15.

—Papers over several counties are industriously arguing the question of a new court house for DeKalb county. One interested patriot says it is an unsightly and tumble down structure. It would be well for all these officious ones to keep their jackets on. Our court house is just as good and just as pretty as it was the year it was built, and none of them need to live in it. When we get so we think we shall need a better one, we will begin and levy a light tax for feveral years, so the taxpayers will not be burdened with a large debt, when we do build. Oh, we know how these things are done.

—A funny thing happened at the new bankrupt sale store of boots and shoes and clothing the other day: All over the windows are big bills saying the stock has $24,500 worth of goods. Assessor Saxton, went to see if he paid taxes as required by law, when the man said he had, and showed his tax receipt on a stock valued at $700. And this appears to about all he has. Henry Wolf was in there at another time and asked the price of a suit of clothe. The man said they had just market that suit down to $10. But Mr. Wolf had on a suit just like it, that he had brought of G. H. Yesbera, at his regular price of $9. The facts are there cheap auction stores do not generally sell goods as cheap as our own merchants do, and do not handle as good an article besides.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

THE SHERMAN LAW.

The Sherman law of 1890 contains the following clause: "It being the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals (gold and silver) on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio, or such ratio as may be provided by law." The policy of the Government here declared is to maintain the two metals in a parity with each other. It has respect to the metals, gold and silver, of which money is made, and not to the coins struck from these metals and used as money. These coins, being equivalent representatives of our money unit, must have the same value or purchasing power, that is, the same relation to commodities, so long as they concurrently circulate and are used as money. Any unit of money, or "dollar" is as valuable, that is, it has the same purchasing power as every other "dollar" regardless of the material in which it is embodied or by which it is represented. All that is required is that the material in the form of a dollar be endowed by law with the function of money; and the value or purchasing power of this dollar depends upon the number of those units or the mass of money in circulation. In making this declaration of the policy of the United States, Congress could not have had in view the gold and silver coins, but the gold and silver bullion, or metals, from which these coins are struck. How are these metals to be placed and maintained on a parity with each other upon a given ratio? How can sixteen ounces of silver bullion be made equal in value to one ounce of gold bullion, this being our present ratio? As the value of each of these metals is determined by its use for monetary purposes, their equality or parity with each other can only be secured by their equality in such use; in other words, by providing by law for their passage through the mints into the currency on a prescribed ratio upon precisely equal terms. It is the ratio upon which they are coined that brings the metals together, or diminishes the separation between them. This has been strikingly demonstrated by the operation of our coinage laws. In 1792 Alexander Hamilton, after careful examination, determined that the relation of the metals to each other then was 1 to 15, that is, that one ounce of gold was equivalent in value to 15 ounces of silver; and the best writers upon the subject have vindicated the correctness of his judgment. But France in 1803 opened her mints to the unrestricted coinage of gold and silver upon the ratio of 1 to 15½, and this became the prevailing ratio in Europe. As one ounce of gold would exchange for only 15 ounces of silver in Europe, it went to Europe and silver came to this country. In 1834, to attract gold to this country, we changed our ratio to 1 to 16, one-half a point on the other side of the French ratio. The result was that as one ounce of gold would exchange for only 15½ ounces of silver in France, but would exchange for 16 ounces of silver in this country, it came to this country, and our silver migrated to Europe. Consequently gold predominated in our currency down to 1873, and in this country silver was at about three per cent premium over gold. If the colossal blunder of throwing silver out of the money stock in 1873 (Carlisle in 1878 said: "It was the most gigantic crime of this or any other age") had not been committed; if, instead, we had then changed our ratio so as to make it conform to the French or European ratio, France would not have closed her mint against silver, and this disturbing silver question would never have arisen. It is therefore only through the agency of our coinage laws that the metals can be made to approach each other and their parity maintained. The phrase "the present legal ratio or such ratio as may be provided by law" manifestly means that the metals shall be freely coined upon the present legal ratio, and if, upon a fair trial, it does bring them together, then such change of the ratio shall be made as will accomplish this object. Hence the declaration of policy set forth in the above clause in the act of 1890 was a declaration in favor of a bimetallic standard, and not for an exclusive gold standard, or an exclusive silver standard. The present administration interprets the above clause in the Sherman act as imposing an obligation upon the Government to keep all the dollars in our currency, whether in the form of paper dollars or silver dollars, on a parity with gold, and that to do so it is indispensable that it shall be in a position to give gold coins in exchange for all this currency, as it is presented, and obtain this gold by issuing bonds for it in the name of the people and thereby increase the public indebtedness. It was because an increase of the currency would be made by coining the silver seigniorage in the treasury, amounting to $55,152,980, and thereby increase the difficulty of accomplishing this object, that President Cleveland vetoed the seigniorage bill in March last; and he appealed to this clause in the Sherman act in justification of his course. He regards that clause as in effect placing this country upon an exclusive gold standard, and the continuance of silver in the situation of merchandise, and thereby defeating the policy declared in the clause, viz., "the maintaining of the parity of these two metals with each other upon the present legal ratio or such ratio as may be provided by law." For it must be apparent to every one that these metals can never be made to approach each other while one of them, gold, is a money metal, and the other, silver, is merchandise, but that they must drift farther and farther apart so long as gold continues to rise.—Henry G. Miller.

Must Touch the Pocket Nerve.

Personal interest seems to be the only specific against municipal somnolence. Franchise-grabbers never sleep, because there is no money in it, and there is money in wakefulness. The average man does not readily appreciate any but direct and palpable influences. When they reach him indirectly or through disguises he displays the wisdom of the ostrich. Hence he acquiesces in a gold standard, a protective tariff and indirect taxes in general, not realizing that they are more burdensome than any other and afford rascals golden opportunities. When citizens once grasp the fact that they are personally interested in every act of their officials they will be more vigilant. They will sleep with one eye open.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A European Bluff.

It is scarcely to be believed that Germany and France will permit this country to go the length of passing retaliatory laws which shall exclude their food products from this country, for when the row is all over and such laws on both sides have been repealed, the trade lost during the interim will not be easily regained. It will be hard at first to do without certain sausages, cheeses and wines or to pay higher prices for those already made here and stamped with foreign labels, but the boom which will ultimately be achieved by the American brand of these goods will create an appetite for them which cannot be eradicated.—Philadelphia Times.

Another Step Necessary.

President McKinley has deemed it judicious to pardon Leech Lake Indians who took part in a miniature rebellion last summer, and there is no reason whatever to doubt that their case was one calling for the exercise of executive clemency. But what has become of the white officials and their businesses who forced these Indians, as the only way in which they could attract attention to their unendurable wrongs, to begin a war which, as the Indians themselves were well aware, was grotesquely hopeless? Numerous witnesses of good repute testified that the whole trouble was caused by the brutal rapacity of these officials.—New York Times.

Getting Even Off the Taxpayer.

By stubbornly persisting in an unwholesome policy we have lost nearly all of the foreign carrying trade, in so far as the loss can be measured by the flag of the carriers, and now it is calmly proposed to mulct the taxpayers of the United States in order to make good a losing business. What the carriers of the seas want is to be allowed to buy their ships as other competing carriers buy them. They ask no odds of anybody. Give them an even chance, then let them alone.—Philadelphia Record.

Superfluous Generals.

It appears that our Government has created too many generals and that several of them are soon to be mustered out. When the war with Spain began we had only three major generals, now we have nineteen. Of brigadier generals we have no less than forty-six. Our army even under the inflating process of the expansive policy does not need so many officers of high rank. The proposition to reduce the number of generals, however, raises a difficulty. Which of them shall go?—Atlanta Journal.

Tutor for the President.

The President is said to be carefully studying the history and methods of British colonial administration. The President might get "Joe" Chamberlain to come over and give him a course of lessons in colonial government. Or there is a man in South Africa who might possibly be induced to superintend a trial start of the American imperial machine. His name and address are Cecil Rhodes, Empire Builder, Cape Colony.—Portland, Me., Argus.

How Trusts Operate.

One of the greatest evils in connection with trusts is the power they possess to depress the returns of the producer. Whether the raw material take the form of the workingman's brain and brawn or the products of the farms or mines or the forests, it is all the same. Ultimately the profit must come out of the class that gets the least. No wonder popular prejudice against trusts is constantly growing.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Does Not Appeal to the Bosses.

The college presidents and professors of the country are practically unanimous in their opposition to the Philippine annexation. But this will not influence the Republican bosses at Washington. Education and enlightment are hardly ever in accord with Republican policies.—Manchester (N. H.) Union.

Political Pointers.

Imperialism, like squab pigeon, seems to have been biggest when first hatched. —Grand Rapids Democrat.

Mr. Rockefeller and his trust are all right so long as nothing stronger than an Ohio court gets after them.—Sioux City Tribune.

"We care not who makes the laws of the nation if we may but name the Attorney General.—Chorus of Trusts.—Omaha World-Herald.

The President has had a head-on collision with public sentiment. Public sentiment hardly knew that it had struck something, but the other party is all in a heap.—Kansas City Times.

There is no parallel between the American expansion at the beginning of this century and the imperialism of the present day. Those who admire the former are entirely consistent in deploring and opposing the latter.—Buffalo Courier.

If we are going to build up our merchant marine we should begin by repealing our stupid and mediaeval navigation laws. They are anachronisms and ought to be wiped off the statute books before the new country opens.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

On the assumption that Senator Foraker spoke with authority and that it has been the intention of the President all along to give the Filipinos their political independence, the interrogation point rises up: "What was the $20,000,000 for?"—Des Moines Leader.

It is a little late in life for Messrs. Hoar and Edmunds to try to break into the Democratic party, but it must be acknowledged that they are preaching doctrine that ought to arrest some prominent Democrats in their retrograde movement.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

IT WOULD REQUIRE A HORSE THIS SIZE TO RUN ALL THE CARS NOW PROPELLED BY ELECTRICITY

Gigantic as was the wooden horse of Ulysses in the siege of Troy, it dwindles to insignificance when compared with the size of the horse it would take to draw all the electric street railway cars now in use in the United States. It is calculated that 320,000 horses would be required to move the cars now propelled by electricity, making no allowance for the extra cars which would have to be run to equalize the present schedule were horses used. One horse, representing the combined height, length and bulk of the 320,000, would be so massive that he could plank the hoofs of his fore legs down in Cincinnati and slake his thirst in the Ohio river, while his hind legs rested on Manhattan Island, whence with his tail he could brush the flies off the Brooklyn bridge management. His back would be high up above the reach of clouds, higher than the air strata through which it is proposed by visionary electrical inventors to communicate the current generated by Niagara Falls to Paris to run the exhibition in 1900.

The illustration appears exaggerated, but it truly represents the condition of what is claimed to be the most important individual industry in this country. The amount of capital involved in the electric street railways is placed at about one and a half billions, and it is increasing rapidly every month. Should the national government decide to buy all these roads it would take all the $525,000,000 of gold, the $120,000,000 of silver, the $400,000,000 of certificates, the $225,000,000 of national bank notes and $250,000,00 of United States treasury notes in circulation to pay for the purchase. A conservative estimate places the number of passengers carried in a year by the electric cars at 2,600,000,000, not including the passengers transferred from one line to another. That means two rides each year for every human being on earth. The steam roads of the United States carry only 535,000,000 passengers annually over 182,000 miles of track.

MRS. HENRY T. SLOANE.

The New York Society Leader Who Figures in a Domestic Scandal.

The report that Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Sloane are to resume their former relations, after a separation, and after rumors of divorce proceedings, has not stopped the tongues of the New York gossips. Mrs. Sloane's social prominence has made this sensation of more than local interest. The wife of the New York millionaire is one of the most accomplished, keen witted and beautiful women in the metropolis. She and Mrs. Ogden Mills have divided the honors and responsibility of ruling in female swelldom in New York, and at Newport. They have been bosom friends, though they quarreled once and by so doing created a sensation. It was at the famous Bradley Martin ball. In the afternoon Mrs. Sloane sent her hair dresser to Mrs. Mills' house, at the latter's request. Mrs. Mills detained the hair dresser so long that Mrs. Sloane could not get ready for the ball in time. She was late in reaching the Bradley Martins' and the quarrel with Mrs. Mills resulted. The following summer, however, their differences were settled, and the society queens thereafter took Ward McAllister's "400" and reduced the list of exclusives to "75."

MRS. HENRY T. SLOANE.

Mrs. Sloane, before her marriage, was Miss Jessie A. Robbins, the daughter of the junior partner in a great drug firm. She had no prestige of ancestry, but her beauty and her wealth, together with her rare ability, won her social distinction of the highest kind. Her husband, a modest, quiet man, is engaged with his brother in the wholesale carpet business. He has not shared his wife's fondness for society, but has spent money lavishly for her enjoyment. Her home has always been little short of a palace; her gowns are of the most expensive sort, and number 100 or more; her diamonds and other jewels are the most magnificent in the city, and her whole life has been surrounded by luxury.

MARK TWAIN'S PET CATS.

Pretty Mousers that Basked in an Atmosphere of Fame.

You might not suspect the great humorist, Mark Twain, of being fond of cats and dogs. Though it would seem that his mind must be thronged with queer fancies and imaginary characters, always getting into laughable and difficult situations, Mark Twain yet has room for thoughts of friends belonging to the animal kingdom. He once owned four of the prettiest and daintiest mousers that ever basked in an atmosphere of fame.

When Mark Twain lived at "Quarry Farm," a picturesque home high up on a southern New York mountain, overlooking many miles of landscape, he did most of his writing in a little eight-sided summer-house, which he called his "Pilot House," in memory of the days long ago when he was a pilot on the Mississippi River. * * * Cozily nestling in a great chair or snuggled comfortably upon an old lounge in this literary workshop, at almost any time of the day, could be found Mark Twain's pets. They were allowed there because they had the good manners to keep quiet while he worked. If they had presumed to jump upon the desk and put their little feet upon the manuscript or tip over the ink, they would not have been allowed to remain.

The cozy little Pilot House was very popular with these cats. It may have been because it was such a nice, sunny place, having windows upon all of its sides. Being upon the very tip-top of the great hill, it received the warmth of the first and last rays of the sun, of which these pets were quite as fond as was the humorist himself. Mark Twain knew that although cats are said to have nine lives, the time must come when even his pets and he would have to part, so one day he summoned Mr. Van Aken, the photographer. * * * A jealous dog did his best to prevent a photograph's being taken, but in vain; and two good views of them were obtained. Mark Twain himself thus sings the requiem of his pets:

"Hartford, Conn.

"I don't know as there is anything of continental or international interest to communicate about those cats. They had no history. They did not distinguish themselves in any way. They died early—on account of being overweighted with their names, it was thought—Sour Mash, Apollinaris, Zoroaster, Blatherskite—names given them, not in an unfriendly spirit, but merely to practice the children in large and difficult styles of pronunciation.

"It was a very happy idea—I mean for the children. Mark Twain."—St. Nicholas.

TO MEASURE A TREE.

Simple Rule for Estimating the Height of Standing Timber.

There are various methods employed in determining the height of a standing tree; of these the geometrical method may be recommended for its simplicity and sufficient accuracy. At some distance from the tree, where both top and base are readily visible, place a pole from four to five feet long (SF) perpendicularly in the ground; put in the ground another and longer pole (DE) at some distance from the first one, so that the poles and tree are situated in the same vertical plane. Sight from the top of the smaller pole the base and the top of the tree and note the points where your lines of vision intersect the longer pole; measure the distance between them; measure also the horizontal distance between the two poles. Multiply the first distance by the second and divide by the third, the result being the height of the tree.

For example, let the distance between the points where the lines of vision intersect be six feet, the distance between the pole and tree thirty feet, the distance between the poles two feet; then the height of the tree equals 6 multiplied by 30 divided by 2, giving 90 feet.

Preferred the Professions.

Says a writer in the Manchester Guardian:

"A lady of my acquaintance who is a proprietress in County Galway is in the habit of receiving her own rents. One day, when a tenant farmer had pleaded long and unsuccessfully for an abatement, he exclaimed as he handed over the money:

"'Well, my lady, all I can say is that if I had my time over again it's not a tenant farmer I'd be. I'd follow one of the learned professions.'

"The proprietress gently replied that even in the learned professions there were losses as well as gains, and, perhaps, he would have found professional life as precarious as farming.

"'Ah, my lady, but how can that be?' replied the son of St. Patrick. 'If you're a lawyer—win or lose, you're paid. If you're a doctor—kill or cure, you're paid. If you're a priest—heaven or hell, you're paid.'"

We are always hearing of the desirability of being "in it." There is nothing to it. To be "in it," means late lunches, late hours, a bad stomach, poor work next day, and a dissatisfied employer. To be "in it" long eventually means to be out of a job.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Medals of valor have been conferred on 100 Greek women who served as nurses in the war with Turkey. There wasn't anything to do but decorate the women, for the men furnished no excuse for such attention.

A monument costing $40,000 is to be erected over the grave of a simple Kentucky private killed in the San Juan fight. The soldier was only one of many wealthy men who were prepared to go to the front in any capacity.

Mr. Covert, American Consul at Lyons, France, declares that the eye glass and spectacle mountings of American manufacture are the best in the world, and that in certain lines of such goods this company may have a monopoly if it so desires.

A Vienna (Austria) paper declares that very few persons in that city read poems, and fewer still buy them; that puubilshers refuse to print them unless the authors pay all expenses, and that to ask for a volume of poetry in a book store is to be stared at as at a freak.

During the last twenty-five years the government has granted twenty-five inventors more than 100 patents each, the whole number being 4,894, the average 195. Thomas A. Edison stands at the head of the list. He has received 711 patents, Elihu Thomas 394, Francis H. Richards, 343, Edward Weston, 274, Charles E. Scrivener 248, Charles J. Vandepoele, 244, and George Westinghouse 217.

The Philadelphia Inquirer discussing the financial and industrial conditions of England in so far as they have relations with the United States, says: "If the situation in England is as Englishmen now describe it, if England is actually now living on the accumulated savings of hundreds of years' possession of the world's markets and carrying trade, the date when an increased immigration from Great Britain to the United States will begin to set in is bound to follow after."

The Chicago Times-Herald talks of the peaceful conquest of genius, enterprise and productive skill, and says:—"While our army and navy were closing in upon Santiago American manufactured goods were crowding competitors to the rear in markets that have heretofore been largely controlled by England, Germany and France. While engaged in a war for humanity the United States has made its greatest record in exports and its smallest record in imports and the largest importation of gold ever made in a calendar year."

It is estimated that there are 199,900,000 old style copper pennies somewhere. Nobody knows what has become of them, except that once in a while a single specimen turns up in change. A few years ago 4,500,000 bronze two-cent pieces were set afloat. Three million of them are still outstanding, but are never seen. A million of three-cent silver pieces are scattered over the United States, but it is very seldom one come across any of them. Of the 800,000 one-half-cent pieces not one has been returned to the government for coinage or is held by the treasury.

A Philadelphia dealer in birds, dogs and goldfish has a new species of the finny tribe imported from Japan, which swims with the head down in the water in nearly a perpendicular position. A woman stopped before the store the other day, and after viewing the new variety went into the store and ordered the dealer to make the fishes swim with their heads elevated. The dealer became angry over her interference with his business, and ordered her from the store. She informed the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals officials, and an officer was sent to investigate. The fish still swim perpendicularly.

The rapid progress made by Japan in its industries during the last few years was mainly due to the development which coal production has assumed there and which facilitated the starting of so many establishments and caused an increase of Japanese goods on the international markets. The fears expressed by British and European manufacturers in regard to the sudden competition of Japan are about to vanish now, when it is stated that coal production has ceased to be considerable in the Japanese Empire. It appears that there is not more than one million tons of coal a year now mined in the whole country, and that nine-tenths of this comes from the mines of Hokkaido and Kiensen, which are reported as nearly exhausted.

The original plan prepared by George Stephenson and his son for the first line of railway from Birmingham to London was sold the other day in the latter city. It bears the autograph signature of Robt. Stephenson, F. R. S., M. P., president of the Institute of Civil Engineers, who died in 1859, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. The plan, which is drawn to the scale of four inches to the mile, is all the more valuable seeing that the copies of it, which were duly deposited in the Private Bill Office at the time, were destroyed in the disastrous fire which borke out at the Palace of Westminster in 1834. The bills relating to this great undertaking were passed on May 6, 1833, during the reign of William IV., and the work was begun on June 1 in the following year.

Within the last three months a representative of an American sewing machine obtained an order from an English firm in Hong Kong for a considerable number of bicycles, made by the sewing machine company he represented. American exports of all kinds to Hong Kong are increasing remarkably. Formerly kerosene and California flour were almost the only articles shipped there from here. To-day ever steamer and ship from America brings cargoes of American goods. This is a direct result of the war with Spain. Goods are shipped to the United States forces in Manila by way of Hong Kong, which, as is generally known, is a mountainous island, hardly a mile away from the coast of China, and in the possession of the British. The imposing quantities of American goods passing through created curiosity first, then demand. The users of American bicycles in Hong Kong will be chiefly men in the employ of the British government and English merchants who live there.

Russia's progress during 1898 has been most remarkable. Internally, every kind of reform—industrial, educational, mercantile—has been pushed as rapidly as possible. The Siberian railway is advancing with rapid strides. The trans-Caspian railway, in its two branches, to the Chinese and Afghan borders, is approaching completion; river transportation is being improved; everywhere there is the outreaching of a vigorous people. The borders have been extended to include Manchuria, and at last there is a Russian ice-free port on the Pacific. Politically, she is stronger than ever. In the Turkish, Persian, Chinese and Korean governments her word is well nigh supreme, her only rival being England, while her entrance into Afghanistan by the waters of the Oxus revives the fears of Indian Russophobes.

It appears that one-fifth of the population of the United States is in school. That is to say, that in the schools, colleges and seminaries of all classes in the country there are 16,225,093 pupils and students. In the various colleges there are 217,764 students as against 88,864 in 1871. In 1872 the college students numbered only 590 to each 1,000,000 of population, whereas they now number 1,216 to each 1,000,000. These figures are both important and encouraging because they show that, although the requirements for admission to college are becoming more and more exacting every year, the ratio of students to population is rapidly increasing. To this great body of learners must be added the large class of persons engaged in post graduate studies, whose number is estimated to be twenty-five times greater now than it was thirty-five years ago.

A bulletin of the Treasury Bureau of Statistics shows that we consume nearly twice as much coffee as does all Europe, with nearly five times our population. We consume about one-half of all the coffee that is raised in the whole world. We annually send abroad $90,000,000 to pay for our raw coffee. Leaving out the children, our grown and half-grown population consumes on the average twenty pounds of coffee per capita per year. Moreover, the coffee-drinking habit is growing upon us. For while we took only 700,000,000 pounds in 1897, we took 800,000,000 in 1898. We never were great tea-drinkers, and the statistics show that we are dropping tea gradually yet by no means slowly—at the rate of about 20,0000,000 pounds a year. While other nations drink coffee once or at most twice a day, we as a nation have it three times a day, mixing the cream of the coffee with all manner of fruit and vegetable acids, to the great distress of our digestive apparatus. We are a brave nation, brave to rashness in our eating and drinking. In no respect does this reckless audacity shine more brilliantly than in our coffee-drinking.

Every war has its unknown, or scarcely known, heroes, whose names are inscribed on no tablets of bronze, but who waxed as valiant in fight or proved as alert in resource or as patient in suffering as any of the most noted commanders. Dewey, Sampson, Schley and Shafter have their reward, but few think of the humble heroes who sank into unmarked graves or in obscure corners dared tremendous risks. That fireman on the Castine, for example, was a hero if ever there was one, who, when during a run under forced draft in action, the loosening of a bolt at the farthest interior of a furnace, let the steam in on the fire, thus deadening it, ordered the draft turned off, and fresh coal thrown on the fire. When the white fires were banked, he climbed in over the wet coal, treading on a plank, till he reached the place where the steam was rushing in, and tightened the bolt, and remedied the trouble. For three minutes he remained in the furnace, when he was pulled out by his shipmates, and the gunboat resumed her course through the waters, at the former high rate of speed, as though nothing happened. That man deserves a medal if any sailor does.

A Difficult Surgical Operation.

An operation was performed recently upon Frank Hall, aged fifty-eight years, residing at Greenfield, Ohio, at the Good Samaritan Hospital, which resulted in saving the latter's life. Hall entered the hospital suffering from a tumor situated at the junction of the clavicle and the breastbone, on the right side. The mass had pushed itself outward from beneath the breast bone and collar bone, absorbing those portions of the latter bone which resisted its progress and pulsated with each beat of the heart causing a soft hissing sound at the same time.

It took but one glance of the surgeon's eye to inform him that he was dealing with that dangerous and dreaded condition known as aneurism, the latter being situated, as stated above, about three inches from the heart and at the junction of the innominated and its two branches, the common carotid and the subclavian, three vessels the rupture of either of which meant instant death. The operation, consisting of ligating the carotid and subclavian arteries beyond the dilated blood sac, although hazardous in the extreme, was finally decided upon, rather than allow the patient to die by rupture of the sac and bleeding to death. The patient being cognizant of the fact, submitted to the operation. After being anaesthetized an incision was made, extending from near the collar bone to about three inches above it and two inches external to Adam's apple. The superficial and deep tissues being divided, the common carotid was hooked up and securely tied and the wound closed. Another incision about three inches long and two inches deep, just above and parallel with the collar bone, brought the operator to the subclavian vessel, which was also secured and tied tightly. The patient rallied from the operation and is now a well man.

Since 1875 Hamburg, Germany, has added to its population twice as many persons as Boston.

It Expressed It.

The following is conclusive proof that thought existed before grammars were invented:

A little tot of a boy hardly old enough to lisp his numbers ran away from home one day. For hours and hours his mother searched the neighborhood over for him, but all to no avail. His father came home at 5 o'clock and the search was resumed. "Oh, he'll come home in time," said the man to cheer his wife.

And he was right.

About 7 by the big clock on the mantelpiece Tommy shambled into the room.

Without thinking of reproving him his mother flew to him and clasped him in her arms and kissed him. Then she put him down and his father called him to his side.

"Tommy," he said, "where have you been?"

The little fellow looked down, poked at the seam in the carpet with his toe, hesitated, and then, raising his eyes, replied: "Been a-fishin'."

"But where are the fish?" asked the parent.

The youngster thought a minute and then answered, "They unbited 'n div." —Detroit Free Press.

Queer Bequest of a Gambler.

A citizen of Kharkoff, Russia, recently purchased a statue of Apollo Belvidere, which one of his children soon afterward overturned and broke. Out of its hollow interior rolled a little bundle, which, on being opened, was found to contain Russian bank notes to the value of 3,000 rubles, together with a declaration of one Chevalier Irionun Prokerhoff, to the effect that the money contained in the handkerchief was the proceeds of his gambling transactions, and was designed to build a church. The slip bore a date in the year 1840. It is supposed, therefore, that the owner died suddenly, and thus was unable to carry out his pious design.

Mohammedans and the Koran.

Perhaps it is not generally known that Mohammedans never use printed Korans, because in doubt as to the ingredients entering into the composition of the printing ink. They are afraid of being defiled by taking into their hands a copy of the sacred book that may have been produced with the ink in which pig's fat, instead of linseed oil, has formed one of the component parts. They therefore confine themselves to reading hand-written reproductions of the prophet's work, which are naturally very expensive.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

What does it do?

It causes the oil glands in the skin to become more active, making the hair soft and glossy, precisely as nature intended.

It cleanses the scalp from dandruff and thus removes one of the great causes of baldness.

It makes a better circulation in the scalp and stops the hair from coming out.

It Prevents and It Cures Baldness

Ayer's Hair Vigor will surely make hair grow on bald heads, provided only there is any life remaining in the hair bulbs.

It restores color to gray or white hair. It does not do this in a moment, as will a hair dye; but in a short time the gray color of age gradually disappears and the darker color of youth takes its place.

Would you like a copy of our book on the Hair and Scalp? It is free.

If you do not obtain all the benefits you expected from the use of the Vigor write the Doctor about it.

Was Equal to the Occasion.

A story is told of a colored preacher who was holding a meeting in a large tobacco barn in a rural district in Kentucky. An empty tobacco hogshead was impressed into service as an elevation upon which to stand while delivering his discourse. Throwing his arms into the air above his head, and elevating one foot, he exclaimed: "De righteous shall rise and de wicked shall fall!" At the word "fall" he brought his foot down vehemently upon the head of the hogshead and like a flash it gave way and he dropped out of sight, being short of stature. Amid the precipitated uproar he reached up and grasped the chime of the barrel and drew himself into view, shouting, "Bress God, dey shall rise again!"—Boston Transcript.

John Linen and James Donahue, residing near Smyrna, were held up the other night at 11 o'clock while hitching their horse to a buggy in Greensburg to drive home by a man whom they recognized as Robert Manford, residing near Harris City. Donahue was told by the robber to throw up his hands, and at the same time a revolver was thrust into his face, and in complying with the request one hand struck the revolver and knocked it to the ground and the other hand struck a knife held in the robber's hand. Linen, who was on the opposite side of the horse, halloed for help and frightened the man away.

PERIODS OF PAIN.

Menstruation, the balance wheel of woman's life, is also the bane of existence to many because it means a time of great suffering.

While no woman is entirely free from periodical pain, it does not seem to have been nature's plan that women otherwise healthy should suffer so severely. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the most thorough female regulator known to medical science. It relieves the condition that produces so much discomfort and robs menstruation of its terrors. Here is proof:

DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—How can I thank you enough for what you have done for me? When I wrote to you I was suffering untold pain at time of menstruation; was nervous, had headache all the time, no appetite, that tired feeling, and did not care for anything. I have taken three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, one of Blood Purifier, two boxes of Liver Pills, and to-day I am a well person. I would like to have those who suffer know that I am one of the many who have been cured of female complaints by your wonderful medicine and advice.—MISS JENNIE R. MILES, Leon, Wis.

If you are suffering in this way, write as Miss Miles did to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for the advice which she offers free of charge to all women.

An Ancient Almanac.

The most valuable almanac ever made is that now in the British museum, which is priceless. It is believed to be at least 3,000 years old. The days are written in red ink on papyrus, in columns, and under each is a figure, followed by three characters signifying the probable state of the weather for that day. The most elaborate almanac in the world is that issued by the Chinese government in twelve thick volumes, which gives full information as to lucky times and places for performing the acts of every-day life, which is considered an essential of success by every good Chinaman. The Nautical Almanac costs the British nation £3,942 a year. At its office, No. 3 Verulam buildings, Gray's Inn, London, the superintendent, A. M. W. Downing, doctor of science and fellow of the Royal Society, receives £600. Edward Roberts, fellow of the royal astronomical and statistical societies, the chief assistant, receives £450, and there are eleven other assistants, several of whom are graduates of universities or members of learned societies, who are paid from £100 to £300 each. The most curious calendar at present in use is that of the natives of Central America, where the months are only twenty days, and these are named after animals. Among most modern European ones the "Almanac de Gotha" has been the longest in continuous circulation—upward of 135 years.—Boston Transcript.

A Mean Man.

The tea things had been cleared away and the head of the establishment was trying to read the evening paper while his better half busied herself with some fancy work, and at the same time endeavored to interest him in the gossip of the neighborhood.

"Maria," said he, glancing up from his paper, "did you ever hear the story of precious gems?"

"Why, no," she replied, "what is it?"

"It's an old-time legend that my grandmother told me when I was a boy," he continued, "about a woman from whose lips there fell either a diamond or a ruby every time she spoke a word."

"Well, go on," she said.

"That's all there is of it, Maria," he replied. "But I was just thinking if such things happened nowadays I'd open a jewelry store the first thing in the morning."

And then for thirteen consecutive minutes silence reigned supreme.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Chicago Furniture House Has Furnished Nearly a Million Homes.

To be the largest furniture house in the world is a distinction which the John M. Smyth Company, 150 to 166 West Madison street, Chicago, enjoys. An idea of the magnitude of the establishment may be gained from the fact that the building contains seven and one-half acres of floor space and that during its third of a century of business it has furnished nearly three-quarters of a million homes, or more than the entire population of some States. One of the business principles of the firm is if goods are not as represented they may be returned and the money will be refunded. The firm issues a large, beautifully illustrated catalogue of household goods which are retailed at wholesale prices. It will be sent free on application.

Many Miles of Soldiers.

A German military critic has been adding up the grand total of the Continental armies, and, after noting that we can form only a vague idea of what is meant by tens of millions, he tries to bring home to his readers in another way the colossal growth of modern armaments. If, he says, we could have all the armies of the Continent on a war footing and drawn up in one big, long procession, with their guns, and ammunition, and baggage wagons, the column would be rather more than 24,000 miles long, and, marching day and night, it would take nearly a year to pass a given point.—Newcastle Chronicle.

SISTERS OF ST. FRANCIS

Tell the People of Their Favorite Remedy for La Grippe.

La grippe is everywhere. Everybody either has it or knows someone else who has it. All charity workers and humanitarians find the prevalence of la grippe very disastrous to their work. The Sisters of St. Francis have a large number of charity subjects under their charge. These good sisters find grippe to be a serious problem. Their favorite remedy is Pe-ru-na. Dr. Hartman recently received the following letter from them:

SISTERS OF ST. FRANCIS.

ST. VINCENT'S ORPHAN ASYLUM, EAST MAIN ST., COR. ROSE AVE., Columbus, Ohio.

Dr. S. B. Hartman: "Some years ago a friend of our institution recommended to us Dr. Hartman's 'Pe-ru-na' as an excellent remedy for la grippe, of which we then had several cases which threatened to be of a serious character.

"We began to use it and experienced such wonderful results that since then Pe-ru-na has become our favorite medicine for la grippe, catarrh, coughs, colds and bronchitis.

thousands of them, are suffering from lingering diseases induced by life in poisonous southern camps, the result of changes of climate, or of imperfect nutrition caused by improper and badly cooked food. Sleeping on the ground has doubtless developed rheumatism in hundreds who were predisposed to the disease. In such cases the Boys of '98 may take a lesson from the experience of the Heroes of the Civil War.

Hundreds of the Boys of '63 have testified to the efficacy of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People in driving out malaria, rheumatism and other diseases contracted during their days of hardship and privation in the army. These pills are the best tonic in the world.

Asa Robinson, of Mt. Sterling, Ill., is a veteran of the Civil war, having served in the 83rd Pennsylvania Volunteers. He went to the war a vigorous farmer's boy and came back broken in health, a victim of sciatic rheumatism. Most of the time he was unfitted for manual labor of any kind, and his sufferings were at all times intense. He says: "Nothing seemed to give me permanent relief until three years ago, when my attention was called to some of the wonderful cures effected by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I had not taken more than half a box when I noticed an improvement in my condition, and I keep on improving steadily. To them I owe my restoration to health. They are a grand remedy."—*Mt. MOTHER AND 3 DAUGHTERS CURED BY "5 DROPS."

SWANSON RHEUMATIC CURE CO., CHICAGO, July 25, '98.

I think "5 DROPS" is the best medicine in the world; it has done me so much good. Before using "5 DROPS" I could hardly lie in bed long enough to go to sleep. I would have to get up and walk around, or sit up in bed. I don't know what was the matter with me, but I was suffering all through me, and my body was so tender that part of the time I could hardly lie on the softest bed. As it has benefited me so much I have recommended it to my neighbors. Three of my daughters have sent to you for "5 DROPS;" also two of my lady friends. One of my daughters was suffering terribly with her stomach, and was all bloated up until she weighed 174 pounds, but after she took "5 DROPS" her weight came down to 146 pounds—her normal weight—and she is all right again. She thinks there never was such medicine. I myself think it is splendid.

MRS. M. A. MATTINGLY, Collbran, Col.

Mr. Ira Sargent, Dunbar (Neb.), also writes under date of July 25, '98, that he is cured of Rheumatism, Stomach Trouble and Catarrh. "I want to write you in regard to my case of STOMACH TROUBLE and RHEUMATISM. I commenced one year ago to take '5 DROPS,' and I can tell you to-day that though I am 75 YEARS OLD and past, I feel like a new person. I don't want to be without '5 DROPS.' '5 DROPS' has the praise of being the best medicine on the market. It has cured a bad case of CATARRH here, and has another almost cured. Please accept my thanks for the favors I have received at your hands. IRA SARGENT."

Advice to Consumptives

There are three great remedies that every person with weak lungs, or with consumption itself, should understand. These remedies will cure about every case in its first stages; and many of those more advanced. It is only the most advanced that are hopeless. Even these are wonderfully relieved and life itself greatly prolonged.

What are these remedies? Fresh air, proper food and Scott's Emulsion of Cod-Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. Be afraid of draughts but not of fresh air. Eat nutritious food and drink plenty of milk. Do not forget that Scott's Emulsion is the oldest, the most thoroughly tested and the highest endorsed of all remedies for weak throats, weak lungs and consumption in all its stages.

50c. and $1.00; all druggists.

From Manila.

(Orrville, Ohio, Crescent.)

Through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Fiscus, we are permitted to make the following extract from a letter from C. E. Ammann, their son, who is a member of Co. M. 1st Washington Infantry, U. S. V. The letter is dated Manila, November 27, 1898, and was received in Orville, January 10, 1899; "We are on a transport in Manila Bay. We left Honolulu on Monday, November the 7th, and reached here yesterday morning, the 26th. We sighted nothing from Honolulu till we struck the islands. It was a long trip, and oh, the storms we struck; the ship did everything but turn clear over. I never got sick, but I don't believe there were twenty-five on the boat but what fed the fish. I stood the tripfinely and all the way as good as when on land. We learn that we are to be sent about 200 miles on down, where several thousand insurgents and Spanish are fighting. Then again, this morning I heard we were going in barracks and that the California boys and regulars are going down there. I am pretty sure we will be right in Manila, in buildings. Several of the boys were out to see us yesterday, and all seem to be satisfied, and they look fine.

They wear white suits and caps and present a handsome appearance. They are all quartered in barracks. Yesterday the sun was out in full blast, but it was not so hot as I have seen it in Orville. To-dry it is cloudy and the weather is very comfortable. Manila bay is three times larger than San Francisco harbor, with mountainous land all around. There are over forty sailing ships here now and all of Dewy's war vessels and the Senator, Valencia, Arizona and Ohio. One German war ship, the one Dewey stopped, is here. We came down past Cavite and there is where the Spanish vessels are sunk, and most of Dewey's ships are stationed there. Cavite is just across one corner of the bay, from us, about five miles from here. The natives here look just like those at Honolulu. The Indiana and Zealandia were at Honolulu when we left there, but are not around here yet. The Philippine people think the Americans are all right. One man died on the Valencia and two on the Arizona while on the trip, but we pulled through without any deaths, and only one very sick. We had fair eating. Over a ton of meat spoiled for us and was thrown overboard. We saw eight sharks go for it.

The natives were out yesterday selling fruit and papers. The mail will leave Thursday or I would wait until I have seen the city before mailing this letter.

Our Thanksgiving dinner was plum duff. I don't know whether you have ever ate it or not but it was very good. There was a commissary on board and we could buy anything we wanted. I had all the canned fruit I wanted.

Note by editor. (According to a memorandum of the writer the vessel left San Francisco October 28th and arrived at Manila, November 26th, a period of 26 days. In crossing the 180th meridian they lost one days' reckoning. The distance from San Francisco to Manila, according to the daily record, is 6,865 knots, the average being 264 knots per day.)

Samples Free.

The great number of newspapers, magazines, etc., that are now being published have made it very hard for the readers to decide just what one they wish to subscribe for. The American Subscription Agency, of Indianapolis, Ind., have compiled a list of 100 papers that they offer to send a sample copy of each to any address upon receipt of 10 cents to pay for mailing. They do this so that you may see and read a copy of each paper before subscribing. If you decide to subscribe to any of their papers to the amount of $1 they offer to deduct the 10 cents sent from the subscribtion. Send 10 cents to the American Subscription Agency, 653 Arch St., Indianapolis, Ind., and you will receive one hundred papers. j23

Comes from Dr. D. B. Cargile, of Washita, I. T. He writes: "Four bottles of Electric Bitters has cured Mrs. Brewer of scrofula, which had caused her great suffering for years. This shows what thousands have proved—that Electric Bitters is the best blood purifier known. It's the supreme remedy for eczema, tetter, salt rheum, ulcers boils and running sores. Lip Cut.

Edmund Richards met with quite a severe accident yesterday afternoon. He and some other little boys of about his age were coming home from school, and as usual with such lads, were playing as they came along. They had an old oyster can and were using it to play "Shinny," when one of them struck it a hard blow, and it flew against Edmund's face striking him on the upper lip, the ragged edge cutting a gash clear through the lip. It was no one's fault as far as we know for boys of that age will play even if their games are a little dangerous. It will take it some time to heal properly.

Magnet Does Heavy Drawing.

A steel needle which had been made a powerful magnet by a heavy electric current gave one strong pull and drew to it a speck of steel, which, imbedded in the eye of Gus Feierstein, in this city, threatened to make him blind. The operation was performed at the eye and ear infirmary and aroused the interest of oculists generally.

Before the magnet was brought into play the exact location of the troublesome speck was located by an X-ray photograph. A slight incision was made into which the point of the instrument was placed. Then as the current was turned on the piece of steel was drawn from its lodging place.

COURT NEWS.

Friday's Daily.

Work in the Stamets case is going on today, with D. R. Best on the bench. It is a case to declare a deed void, and is brought by Fitch, guardian of Jacob Stamets against Maria Stamets Benj. Michener and Zenia Stamets. Moody and Hoffman are attorneys for Fitch, Roby and Pomeroy are for the defendants. The contestis to show, whether Jacob Stamets is of sound mind Quite a number have testified some of whom gave items of conversation and other incidents showing his mental condition. Mr. Brosy said that he has not been at church as regularly lately as formerly. But when he comes or when they converse, he seems interested in religious things. At one time, he asked Mr. Brosy if the church was not about gone down to nothing. Mr. Brosy replied, that on the contrary, the church was prospering highly. This seemed to change Stamets' views a good deal and in a minute or two he seemed so pleased, that he asked, "We will soon take the whole town, wont we?" J. E Rose testified that Stamets had often come to him and talked of his affairs in a way that impressed him that Stamets was unsound.

OTHER CASES.

Among other work not heretofore reported we find:

John E. Miller vs Wm. F. Miller, surety of the peace, was dismissed by plaintiff.

Darius Haag vs Joe Rectenwald was dismissed by agreement.

M. Kiplinger vs Shull, a Mechanic's lien. Lien was declared good and sale of property ordered to satisfy the claim.

Solomon Lower has a case against the town of Butler on account. Shuman and Roby are attorneys for plaintiff and Rose and Brink for defendant.

The partition case of Barve vs Livergood came up. John Boyd, Levi Barnhart and Fred Keller were appointed commissioners to divide the property. Their report was accepted and each allowed $2 and Attorney Pomeroy was allowed $10 for services in the matter, each side to pay one half of these fees.

Judge Lowry of Fort Wayne and Judge Powers of Angola are here today, being attorneys for Clayton Mallory in a case against Frick and Plum to quiet title to a piece of land. It is tried this afternoon before Judge Hartman, who is able now to be up and at work, after a day's illness. The case is finished and title quieted.

Parsnip Complexion.

It does not require an expert to detect the sufferer from kidney trouble. The hollow cheeks, the sunken eyes, the dark, puffy circles under the eyes, the sallow parsnip colored complexion indicates it.

A physician would ask if you had rheumatism, a dull pain or ache in the back or over the hips, stomach trouble, desire to urinate often, or a burning or scalding in passing it; if after passing there is an unsatisfied feeling as if it must be at once repeated, or if the urine has a brick dust deposit or strong odor.

When these symptoms are present, no time should be lost in removing the cause.

Delay may lead to gravel, catarrh of the bladder, inflamation, causing stoppage, and sometimes requiring the drawing of the urine with instruments, or may run into Bright's Disease, the most dangerous stage of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great discovery of the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, is a positive remedy for such diseases. Its reputation is world-wide and it is so easy to get at any drug store that no one need suffer any length of time for want of it.

However, if you prefer to first test its wonderful merits, mention The Auburn Courier and write to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y. for a sample bottle and book telling all about it, both sent absolutely free by mail.

Old Pumpernickle.

The worst old Pumpernickle we have seen for many years, struck town this foremoon, having counted ties down the Jackson road just ahead of the forenoon train. He was nearly hidden from his shoulders to his knees, by a lot of small bundles, done up in a queer way and rather neatly tied. They surrounded him like a monster flounce, and shook and flopped as he walkend slowly down the street. As he neared the business houses on 7th-st., he opened up business for himself. With his cane, that so far he had used merely to help him in walking, he stepped into the gutter and began spearing "snipes" with all the ardor of a fisherman. We presume his numerous sacks are filled with these "snipes," and that they will soon return to Auburn in the filling of the dainty cigarettes our young men so greatly enjoy.

New Kind of Corn.

W. A. Custer of Butler township has left at this office a peculiar ear of corn. It is not a large one or a long one, but a perfect one. It is from seed sent him from California and is of the yellow variety, very solid and sound, with deep kernels and small cob. The grains are filled clear around the point and are good and solid there also. It looks as if it would be a desirable kind to raise. He got 5 bushels from a half a pint of seed which certainly shows it is a good yielder. It ripens at least ten days earlier than the Lawton which is the earliest kind we have about here. Mr. Custer is anxious to see others try it. We suppose they can get this seed by calling on him.

A Fine Piece of Color Work

An experienced art critic gives it as his opinion that there will be no handsomer piece of color work issued this year than Hood's Sarsaparilla Calendar for 1899. It is not only useful, but artistic and beautiful, and up to date The charming "American Girl" whose beautiful face appears with a delicately painted flag in the background, makes a pleasing feature which anyone will be pleased to have before him the whole of 1899. We suppose druggists will have this Calendar, or a copy may be obtained by sending 6 cents to C. I. Hood Co., Lowell, Mass.

THE IMMORTAL "J.N."

Real History of This Remarkable Man, Now First Given.

People will recognize it as a True Picture. So Will Newspaper Men and Hotel Men.

HIS EARLY HISTORY

Jacob Newman Freeman was born in Tiffin, O., the eldest son of a clergyman. At 4 years of age he read the Bible with ease, and at 6 his proud father always had him read the scripture lesson and text. He acquired while in his teens a speaking acquaintance with thirteen languages. His memory was remarkable, a brief glance at a page being sufficient usually to impress it verbatim upon his mind.

He went to California durin the gold craze and established a wagon train over the mountains. He prospered, and in two years was worth $50,000. He took a tramp from the range and made him partner in the enterprise and went east to purchase supplies. On his return he found his partner had closed up the business and vanished with the proceeds.

Free returned East and began studying law. He did not stay long on the threshold, his oratorical abilities securing him a speedy admittance. Fame and abundant practice were his, and wealth was only a question of time when the collapse came

About 1853, he was defending a man on charge of murder at Cincinnati, The case was desperate, but his professional faith in the innocence of his client and his matchless eloquence secured a verdict of "not guilty."

Free's appeal for mercy won the hearts of Judge, jury, spectators, and likewise of the prisoner. After the trial Free went to his residence to recuperate his strength, which had suffered from the severe draft of a month's night and day work. The released prisoner followed him there and confessed his guilt. Free rushed back to the courthouse and dashed into the courtroom, where bench and bar were intent upon another case, and shrieked "Your Honor——"

An attack of applexy ended the sentence, which was the last Free ever uttered in court. The shattering of his belief in the murderer he had defended with so much zeal and the nervous strain together proved too great a wrench to his finely organized mind. He recovered his health in a few days, but his unclouded intellect never.

METAMORPHOSIS "J. N."

Free disappeared shortly afterwards. When next heard from he was no more Jacob Tewman Free, successful practitioner and admired orator, but "J. N." lecturer on "Pressure," an unknown force with which he indentified himself and claimed to control. His fame traveled faster than the railway and large audiences of eager listeners awaited him wherever he went. His renown was at its height when the civil war diverted attention from all other subjects.

Ever since he ceased practicing law "J. N." has been supervising the weather, "lifting the pressure" from the United States, and, Atlas-like, standing between his native country and mysterious calamities which he was sure would overwhelm millions with undreampt of evils if he did not intervene, He also speedily acquired fame by his ability to separate the rural editor from his exchanges, live without paying board bills, and ride without paying railroad fare. Owing to his duties as superintendent of "pressure" he did not think it incumbent upon him to pay bills of any kind, and there are few who can boast of ever collecting one from him. He has been a bird of passage, rarely staying more than a few days in the same town. He has visited every State in the Union and nearly every town of more than village proportions.

What "pressure" is, why he was able to secure control over it he never undertook to explain, or at least never succeeded in making anybody fully share his views. He was a ready lecturer and one gathered from his fervid remarks that "pressure" is savage and vindictive and only his martyrdom has prevented it from hurling the universe back into chaos.

LIFE PASSES ON RAILROADS.

There is said to be hardly an important railroad in the country on which he has not been as welcome to ride as the president. How he secured his assortment of passes is a mystery but he was a railway attorney in the "fifties," and that may account for it in part. Over one hundred slips of paper reading "Good for J. N. and one over all lines for life" are in his possession, and they have never failed to be honored.

"J. N's" appearance in a rural newspaper caused more commotion than a life-long subscriber with a dark brown grievance. When he entered the front door the editor would vanish, if he was wise, by the rear entrance, leaving the philosopher to multiplate the dies and exchanges and annoy the "devil." He always demanded notice of his lectures, and when his requests were not complied with he would return and scare the office silly with threats to resign his position as superintendent of "Pressure," or, at least, to let it visit its wrath upon the offender. But this did not prevent him from numbering newspaper men among his warmest friends.

Next to paying railroad fare, "J. N" entertained the most hearty antipathy to hotel bills. He had no intention of paying them, and saw no reason why he should be annoyed with the discussion. He never failed to register at the best hotel in the town.

Long ago, when his fame was not firmly established, he visited St. Louis, and naturally made his way to the Southern. When he was taking leave, the manager said: "Well, 'J. N,' you have been a welcome visitor, and have afforded both profit and pleasure to us all. Seeing it is you, I will knock off half your bill."

"I never allow anybody to be more magnanimous than I," replied "J. N.," who always swore he had a copyright on the story, "so I'll knock off the other half"—and he did. His generosity soon became proverbial among hotelkeepers, and it was marvelous how quickly they fell in with his ways.

"J. N." has been a splendid specimen of physical manhood. He is six feet tall, and as straight as an arrow is supposed to be. His features mark him anywhere as distinguished, his massive brow, thin, aquiline nose, brilliant, expressive eyes, and heavy, overhanging brows giving him a regal mien. He was at one time regarded as the handsomest man in Ohio.

The Civil war deeply affected the wandering philosopher. It offended his doctrine of peace and love, and he started South to bring it to an end. He penetrated the confederate lines, and had nearly accomplished his purpose of interviewing Jefferson Davis and entreating him to surrender when he was unceremoniously bundled North.

"They gave me thirty minutes in which to leave," he used to say, "and I have twenty-nine and a half of 'em coming to me."

He was personally acquainted with Abraham Lincoln, and never failed to receive considerate and kind treatment from the President. His memory of names and faces is of the proverbial kind, as he rarely forgets either There are those who believe he knows more people than any other living man.

He is about 72 years old, but has been called "J. N." for about 45 years.

Are You Constipated?

You may not know it or at least fail to realize it, but Constipation is the greatest enemy to mankind. This condition unless corrected will bring on Indigestion and Dyspepsia. This condition places the system in such shape that if you are exposed to any one of the different kind of fevers you are sure to be affected thereby. In this condition a large amount of poisonous matter is retained in the system and you are therefore not in a condition to throw off disease. A cold cannot be eradicated when the system is clogged. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin gives perfect relief for this trouble. Try a 10c bottle just once; you will be convinced. Also in 50c and $1.00 sizes of Davenport.

Maine Anniversary.

The Indianapolis Sun has a dispatch from Havana which says:

Feb. 15th, the anniversary of the destruction of the Maine, will be properly observed in this city. A full program of events has not been definitely decided upon, but it is known that the graves of the Maine martyrs will be decorated, flags will fly at half mast, one over the wreck of the Maine; Capt. Sigsbee will deliver an address, Gen Lee will march at the head of the parade, and high mass will be sung in the cathedral. The American women in Havana are arranging the details of the program.

The Latest in Collars.

A newly designed collar acts as its own tie-holder, the tie being inserted in slots at the ends of the collar, just back of the buttonholes, with a passage under the edge of the collar from one end to the other, which keeps the tie out of sight at the back.

The Deepest Shaft.

The deepest shaft in Colorado is that of the Geyser mine, at Silver Cliff, which penetrates the rock to a depth of 2,400 feet. But even that is a shallow puncture beside the one which goes down into the depths of the Comstock Lode, again active and productive. In that wonderful treasure house from which more than five hundred millions in value have been taken out, the new explorations are expected to reach a depth of 6,000 feet.

Legislative Notes.

(Kendallville Sun.)

The house judiciary committee heard the woman's rights question argued Tuesday afternoon. A favorable report will be given, but the resolution can not pass the legislature, as another resolution to amend the constitution is pending.

The house voted to build high schools in the townships for the education of the country youth.

A bill to exempt mortgaged property was passed, as was also the pharmacy bill.

Newby's bill requiring telegraphers to be licensed, and another bill to license barbers, were killed.

The bills against the sale of adulterated drugs or foods, of candies, and of providing for a system of registration of vital statistics, were favorably reported upon by the committee of public health.

A new divorce bill was introduced in both branches of the legislature Monday. It was presented through the influence of S. E Nicholson of Kokomo, chairman of the citizens' committee representing the allied churches of the state. It simply provides that a divorced person shall not re-marry within two years after being divorced. The committee decided that it would be impossible to get through a more radical bill.

The new anti-Roby race track bill was also introdued in each house. It confers on the attorney-general only the authority to bring injunction suits without giving bond. Attorney General Taylor says it will be stringent enough. The house, which defeated the bill last week, will doubtless pass this one.

A Kankakee drainage bill was introduced by Knotts, Wednesday. It provides for a drainage district and for three commissioners, unless more than three counties are in the district; then there shall be a commissioner for each county. The property in the district is to be assessed in accord with the benefits, just as in the case of sewer assessments. Mr. Knotts says that owners of the Kankakee valley land favor the bill, He estimates that the river can be straightened and the marshes drained at an assessment on an average of $1 an acre. About 720 000 acres are included in the Kankakee marshes. The committee on swamp lands may visit the Kankakee.

The Cuban Gold Myth.

If we listen to the voice of the charmer, or go to the books on Cuba for our information, we shall find the mineral resources of this island include gold, silver, mercury, lead, antimony, copper, chrome, iron, manganese, pitch, bitumen, and even coal; but when we come to look for practical metallic results commensurate with these various mineral resources we shall be disappointed.

The gold fiction is the most time-honored, for the original Spanish settlers expected to find rich gold mines in Cuba. According to their historians, "much gold was taken from this island at the beginning of the conquest," but it seems probable that most of this was taken from the chiefs or caciques of the Indians and very little from the ground. "El Viagero Universal," Madrid, 1797, says—"some of this metal (gold) is still found in Holguin. Whenever the existence of gold in Cuba is discussed this "mine" at Holguin is brought forward. It is true that some work has been done at this point and a little gold has been extracted, but there has never any systematic exploration, and there is nothing there which may be dignified with the name of a mine. Jennings S. Cox, Jr., in The engineering Magazine for February.

Railway Rates in Porto Rico.

A short line is in operation between Yauco and Ponce, a distance of 22 miles with two stations on the line at Guayanilla and Tallabon. This railroad has an average annual income of $2,760 per mile, but it should be noted that, because of the high freight rates, $2.25 per ton for a 22-mile haul, or ten cents per ton-mile, a great part of the freight carrying between Yauco and Ponce is performed by oxcarts, in successful competition with the railroad. The freight rates of the ox-carts are not much lower than those of the railway, and the speed about the same. Besides this excessive charge, the railway does not offer the facilities which should obtain in this district, as it does not reach to the harbor of Ponce, where the great bulk of business is done. Bulk must be broken and the goods transferred Antonio Mattei Lluveras, in The Engineering Magazine for February.

Tersely Told Telegraph Tales in Brief Paragraphs—Many Casualties —A Few Crimes—Some Fires—Political and Religious News.

KILLED AND EATEN.

The Horrible Fate of Shipwrecked Sailors.

A special from Vancouver, B. C., says: After escaping death by drowning, eleven of the crew of the ship Manbare were captured and eaten by cannibals of New Guinea. The Manbare was bound for Sidney, Australia, when it was caught in the terrible gale of December. Near Cape Nelson it began to sink. The crew, eighteen all told, left the vessel in two boats and soon became separated. One boat containing twelve men was finally thrown ashore ten miles from the cape. The sailors were seized by natives from the interior and hurried off to the village of the chief. One man, James Greene, escaped. The sailors were stripped and bound and killed, one each day. A wild orgy was participated in by at least a hundred savages who had gathered for the feast. In most cases the men were beheaded, their heads being stuck on poles and paraded before the men who were to suffer the same fate. Greene was rescued by a steamer after tramping without food a day and a night to reach the coast. The scenes of horror he had witnessed turned his hair snowy white.

A Fortune Divided.

Adam S. Ellis, one of the wealthiest citizens of Greene County, Ohio, died recently and left a will by which he bequeathed his entire estate of $300,000 to his nephew, Volcha Weaver. Two of Mr. Weaver's sisters were cut off entirely by the will, but, being unwilling to accept the entire fortune, he has just transferred them the handsome some of $60,000, to be divided equally between them. The final settlement was made a few days ago when the will was pronounced valid in the Court of Common Pleas.

A Terrible Accident.

At Mt. Olive, Ill., by a coal oil explosion Peter Novak's 6-year-old boy and 4-months-old baby were roasted to death. Mrs. Novak and her daughter were fatally burned about the face and body. The little girl's eyes were destroyed. Novak is seriously burned about the arms and head. Two boarders who hastened to the assistance of the Novaks were slightly scorched. The accident was caused by pouring oil upon supposed dead coal in a heating stove.

Michigan Mines Reopening.

A special from Crystal Falls, Mich., says: The Claire iron mine, which recently passed into the possession of Ogleby Norton, the well-known iron ore man of Cleveland, is to be started up again. It is understood that large preparations have been made. The Claire joins the Youngstown mine, owned by the Federal Steel Company, and it is believed this mine will also start up. The two mines will employ 500 men.

Without Warning.

Former Attorney General Augustus H. Garland was stricken with apoplexy while addressing the United States Supreme Court at 12:15 o'clock Thursday afternoon and died within ten minutes. The occurrence came with startling and tragic unexpectedness, changing the usual calm and dignity of the court into temporary confusion, while the dying man was carried from the chamber in a futile effort to alleviate his condition.

Petitions from Indiana.

Senator Fairbanks presented in the Senate eighty-six petitions from different parties in Indiana, praying for the passage of the Ellis bill, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in military canteens, soldiers' homes and public buildings. Representatives Steel, Johnson and Overstreet presented a number of similar petitions in the House.

Cashier Confesses.

W. H. Penland, cashier of the defunct First National Bank of Asheville, N. C., who was indicted, together with W. E. Breeze, President, and J. E. Dickerson, one of the directors, for embezzlement, has made a full confession. His trial is set for February 15. The bank closed July 21. It is thought the other two indicted persons may confess.

Offer $5,000 Reward.

The New York Evening Journal offers $5,000 reward for a clue or information which will lead to the arrest and conviction of the poisoner of Mrs. Kate Adams and H. C. Barnett. The Journal says the police believe a certain man guilty, but he is so hedged about with legal ability and wealth that positive evidence cannot be secured.

Hero's Widow Pensioned.

The Pension Bureau has granted a pension of $12 a month to the widow of Chief Yeoman George H. Ellis, the only man in our navy killed at Santiago, in the annihilation of Cervera's fleet.

Eagan Must Go.

A special to the Chicago Times-Herald from Washington says: "Dismissal from the military service of the United States, without any recommendation for clemency, is the verdict passed by the court martial upon Commissary General Eagan."

Two Killed by a Train.

A train on the Big Four Road, while running forty miles an hour, instantly killed Patrick Grady, and Mrs. Anna Clague, his sister, near Cleveland, Ohio. They were walking on the track.

Two Swords for Philip.

Commodore Philip, former captain of the Texas, now the commandant of the New York navy yard, is to be presented with two jeweled swords. One of these is to be given by citizens of New York City. The other will be presented by the Sunday school children of Texas.

Disbarment Case in Cleveland.

The Circuit Court of Cleveland, Ohio, overruled the demurrer to the disbarment charges against Judge F. E. Dellenbaugh. The court held that it had jurisdiction in the case and that the charges were sufficient, if proved, to justify Judge Dellenbaugh's disbarment.

HOTEL GUESTS IN PERIL.

Early Morning Fire in Sherwood House at Cincinnati.

The Sherwood House, on the east side of Walnut, above Sixth street, Cincinnati, took fire, probably from an overheated furnace, early the other morning and in a very brief time the house was so filled with smoke as to endanger the lives of the sixty or more sleeping guests. Many of the guests were members of theatrical companies. Very soon the upper corridors were filled with shrieking, hysterical women in night robes. The male guests had difficulty in restraining the women from jumping from the windows. The firemen were active in carrying out the women and most of them were rescued by the stairway, but several were taken down by the ladders and by the fire escapes. F. H. Munch, a traveling salesman from New York, was among the last to be rescued. He was found unconscious, with a wet towel over his face, but by the aid of physicians was saved. The entire fire department was called out and the fire subdued before the building was destroyed. The money loss will not exceed $10,000, fully insured.

MAD STAMPEDE AT DAWSON CITY.

Tales of New Discoveries Cause Wild Excitement—Sickness and Poverty.

Advices from Dawson are at hand by steamer Alki. During a single week there were three big stampedes out of Dawson. Three men came in and reported that they had taken out $20,000 from one of the Klondike tributaries near the headwaters. They would give no further details, but the maddest rush in the history of the camp followed. It was generally believed that the newly discovered creek was 130 miles up the Klondike, and for this place the wild crowd made with all haste. About 300 men participated in the other stampedes. One was to German creek, a branch of Twelve-Mile river, where a good discovery has been made. The number of sick is said to be increasing and the six hospitals are full. The mounted police have donated for the help of the poor some $30,000 in cash from their treasury. One minister told his congregation on the Sunday before this party left that he knew of six dead men within sight of the church.

AMERICANS HELD IN SLAVERY.

Citizens of United States Compelled to Work in Russian Mines.

Ex-Assemblyman J. M. Bassford and his brothers of Suisun, Cal., are inclined to believe the story that their brother, Frank Bassford, is restrained of his liberty on the peninsula of Kamchatka, as told by Sailor Morris, who returned from Manila two weeks ago. Morris says there are several Americans illegally and cruelly detained as prisoners by the Russian authorities. When at Yokohama he was informed by Barney Fox, a seal hunter of unquestionable veracity, that there were to his knowledge eighteen Americans held on the peninsula named, and that they were forced to work in the salt mines there. It is thought that the efforts now being made through Government officials regarding Bassford will do much to remove the curtain covering the inhuman treatment of American seal hunters and others in northern waters.

The Outlook Is Promising.

The state of trade is thus viewed by Bradstreet's: "The continued strength of staple values, accentuated this week by further advances in iron and steel and other metals, in cotton at the South and in lumber at some Western points, has undoubtedly added to the confidence with which the outlook for the ensuing year is regarded. That this confidence has a fair business in fact will be gathered from the reports received from the iron and cotton goods trades, the firmness in cotton goods being of considerable interest in view of the depression ruling throughout the larger part of last year. The iron trade situation remains, as for some time past, a feature of absorbing interest. Large as the production of pig iron is, eager buyers are found apparently for every ton offered. A strong side light upon the strength of iron and steel the world over is offered by the statement that iron in Glasgow this week reached the highest price noted for ten years past. Little change is reportable in the market for cereals. There is a perceptible improvement in the demand for dry goods, particularly cotton fabrics, at New York and Boston, where late advances are firmly held. There is also more doing in dress woolens at those markets. The lumber trade at most markets is in a satisfactory condition. The strength of prices is unimpaired, and advances in white pine are reported from the West, while in hardwoods values and confidence are alike unchanged. Wheat, including flour, shipments for the week aggregate 5,198,671 bushels, against 5,647,071 bushels last week. Corn exports for the week aggregate 2,928,191 bushels, against 3,297,072 bushels last week."

Report on Hawaiian Religions.

The American board of commissioners for foreign missions in Boston has received an interesting report on the present condition of the Hawaiian Islands. The report is from Rev. J. Leadingham. After stating that drunkenness is ruining scores and hundreds of the natives, Mr. Leadingham says that heathenism also is a foe which Christianity must still encounter there. Besides the lingering remnants of Hawaiian heathenism is that which is imported from China and Japan. Shinto and Buddhist priests are active in the support of their faith among the Japanese laborers in some places in the islands. On a recent trip to the Island of Hawaii Mr. Leadingham saw on one side of the road a building in front of which were some peculiarly shaped banners attached to tall poles. A pathway leading up to the building had been cut through the steep bank by the roadside, and the banks on either side of this pathway were stuck full of short pieces of bamboo, attached to which were strips of paper covered with Japanese characters. The building was a Shinto shrine, and the strips of paper on the sides of the pathway were prayers. Here was real heathenism from Japan. It is no uncommon sight to see a hack loaded with Chinamen and having with them a nicely roasted pig, on the way to the cemetery to pay their homage to their dead ancestors.

Winter Output of Klondike.

P. H. Hebb, who is part owner of forty Klondike claims, brings news that Dominion creek has just jumped into prominence as a gold producer of the first rank, excelling Bonanza and equaling Eldorado. Its claims are not as rich as a limited number on Eldorado, but its length is greater. Dominion and Eldora together will produce from $10,000,000 to $12,000,000 at the spring clean-up. A conservative estimate puts the winter output of the Klondike at $30,000,000, doubling the output of last winter.

Wages Cut in Maine Mills.

A reduction of 6 per cent in wages has been ordered at the St. Stephen cotton mills at Calais, Me. The carders, who refuse to accept the cut-down, have struck. The mills, it is said, will be able to run with one-third the usual number of carders.

Probable End of Oscar's Reign.

A dispatch from Stockholm, Sweden, says: "King Oscar of Sweden has abdicated the throne in favor of his son, the Crown Prince Gustaf. While it is generally reported that the abdication is only temporary, those who are in a position to know of what they speak declare that he will never return to the throne. King Oscar has made this movement on the urgent demand of his physician, who assured him that any further participation in the affairs of state might prove fatal. King Oscar's condition has been made worse by the rebellious spirit which his Norwegian subjects have exhibited of late. For years his majesty has tried to pacify Norway, and has acceded to most of the demands of the liberals, which are regarded as unpatriotic and unreasonable by the Swedes. Most bitter to the king was the act of the Norwegian storthing before the close of last year in adopting a Norwegian flag without the union emblem, though his majesty has refused to the last to sign the law."

WOMEN AND CHILDREN SAVED.

Massacre of All Spanish Officers at Balabac Is Confirmed.

The steamer Labuan, which has arrived at Labuan, British Borneo, came from the island of Balabac, thirty miles south of Palawan, Philippine Islands, and not from Palawan, as previously cabled. The murder of the Spanish officers which she reported occurred at Balabac. The Labuan brought sixty-five women and children. They had been robbed of everything, but otherwise had not been ill-treated. The Sulus assisted the Balabacs in killing the Spanish officers. The Spaniards have left Palawan, where the natives were fearful of the Sulus. Stores had been looted, business was at a standstill, and the natives were armed and ready for mischief.

NEW BELGIAN PREMIER.

M. Liebaort Succeeds M. Smet De Naeyer, Resigned.

A royal decree has been published at Brussels, accepting the resignations of the premier, M. Smet de Naeyer, and the minister of industry and labor, M. Nyssens. The same decree appoints MM. Liebaort and Cooreman, both members of the chamber of deputies, to succeed MM. Smet de Naeyer and Nyssens. M. Smet de Naeyer has been appointed minister of state. The resignations of the ministers were caused by differences with King Leopold on the question of the introduction of the uni-nominal electoral system, which the king advocates.

SMALLPOX ATTACKS THE ZUNIS.

Disease Threatens to Exterminate the New Mexican Tribe.

The powerful tribe of Zuni Indians, whose reservation lies in the western portion of New Mexico, is threatened with extermination by smallpox. The population of the Zuni nation is estimated at 1,700, and since last summer there have been 217 deaths from smallpox. Over 600 of the Indians are now sick with the disease, which continues to spread rapidly. Dr. Knapp, a special Government physician, and a corps of nurses are attending the Indians, but they seem powerless to stamp out the disease.

Seismic Disturbances in Southern Greece.

The Peloponnesus, in Greece, was shaken by earthquake five times in fifty minutes. From the Gulf of Corinth to Cape Matapan, and from the Ionian sea to the Bay of Argolis, no portion of the Morean peninsula escaped some sort of manifestation of the seismic commotion, and in Corinth, Nauplia, Tripolitza, Kalamata, Navarino and Pyrgo and the vicinity of those towns the heaving of the earth was violent.

Texas Is Urged to Secede.

In the lower house of the Texas Legislature a sensation was created by Dudley G. Wooten of Dallas, who is regarded as the House leader, introducing a resolution favoring Texas withdrawing from the Federal Union because of alleged injustice and violation of the State's rights through the policy adopted in enforcing the war revenue law.

TO CLEAN UP HAVANA.

TASK OF SCRUBBING OUT THAT CITY IS A BIG ONE.

It Will Require Time to Put the Unhealthy Cuban Capital in a Sanitary Condition—American Energy Now Busy with the Great Undertaking.

The work of reorganizing the civil government in Havana is now under way, and though the difficulties are naturally great it is encouraging to learn through the report of Surgeon General Sternberg, who has returned from Cuba, that the Americans are making remarkable headway. Gen. Ludlow has in charge the work of rehabilitation in Havana and his energy has already accomplished much.

The sanitary regeneration of the capital is the most difficult problem that confronts the Americans and according to Surgeon General Sternberg the work will require time, patience and money. Under the wise direction of Gen. Ludlow a good beginning has been made and the surgeon general gives it as his opinion that the city will be in such condition by summer as will permit unacclimated persons to live in it.

To those who know the sanitary condition of Havana under Spanish rule this means much. The city was really little less than a plague spot. There were foul pools on the streets, spreading their poisonous exhalations under the tropical sun. The carcasses of dead animals, such as dogs and cats, were allowed to lie on the streets and decompose until picked apart by buzzards. Vaults in private houses frequently connected with drains just under the pavement along their frontage and these drains of loose brick or stone permitted leaks, so that the pavement was rendered foul and unhealthy. Beneath each kitchen stood a cesspool that emitted its poisonous odors through each building and on the streets garbage was allowed to rot in the sun.

The New Havana.

But all this is now being changed. Garbage will in future be removed daily, cesspools will be cleaned and closed, sanitary closets connecting with sewers will take the place of disease-breeding vaults and dogs and cats after death will find other resting places than the streets.

Naturally, in order to carry out such sanitary reforms in full throughout the city will require a good deal of energy and time, especially in the building of sewers; and until these are in readiness the system of vaults will remain. But a strict inspection of them will be enforced and the poisonous leaks will be stopped. To instance how unhealthy the condition of life is in Havana the recent experience in the quarters occupied by Gen. Ludlow, near the palace, may be cited. There the air proved so foul that candles were extinguished by it and even cats and dogs, used as they were to the odors of the capital, were suffocated when forced to breathe it.

In carrying out his reforms Gen. Ludlow is experiencing the proverbial conservatism of the Spaniard and for that matter the Cuban. The older residents regard the new health regulations as unnecessary, and well-to-do and well-informed persons in making their objections describe themselves as "healthy enough." But "healthy enough" for the Spaniard does not mean "healthy enough" for the American and the sanitary reforms will be carried through until Havana is made as clean and wholesome as the average American city.

One fortunate thing is noted by Surgeon General Sternberg, namely, that the health of American troops in and near Havana is good. "Medical officers, however," adds Gen. Sternberg, "generally apprehend that there will be considerable sickness as the unhealthy season approaches, and strenuous efforts are being made to prepare for a large number of sick in case the military situation makes it necessary to retain a considerable body of troops in Cuba during the summer months.

"Orders have been given for the preparation of the Spanish military hospital, Alphonse XIII., which has a capacity of 2,000 beds; also for an officers' hospital at the Velado and for another hospital for infectious diseases."

STREET SCENE IN HAVANA.

CANNOT USE THE REVENUE.

Gen. Brooke's Order to Cubans Regarding Customs Receipts.

The United States military authorities have cabled the Santiago department an order directing that not a cent of the customs receipts of the department is to be expended without the permission of Governor General Brooke. The order also directs that the greater part of the sanitary work performed shall be done without money pay and for rations merely.

Gen. Jiminez Castellanos, former captain general of Cuba, has complained to Governor General Brooke that the Cubans in the province of Santa Clara are murdering Spanish ex-volunteers. He says that eight have been killed in one week. The governor general, replying, said he had referred the matter to Maj. Gen. John C. Bates, military governor of the department of Santa Clara, with directions that prompt measures be taken to punish the guilty.

The cashier's department of the Havana custom house is accused by common report of speculating in the Spanish gold taken in. The centen, nominally rated as equal to an American $5 gold piece, is accepted by the United States Government at the arbitrary rate of $4.82. It is said that as fast as centens are received at the custom house the cashiers immediately send them out, sell them in open market at the customary Havana value of $4.88, and pocket the difference of six cents on each Spanish coin after replacing and accounting for the same at the fixed Government price. About $500,000 in centens has been collected since Jan. 1. Therefore, if the accusation is true, the cashier's department has realized perhaps $6,000 in this speculation.

CANAL BILL PASSES SENATE.

Plan for Building the Nicaragua Ditch Approved in Upper House.

The Senate passed the Nicaragua canal bill Saturday. The final discussion of the measure was had on the amendment of Mr. Spooner providing that should the President fail to carry out the instructions in regard to the Maritime Canal Company, he may treat directly with Nicaragua, Costa Rica or any other Central American country looking to the building of an interoceanic canal.

The canal bill fathered by Senator Morgan, in a somewhat different form, passed the Senate once before, but failed to receive consideration in the House. The fight which was made on the bill in the Senate was principally due to an attempt to change certain features of it, some of which changes were secured, whereupon the opposition Senators allowed the bill to pass without offering serious protest.

One objection raised against the Morgan bill was the recognition given by it to the Maritime Canal Company, which is believed by many to have no valuable rights and little tangible property. As amended the bill aims to protect the Government from excessive payments in this line. Objection was made also to the part which the United States Government is to play in the matter. The bill provides that the canal company shall have a capital stock of $100,000,000, of which $92,500,000 shall be subscribed by the United States Government. The affairs of the company are to be controlled by a board of seven directors, five to be named by the President of the United States and one each by the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica. This plan, apparently, would require the modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. Therefore it has been contended by some of the opponents of the Morgan bill that the United States would better proceed to secure the modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and then build and control the canal directly, instead of indirectly through a subsidiary corporation.

INSTRUCTIONS ARE GIVEN.

President Furnishes Advices to Philippine Commissioners.

The President has furnished the written instructions to the Philippine commissioners. It is understood that the commission is charged to make a careful investigation of the social and economic conditions of the islands, and of their prospective value to the United States as acquired territory. The commissioners are especially urged to examine into the annexation and independence sentiments on the islands, and also to gather all possible information as to the capacity for self-government.

GOES INSANE IN ENGINE CAB.

Fireman on Illinois Central Becomes Crazed from Grip.

An incoming train on the Illinois Central the other morning brought news to Louisville, Ky., of a terrible struggle in the cab of the locomotive between the engineer and a crazy fireman. Walter Cole, the fireman, fell in a fit at Cecelian Junction. Engineer Martin Kagin went to his assistance, when Cole suddenly tried to jump from the train, which was running at full speed. The engineer restrained him and Cole turned on him. A terrible struggle followed. Kagin managed to throw Cole to the floor of the cab and before he recovered stopped the train. His physicians attribute his mental condition to a severe attack of the grip.

MUST HOLD THE PHILIPPINES.

Poultney Bigelow, Writer and Traveler, on Situation in East.

A London dispatch to the New York Herald gives an interview with Poultney Bigelow, the well-known writer and traveler, who recently returned from the Philippines. He is of the opinion that the United States must hold the islands and that the Americans must soon show the Filipinos that they are masters. Mr. Bigelow bewails the lack of business talent among the American officers at present in the Philippines, which, he declares, is required to grapple with and successfully handle the colonial question.

Lieut. Colonel Davis.

Judge Advocate of the court martial convened to hear Commissary General Eagan's case.

Rockefeller Must Pay.

The application of John D. Rockefeller of the Standard Oil Trust to have the assessment on his country seat in North Tarrytown, N. Y., set aside was denied in court. The assessors placed the value of his property at $1,000,000, and levied a tax accordingly. Rockefeller declared the amount outrageous and illegal and took the case to law. Many hearings were given and thousands of dollars spent.

Will Join Dewey's Fleet.

The Don Juan de Austria, one of the Spanish vessels sunk by Admiral Dewey's squadron and afterward raised, has reached Hong Kong from Manila. She will be overhauled and sent back to Manila for service under Admiral Dewey.

The Senate listened further on Thursday to a discussion of the policy of expansion. Mr. Turner (Wash., Pop.) delivered a carefully prepared speech on the Vest resolution. The speech was for the most part a constitutional argument in which Mr. Turner took issue with Senator Platt and Senator Foraker upon their recent utterances. At the conclusion of Mr. Turner's argument Mr. Foraker took some sharp exceptions to statements made in the speech, especially those referring to him personally. The Nicaragua canal bill was under consideration nearly three hours. After much debate a substitute presented by Mr. Morgan (Ala.) for the bond amendment offered by Mr. Allison was adopted. It provides that bond payments shall not exceed $20,000,000 in any fiscal year. The amendment as amended was then adopted, 41 to 19. The last hour of the session was occupied in discussion of several amendments offered by Mr. Caffery of Louisiana, all of which were defeated. The House practically decided the Brown-Swanson contested election case from the Fifth Virginia district in favor of the sitting member, Mr. Swanson, a Democrat, by declining to consider the case. The postoffice appropriation bill was then taken up. The greatest surprise of the day was the adoption of two amendments striking out of the bill the appropriation of $171,000 for the fast Southern mail and $25,000 for special mail facilities from Kansas City to Newton, Kan.

The proceedings in the House were enlivened on Friday by a wordy duel between Mr. Grosvenor of Ohio and Mr. Lewis, Democrat, the member from Washington. It occurred during the debate on a private bill to refer to the court of claims the claim of Cramp & Sons, the Philadelphia ship builders, for damages from the Government for delays incident to the building of the warships New York, Massachusetts, Indiana and Columbia, due to the failure of the Government to deliver armor plate and other materials for these ships on time. The postoffice appropriation bill was passed. At 4:30 p. m. the House recessed until 8 o'clock. The evening session was devoted to private pension legislation and adjournment was taken to Monday. The Senate was in session for five hours and a half, but the session was practically barren of results.

Senator Morgan's Nicaragua canal bill passed the Senate Saturday afternoon by a vote of 48 to 6. As a matter of fact, it was passed twice, once by a viva voce vote and the second on a roll call. The opposition had been dwindling away for several days. Friends and foes of the anti-scalping bills were also lined up in the Senate the same afternoon. The supporters of those measures won their first victory. By a vote of 33 to 21 they succeeded in having the Senate bill taken up for consideration.

Discussion of the policy of expansion occupied nearly all the time of the Senate in open session on Monday. Mr. White of California addressed the Senate in support of the anti-expansion resolution introduced by Mr. Vest (Dem., Mo.) and another resolution offered by Mr. Bacon (Dem., Go.) declaring that the Philippines ought to be free and independent. The Senate at 2:10 p. m., on motion of Mr. Davis, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, went into executive session. After the executive session Mr. Chandler called up the bill to restore to their original status officers of the navy and marine corps who lost their status by reason of the promotion of other officers by reason of conspicuous conduct in battle. The bill went over on objection.

The debate on the army reorganization bill opened in the House on Tuesday under an agreement by which the general debate is to run fifteen hours, exclusive of three night sessions. Mr. Hull and Mr. McClellan in support of the measure and Mr. Hay of Virginia in opposition divided the honors. The other speakers were Messrs. Parker (Rep.) of New Jersey and Brown (Rep.) of Ohio in favor and Messrs. Cox (Dem.) of Tennessee, Bell (Pop.) of Colorado and Latham (Dem.) of Texas against it. At the conclusion of routine business in the Senate Mr. Lodge (Rep., Mass.) delivered his announced speech upon the policy of expansion. At the conclusion of Mr. Lodge's speech Mr. Teller (Col.) addressed the Senate upon a question with respect to the constitutional powers of the Government in the territories. Mr. Clay (Ga.), one of the Democratic Senators who expects to vote for the ratification of the treaty of peace, then addressed the Senate on the general question of territorial expansion.

Not since the stirring days before the declaration of war last spring has the House witnessed such an exhibition of excitement and such scenes of unbounded enthusiasm as occurred on Wednesday when the two Republicans, Mr. Johnson, the Indiana member, and Mr. Dolliver of Iowa, locked horns on the question of expansion. The army bill was under debate. At the night session Mr. Crumpacker (Rep., Ind.) supported the bill and advocated annexation. Mr. Rixey (Dem., Va.) opposed the bill. Mr. Linney (Rep., N. C.) supported the bill. Only a brief time was occupied by the Senate in open session. Mr. Hale, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported the naval personnel bill and gave notice that at the earliest time possible he would call it up for consideration. Mr. Cullom (Ill.) reported the legislative appropriation bill. Mr. Chandler (N. H.) introduced a bill temporarily creating the office of admiral of the navy. It was referred to the Naval Affairs Committee. A senate bill providing for the erection of a building in Washington for the department of justice at a cost of $1,000,000 was passed.

STATE LAW MAKERS.

By a vote of 45 to 46 the bill under which the State authorities hoped to proceed successfully against the Roby race track people and the persons and concerns wasting natural gas was defeated in the House on Thursday. The friends of the measure say the clerks made a mistake in the roll call, and that later the bill will be passed. Mr. Mull and Mr. Manifold gave notice that they would ask that the record be corrected, and if this is not done they will ask for a reconsideration of the vote. Five men who are recorded as voting against the bill declare they voted for it. The chief argument against the bill was that it was too drastic. It makes any repeated violation of a penal statute a nuisance and authorizes any public officer to bring suit for injunction without giving bond.

The anti-Roby race track bill was killed in the House on Friday. A reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was defeated the day before was moved by Mr. Manifold, and the motion was lost by a vote of 60 to 35. The House by a vote of 83 to 6 advanced the bill for the establishment of a county council in every county in the State. The third act of the House was to kill the pet bill of Gov. Mount for the teaching of agriculture in the public schools.

Both branches of the General Assembly had half-day sessions Saturday morning and adjourned at noon. An attempt was made in the House to revive the bill introduced by Mr. Barlow, at the suggestion of Gov. Mount, providing for the study of agriculture in the public schools, which was killed in the House a few days before. Mr. Neal introduced a resolution providing for "nature studies" in schools for a limited amount of time a week; and speeches were made in favor of the resolution by all the leading speakers for the Governor's agricultural ideas. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Education. A resolution introduced by Mr. Hayes of St. Joseph County, caused considerable friction in the House. It expressed the opinion that the next Republican national convention should declare itself opposed to trusts and monopolies. Most of the Republicans voted to table the resolution. The motion to table prevailed by a vote of 43 to 26. In the Senate the constitutional rules were suspended and the bill fixing the term of the Appellate Court was passed. It fixes the end of the term in March, 1903.

S. E. Nicholson of Kokomo, chairman of the committee representing the allied churches of the State, brought to Indianapolis on Monday a bill for changes in the divorce law, and it was introduced in each branch of the Legislature. It simply provides that a divorced person shall not remarry within two years after being divorced. The new anti-Roby race track bill was also introduced in each house. It confers on the Attorney General only the authority to bring injunction suits without giving bond.

The legislation for reform in county and township business was pushed along another notch on Tuesday, the house accepting the committee report favoring the passage of the bill to establish a county council in every county in the State. The county and township bill will now go to a joint committee, which will report back bills for the consideration of the Republican caucus.

The bill to prohibit licensed saloons in residence districts met with favor in the House on Wednesday. A majority of the Committee on Temperance recommended that the bill be indefinitely postponed. The report was rejected and the bill placed on the calendar. Northern Indiana members have brought forward a bill providing for the draining of the Kankakee swamps. The bill was introduced by Representative Knotts. It provides that county commissioners may make drainage districts on petition of the owners of lands to be drained. The commissioners may let the work of drainage to the highest bidder, or they may purchase the necessary machinery and do the work themselves. Any land owner in the district is to be permitted to do work at the price bid. The money needed to construct the ditch is to be contributed by the land owner.

His Feet.

The phrase "small vanities" does not seem vague until one has asked several people to say what they would mean by it. Dickens liked a red necktie, and other celebrated men have been childishly devoted to certain articles of dress; but that might only indicate their having a sense of the beautiful. There is, however, a kind of precaution over personal detail which seems to proceed from vanity and from nothing else.

Maclise, the artist, once did a full-length portrait of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, and a sorry time he had of it. For the author was hard to please; now this was not right and now that. The "complexion of the hand" was to be especially noted, and the painter must be very particular about the feet. The feet, indeed, caused no end of annoyance. Bulwer insisted on having them very small, but Maclise painted them the natural size. Then Bulwer came to see them, and would have them diminished.

The artist yielded, perforce; but he had one resource, varnishing day, when pictures can be "retouched" so long as time will admit. Then and there he quietly painted in the feet again of the proper size, and the author had to see them thus on the day of exhibition.

Sailor Boys Taught to Sing.

One of the most curious institutions connected with the British navy is the office of "inspector of singing." On all training ships the boys are instructed in singing, by tutors, who receive about $50 a year for the service. On each of the ships there is a tonic sol fa class, where the boys are taught to sing patriotic airs. This ability to sing stirring music has a very enlivening and inspiring influence upon the crews, and might, in some cases, considerably frighten an enemy.

A LOAD OF HAY.

A load of hay in the crowded street,
A whiff of the scent of clover,
A change of thought,—vague,—incomplete,—
A living a young life over.

A day in August, and clouds of white,
A shifting of light and shadow,
The hum of bees and the martin's flight,
The meadow larks and the meadow.

Strong arms of men and the yellow green
Of the swaths, the steady swinging
Of forms of laborers, strong and lean,
The scythes with their steely ringing.

The roar of trade, and the newsboys' call,
And the dream of a moment's over;
'Twas a brain-wave came through the nose, and all
From a whiff of the scent of clover!

The Black Horse "Harry."

BY CHAS. B. LEWIS.

Leaning against the barn-yard fence was a farmer with gray hair and wrinkled face, and the look and posture of a man whose years had been spent in hard work. To his left was hitched a horse—a coal-black horse with a star in his forehead. On the kitchen door-step, three hundred feet away, sat a woman of fifty—a gray-haired woman—a woman with a wrinkled face—a woman who had been wife to the man over there for thirty years. She had her hands under her apron, and she did not raise it to wipe the tears from her eyes. By and by there was a cloud of dust down the road, and five minutes later a brisk-looking man drove up and halted and called out:—

"Well, Uncle Joe, you've concluded to sell, have you?"

The old farmer choked up and motioned toward the horse, and it was half a minute before he could say:—

"It's most as bad as the day we bid Sam good-bye, but I've got to sell. Take him along and be quick about it!"

"Two hundred dollars," said the man, as he counted out the greenbacks, "and I'll tie him behind the buggy. Sorry you are forced to sell, Uncle Joe, but let me tell you he's just the finest horse this county will ever send down to the cavalry. You've owned him since he was foaled, and I know how hard—"

Uncle Joe reached for the money and turned away toward the house. His lip quivered as he sauntered along and he had to shut his teeth hard to keep the tears back. He passed the strawstack at which the calves were nibbling—the hayrack dumped against the fence weeks before—the open shed under which he housed the plows and drags. He did not look up. Even when he opened the gate and struck the path leading to the kitchen door his eyes were on the ground. He stepped aside to glance into the pigpen—stopped for a moment in front of the smoke-house, and he had choked down his emotions when he reached the door-steps and the woman waiting for him. She had her face in her apron. He sat down beside her, tossed the money into her lap, and after a while he said:—

"There was the interest on the mortgage and the taxes coming due, and I had to do it, Martha—had to do it."

"It was Sam's colt!" sobbed the wife. "Yes, but I had to sell—had to sell. Let's make the best of it. They've bought him for the cavalry, and wouldn't it be funny if our Sam should come to get him way down at the front. Sam would know him on sight, and if he jest whistled once, 'Harry' would jump fence to find him. Say, ma, don't take on about it. Let's chirk up and believe it's all for the best."

The woman rose up and entered the house without a reply, and the man presently got up, looked about him in an absent way, and then took a corn-cutter from its nail in the wood-shed and went out to the grindstone under the Bartlett pear tree to sharpen it for the day's work in the corn field. Half an hour later, when the implement had been edged to his satisfaction, he looked into the kitchen to say to the woman who was wearily washing the last of the breakfast dishes:

"Say, Martha, I'll write to Sam to-night to keep an eye out for 'Harry,' and I shouldn't a bit wonder if they run across each other down there. Sam would feel most as tickled as if he'd seen one o' us."

Two weeks later a drove of 500 horses were turned in at the remount camp at Pleasant Valley. There were 500 dismounted troopers there waiting for them. Sheridan was pushing Early up the Shenandoah, and there was no time to sort the bays and blacks and grays and assign them to companies. So many horses and so many men, and on the morrow they must be off to overtake Custer and fall into the ranks.

"By the living jingo!" shouted a trooper as a horse was trotted out of the inclosure and the halter passed into his hand. "Say, now, you fellers, say—say——!"

"What the mischief is the matter with you, Sam Johnson?" shouted the sergeant in charge of the remounting.

"Why, I'll be tetotally busted if this ain't Harry, my own pet colt, straight from the old farm! It's him, as sure's you're born! Hey! Harry, boy! Don't you know me?"

And as the horse stood with outstretched halter, ears cocked up and eyes glaneing wildly about, the trooper uttered a peculiar whistle. The animal walked straight up to him and rubbed his soft nose against the sunburned cheek, and whimpered, and kissed, and showed his delight. It was the strangest kind of luck. The father had said he would write to his soldier boy that he had been obliged to sell Harry, but he had not done so. His heart was too sore over the parting. Sam's joy was great. It was like coming across a brother. His own hands had first bridled and saddled him—had first broken him to harness. Every infantryman has his chum. Every trooper two of them—his horse and a comrade—his horse first. The father had pleadingly said to the mother, hoping to lighten her sorrow, that Sam and Harry might find each other down at the front, and chance had brought it about. A hundred envious men crowded around the black and looked him over and growled at chance. He was a game horse, they said—one to thunder down into battle with eyes blazing and foam flying, and his heart set on victory.

A thousand troopers have formed for a charge. The men are pale-faced and gritting their teeth—the horses lifting their feet and working their ears nervously. There is the bugle! Walk—trot—gallop—charge! They sweep up the hill in a solid mass, every trooper cheering—every sabre glinting and glistening in the sunlight. Beyond the crest of the hill, down across the meadow, over the cotton field, and then they strike the foe. It is a crash as if a thousand feet of stone wall had been toppled down. There are cheers, shouts, shots and the clash of steel.

The black horse and his rider were in the front rank. With the bit in his teeth and his ears laid back the black horse dashed at the foe, and with sabre whirling about his head the rider cheered and exulted. The thousand break through and scatter the foe, but when they draw off there are only seven hundred to ride away. Down there on two acres of field the dead and wounded almost touch each other, and as the sun goes down and night comes on the groans and wails of the wounded are a sound to make one shiver. An hour goes by—two—three hours. Then one of the wounded men—one who has been lying as if dead—struggles up and braces his back against a dead man. He pants and groans with the exertion, and presently he purses up his dry lips and sends forth a signal call. It is a shrill, quavering whistle, and many another wounded man listens and wonders. Once—twice—thrice. And then the signal is answered. From where he is lying, forty rods away, slowly bleeding to death from a gaping wound, the black horse gathers his feet under him and utters a shrill neigh. Again the whistle, and now the stricken animal picks his way among the dead and wounded, moving at snail's pace and groaning as he moves, and by and by he halts and sinks down in his tracks and thrusts his muzzle against the breast of the man who called him.

"It's you, Harry!" whispers the man as he puts out his hand. "I knew you were hit, but I hoped you had not left me. Got your death, eh! Well, same here. But wasn't it a glorious charge, though! How we thundered down! How we crashed into 'em! How we slashed right and left and drove them before us! Men had to die, Harry—men and horses. Back there at the old home there'll be weeping and grieving, but they'll be proud to know we died with our faces to the foe."

"Dear old Harry!" said the trooper, as he stroked the soft muzzle with his stiffening fingers. "Yes, men and horses had to die, and why not we, as well as others? Ah! but how strong you were under me as we swept up the hill! It was your first battle—your first and your last—but you had a heart of oak, and we struck the enemy first of all our regiment. How strange and queer that you came down to me! Poor old dad! Poor old Mam! It must have wrenched their hearts to part with you! Are you here, Harry? Are you talking to me? Poor old chap! That was a terrible volley they gave us, but that's the way for a soldier to die. Dead, are you, Harry, dead with your head on my knees?"

Again the woman sat on the kitchen doorsteps, with her hands under her apron. She leaned her head on the door-casing, and her eyes were fixed on a man coming slowly across the barnyard. He had been to town and he had a letter in his hand. He did not wave it and shout. He looked this way and that—any way but toward the woman. She grew white as death as he came nearer, but she neither moved nor spoke. At last he sat down beside her with a groan. He still held the letter in his hand, and she saw that it had been opened. She heard him breathing like one who strangles in his sleep, and he could hear the furious beating of her heart. By and by he huskily said:—

"It's from one of the Reynolds boys. God help us, ma!"

"Our Sam is dead!" she whispered, between her white lips.

"Y—Yes, ma! But Harry found him before he died, just as I told you he might."

"And they died together!"

"Died together, ma, died together!" he answered, as he reached out and took one of her hands and sobbed in his throat.—Atlanta Constitution.

A Recent Egyptian Discovery.

It has hitherto been supposed that in Egypt the practice of embalming the bodies of the dead and forming them into mummies was the most ancient method of sepulture, but Prof. Flinders Petrie, the well-known Egyptologist, has, by recent excavations, thrown quite a new light upon this question of the ancient method of disposing of the dead. At Deshasheh, a place about fifty miles south of Cairo, he has discovered a series of tombs, in the coffins of which he has found complete skeletons from which the flesh has been carefully dissected, evidently previous to burial. The coffins are of admirable workmanship, are made of sycamore, and are in perfect preservation, notwithstanding their five thousand year's burial in the sand. It remains to be proved by further excavations whether the mutilation of the bodies was performed as a ceremonial rite, or whether this removal of flesh from the bones points to cannibalism on the part of the ancient people.—Chamber's Journal.

A Curious English Custom.

The curious and ancient custom of "weighing in" a mayor and corporation survives at High Wycombe in England, and was last year again observed in connection with the election of the chief magistrate. The mayor having been chosen and elected, the whole community of alderman, councillors, officials and others repaired to the vestibule of the town hall, where the head constable, who was in charge of a weighing machine, carefully recorded the weight of each person.

HUNTING RABBITS.

Sport Abounds When Snow Is Light and Air Is Keen.

A rabbit hunt is a thing of yells and shouts and baying of hounds and wild excitement. About five hounds and a cur dog, four boys and a man and a light snow on the ground are the usual outfit. On the "crick" there are a lot of brush piles scattered about and in any amount of cover and brush and hiding places for the game. The hounds are put in and in about five minutes there is a grand hullabaloo and a deep bay from one of the old hounds, followed by the excited "yap" of the cur dog, and the game is afoot. Very much afoot, for he is covering the ground with long leaps and endeavoring to put as much space as possible between him and his pursuers. It is not a very long chase. The rabbit turns, dodges and finally nears where the man with the shotgun is standing. There is a sharp "bang" as the right-hand barrel is discharged and the rabbit keels over and is grabbed by one of the boys just before the foremost hound reaches the spot.

The forces now begin offensive operations. The cur dog is sent into the brush heaps and the boys climb up on top of the brush and thrash around, stamping on the limbs and making as much noise as possible. The cur squeezes around in the maze of brush and pretty soon the rabbits begin to move. The first gun is fired by the boy with the musket, who has stayed with the dogs. It is an awful roar and it misses the rabbit. But an officious hound who happens to be close by grabs the rabbit and the boy slides to the ground and snatches it from the hound. Then he "hollers" triumphantly, "I got him!"

Then he gets on another pile of brush and starts to tramp around again. Meantime the hounds are nervously trying to make themselves small enough to get under the brush piles, but with poor success. It is the cur dog's inning and he is making the most of it. His eyes are snapping with excitement and he is full of nervous energy. Every hair on his back bristles with eagerness and his chief ambition is to catch just one rabbit all by himself. There are hurried slides under the brush, quick plunges and muffled barks, and the rabbits dodge the cur dog and dart out from under the brush heaps, only to be met by the accommodating hounds or a blast from a musket, and if they escape all these there is still the gantlet of the outer guard to pass. The hounds are jumping around among the brush piles, and whenever they nip a rabbit as it is driven out by the cur there is a squeal and a muffled growl from the hound and then a yell from the nearest boy. But the hounds do not worry the rabbit after he is dead; they drop him and wait until he is transferred to somebody's pocket.

After the clearing has been thoroughly overhauled there is a counting up to see the result, and late in the afternoon the party will be seen traveling slowly home, all of them, dogs, boys and man, thoroughly tired out. But over their shoulders and in their pockets are rabbits, as many as they can carry, and they are all serenely satisfied with the hunt. The boy whose musket went off accidentally does not say anything about it, for fear it might be urged against his carrying a gun at future hunts.

Rabbits adapt their habits to the locality in which they are raised, and this action on their part makes hunting them a question of geography, to a certain extent. In some portions of the country, where the ground is hilly, high and comparatively free from underbrush, rabbits can only be successfully hunted with ferrets. They feed mostly at night and lie in holes in the daytime, and the hunter who traverses such a country with the best of rabbit dogs will have his labor for his pains. Neither with beagle nor greyhound will he be able to get a sight of a rabbit, unless he accidentally runs across a stray one, and that particular "bunny" will "hole up" as soon as the dogs get on his trail.

The only way to get rabbits in that kind of a country is to go after them with a ferret. The ferret is kept in a box until the grounds are reached and the hunters begin operations. It takes at least two persons to hunt rabbits with a ferret, if the thing is done properly. One man to handle and "groom" the ferret, and the other to shoot the rabbits. A dog is sometimes taken along, but a dog is a nuisance under such circumstances.

When a hole is found, the box or bag is opened and the ferret is coaxed out. He comes creeping from his hiding place, and apparently very reluctantly. When he is urged to go down and interview the lodgers he goes most unwillingly. After a wait of perhaps three or four minutes the tip of his nose appears at the other entrance to the burrow, and then a diplomatic dalliance commences with a view to getting the brute back into the box again. Sometimes he can be induced to get back to his quarters without much trouble, but at other times he gets crafty, and the hunters will sit around for half an hour or so trying to coax him to leave the hole. There are ferrets that will sometimes go down in a hole, grab a rabbit, gorge themselves with the prey, and then deliberately lie down and go to sleep, some six or eight feet below the surface.

If there is a rabbit in the hole when a ferret is put in, the rabbit bolts out of the place in a hurry. He is in deadly fear of this creeping, rat-like little beast, and he comes out with a bound, and then the man with the gun usually bowls him over. Sometimes there are two or three rabbits in one hole, and the hunter may get rattled, and score clean misses. But the rabbits only scurry off to some other burrow, there to be routed out again and shot at. The rabbit gets out of the hole so quickly that it is almost impossible to see him come. He is in the air the first you see of him, and he is away in an instant.

Some stretches of country are riddled with these holes, and fifteen or twenty rabbits may be gotten in a day. The rabbits in this kind of ground are swift of foot, and usually in the fall and winter very fat. There is a great deal of uncertainty about this kind of hunting, for sometimes there have been other hunters there before, and every hole drawn is a blank. It is splendid exercise, though; the climbing up and down the steep hillsides and walking through the woods in crisp weather brings many sets of muscles into play, and the air is chuck full of ozone.

HUNTING RABBITS.

HON. NELSON DINGLEY.

The death of Nelson Dingley, Jr., father of the present tariff law, ex-Governor of Maine and Congressman since 1881, removes a prominent man from the political life of the nation. Nelson Dingley, Jr., was born in Durham, Me., in 1832. At an early age he began school teaching, meantime preparing himself for college. In 1851 he entered Waterville College, subsequently becoming a student at Dartmouth, from which he graduated in 1855. He then studied law, but instead of taking up the active practice of his profession he entered journalism, becoming the owner and editor of the Lewiston Journal. In 1861, '62, '63 he represented Auburn in the State Legislature, being Speaker in 1863. In that year he removed to Lewiston and was again sent to the Legislature. In 1864 he was again Speaker of that body and declined the honor in two subsequent years. In 1873 Mr. Dingley was elected Governor and was re-elected the following year. In 1881 he was sent to Congress to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of William P. Frye and he had been continuously in that body since that time. He was a most influential member in the lower house, being latterly chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and floor leader of the Republicans. His tariff bill, to which as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee he gave his name, lent him additional fame.

Advantages of the Nicaragua Canal.

Capt. Crowinshield, writing in the Century of the "Advantages of the Nicaragua Canal," summarizes some of them in this wise: When the divide between the Atlantic and the Pacific is cut through part of the waters of the lake, which for untold ages have flowed east to the Caribbean Sea, will flow west to the Pacific. Lake Nicaragua, covering as it does nearly three thousand square miles, becomes not only a part of the water route itself, but a grand reservoir located exactly where it is most needed—at the summit level. Thus it will be seen that while nature has not quite opened through Nicaragua a complete water route to the Pacific, she has come very near to it. In fact, of all the routes for an interoceanic canal that have received consideration, it must be admitted that so much has already been accomplished by nature toward this end that the work which remains for man to do will be far less than by any other route.

Queer Names for Women.

The wives of some of the Indian braves have names as odd and often as droll as their husbands. They seem to have cognomens of their own, too, and not to take those of their spouses only. Some of the actual names given in a census of the family of the scouts at one place include Mrs. Short Nose, who was before her marriage Miss Piping Woman; Mrs. Big Head, formerly Miss Short Face; Mrs. Nibbs, formerly Miss Young Bear; Mrs. White Crow, formerly Miss Crook Pipe; Mrs. Howling Water, formerly Miss Crow Woman; also Mrs. Sweet Water, Miss Walk High, daughter of Mr. White Calf, and Miss Osage, daughter of Mr. Hard Case.

An hour-glass is the kind some men prefer.

WORLD'S STRANGEST BRIDGE.

It Is Built of Vines Over the Omo River in Abyssinia.

Many and strange were the things seen by the French expedition of Bonvalot de Bonchamps in Africa, but nothing stranger than the bridge of vines over the Omo River, in Abyssinia, which is pictured in "L'Illustration" from a photograph taken by a member of the party. In most parts of Africa bridges are undreamed of; big rivers are crossed by rafts and little ones forded. But in the mountains of Abyssinia the torrents that pour down to join the Nile are not so lightly stemmed. Over one of these the Abyssinians, who have something like a settled country and stable government, have thrown the bridge. Unlike the Brooklyn bridge or the suspension bridge at Niagara, these Abyssinian engineers had no cables, no scientific bands of steel. Instead they had only nature's force.

It is built upon the suspension plan, hung from big cables made of twisted creepers; from these depend the uprights bearing the floor supports. The roadway is very narrow, for no one ever travels across the hills except with caravans of porters bearing trade gods. The skill with which the bridge is built is something marvelous. The Bonvalot de Bonchamps party set out from Djibouti, on the Red Sea, and traveled across the Somali desert and the Abyssinian hills to join Marchand at Fashoda, which he reached from the west coast. Thus they planned to throw a strip of French soil right across the dark continent. It reached the head waters of the Sobat and went boating merrily down the river; but meanwhile the British gunboats reached the junction of the Sobat with the White Nile and the expedition is now toiling back to Djibouti. The road going out is a good deal longer than it was going in.

Mortuary Relic.

Mrs. Helen Struthers Dunn, of No 723 Pine street, Philadelphia, is the owner of a curious relic, which is nothing less than a locket made from the coffin of George Washington. It came to Mrs. Dunn through her father, John Struthers, who gave to the United States the sarcophagus in which Washington's body now rests. When the coffin containing the body of the great American was being removed to Mount Vernon a little piece of it was chipped off, polished, then set in gold and fashioned into the strange ornament, which is itself coffin-shaped. Instead of a name-plate there is a little piece of glass, and beneath this rests a lock of hair said to be taken from the head of the famous revolutionary leader. This relic and the trowel that was used to cement the sarcophagus lie side by side in Mrs. Dunn's treasure drawer.

After looking at her troubles up one way and down the other, a woman decides there is no other thing to do but put them on her shoulders, and trudge along. A man, however, will put them in a bucket and kick them over. Which is the better way?

THE TALE OF A CASTAWAY.

ADVENTURES OF A SHIPWRECKED CREW ON A RAT-INFESTED ISLAND.

Hospitably Treated by the White Colony that Leads an Incredibly Miserable Existence on Tristan d'Acunha—A Steady Diet of Penguin Eggs—Rescued by a Warship.

Cast on a rat-infested island in the South Atlantic Ocean, more than 1,500 miles south by west of the Cape of Good Hope, Capt. R. R. Shaw and his crew of the bark Glenhuntley lived for 154 days, mostly on penguin's eggs. At last they were rescued by the British warship Thrush, and a few weeks ago were landed at Simon's Bay, South Africa.

The bark sailed from New York on March 31 last, with a general cargo for Freemantle, Australia. R. W. Cameron & Co., her shipping agents, in New York city, were rejoiced to learn that the Glenhuntley's crew—long since given up as lost—had been rescued from starvation and now are on the way to Liverpool, where the bark was owned.

The voyage from New York was uneventful until the first days of June, when a fierce storm was encountered. The craft was so seriously damaged that on June 4 Captain Shaw and his men were forced to abandon it at sea. They took to the lifeboats, and several days later landed on one of the Tristan d'Acunha Isles.

The adventures of the shipwrecked men on the faraway island are best described by Captain Shaw.

After telling of the abandonment of the bark and the landing on the island of Tristan d'Achuna, he writes:

"The first ship that approached the island and was boarded by us was the American vessel S. D. Carlton, on September 16, from New York to Hong Kong. I wanted the captain to take us to the Cape of Good Hope, but he could not. Our second mate, however, went on the Carlton. Three days afterward we sighted a sail from the highland at the foot of a mountain. That afternoon eight men and myself left in a small boat, and got to her, sailing and rowing, about 10 p. m. She proved to be the four-masted bark Strathgrype, of Greencock, from New York for Melbourne. They also could not take us, but the captain gave us seventy pounds of bread, fifty pounds of flour, fourteen pounds of coffee and some tobacco. This was the first substantial food and tobacco we got since we reached the island. As the population of the place, with our eleven, had been increased to eighty-three, the supplies did not last long.

"I never thought that there were white people so poor as the seventy-two who made Tristan d'Acunha their home. The natives have houses built of stone, and these are thatched with a grass called tussock. The houses are only one story high, and the people cook, eat and sleep in a single apartment. Along the inside walls of some of these apartments are bunks like those on ships.

"The natives make trips in their little boats to Inaccessible Island, twenty miles distant, in a southwesterly direction, for tussock to be used in thatching. The islands are overrun with rats, which get scant food, excepting when the natives try to raise a little grain. Then they dig up the seed almost as soon as planted. The people grow very little of anything, but once in a while they succeed in raising a few potatoes. There are a few apple and pear trees, but the rats, which climb them, eat the fruit before it can ripen.

"The Governor of the island gave me shelter, and the rest of the crew were quartered at the houses of the natives, who divided their stock of eaglets and penguin flesh, and eggs of the latter sea fowl with them. Sea eagles are about the size of a duck, and their flesh was too strong for me to eat. The natives, however, seem to relish it, and in time there is a possibility that I would also fall into line with them. The craving of hunger is a terrible thing, and to satisfy it I ate penguins' eggs for breakfast, dinner and supper. They were cooked in all styles, but the variety, such as it was, could not disguise the egg to my taste.

"The sea eagles lay their eggs in holes on the sides of the mountains, and when the eaglets are about as big as a pigeon the natives take their dogs in a small boat and go 'round the island. The dogs smell out the holes, and then the natives get the young birds, and bring them home and cook them. The eaglets have a strong and fishy taste, and one has to be hungry to eat their flesh.

"There are several penguin rookeries, where we got eggs which furnished the main part of our daily food while we were on the island. We also killed some of the sea fowl, and the oil secured in the cooking we used in our lamps. The little coffee that I obtained from the Strathgrype was all that had been on the island for three months. The natives own a fair-sized sailboat between them, and whatever supplies they secure from a passing vessel is equally divided. They wear no shoes, and when a beast is killed its skin is pegged to the ground and dried. Then it is cut up into strips, and out of the skin a sort of a moccasin is made.

"The Governor of the island is upward of ninety years old, and his wife is eighty-three. One of the natives, named Thomas Hill Swaine, was with Lord Nelson on the Victory at Trafalgar. When the government had a battery on the island of Tristan d'Achuna, Swaine came as a corporal, and after the military force was abolished he remained in this God-forsaken place.

"The natives—both male and female—are sadly in need of clothing. The men sometimes secure cast-off garments from the crews of passing ships, but the women rarely get a petticoat. As a sort of home amusement, the members of the poor colony on the island make grotesque bonnets and caps from the fleece and skins of sea birds and fancy feather work from the plumage on the heads of the penguins.

"The Governor told me that he landed first on the island in 1836, and that during the past sixty-two years he had only made two trips to St. Helena, which is over 1,000 miles away. He had never been to the Cape of Good Hope.

"When the Thrush made its yearly visit to the island, her captain consented to take us to a port in Africa."

The Glen Huntley, which was built at Glasgow in 1862, was 940 tons burden and 165 feet long. She was owned by Messrs. T. C. Jones and J. H. Foyl of Glasgow, Scotland.

VENUS AND ITS MYSTERIES.

Astronomers Puzzled to Know Whether It Is a Living or Dead World.

The most beautiful planet, and the one that comes nearest to the earth, and most resembles the earth in size, is at the same time the most mysterious. Is Venus a living world or a dead one? That is to say, is it in a condition to support inhabitants, and is it probable that such inhabitants are there, or, on the other hand, is it unsuited for their presence and barren of living forms?

These questions astronomers at present are unable to answer, but their efforts to answer them and the observations that they have made of the mysterious planet possess an almost startling interest.

First let us briefly recall what Venus is. It is a globe like our earth, and of very nearly the same magnitude, having a diameter of about 7700 miles, while that of the earth is a little more than 7900 miles. So nearly of the same size are the two planets that if we could view them from an equal distance we should be unable, without the aid of instruments of measurement, to detect any difference between them. The substance of Venus is slightly lighter, bulk for bulk, than that which composes the earth; but the difference in this respect is so little that again it would require special examination to distinguish by weight between a cubic foot of the soil of Venus and an equal amount of the soil of the earth. It follows that on Venus the force of gravitation or the weight of bodies does not greatly differ from that on the earth. If we could step upon Venus we should find that we had parted with a few pounds weight, but the difference would not be very noticeable, except perhaps on the race track.

But this planet, so like the earth in many respects, is very different from our globe in its situation. The earth's distance from the sun is 93,000,000 miles; the distance of Venus from the sun is 67,000,000 miles. This difference becomes a matter of great importance when we consider the effects which the sun produces upon the two planets. Heat and light, as everybody knows, vary inversely as the square of the distance. When we compare the square of the earth's distance from the sun with the square of Venus's distance, we find that the former is about double the latter. This means that Venus, on the average, gets twice as much heat and light from the sun as the earth gets.

But, on the other hand, we know that all forms of life depend for their existence upon the radiant energy of the sun. On the earth, when we pass from the artic regions toward the equator, we find the number of living forms and the variety and intensity of the manifestations of life continually increasing, until, in the equatorial zone, earth, sea, and air are all crowded with animate and growing things. The touch of the sun everywhere produces life, and in the absence of sunshine is death. It is but natural to infer that Venus, having twice as much sunshine as the earth, should be proportionately more crowded with animal and vegetable inhabitants, and that the intensity of life there should be correspondingly greater. Some geologists have thought that there was a time when the climate of the earth was so hot that tropical plants and beasts lived abundantly around the poles. A similar condition of things might be supposed now to prevail upon Venus.—Harper's Round Table.

To Raise Sheep in Michigan.

The first extensive attempt ever made at sheep raising in the upper peninsula has just been begun as an experiment by the Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Company on its lands near Negaunee, in Marquette. The company owns thousands of acres of land, most of which is not in use and probably will not be for years. At present it is not even paying taxes. After careful deliberation the management has come to the conclusion that there is money in raising sheep. As a secondary consideration it wishes to demonstrate the feasibility of sheep raising here and introduce a new industry to the farmers of this region. The first lot of sheep for the new ranch as just arrived from the Chicago market. There were 240 in all. During the first few years there will not be many killed, as it is the intention to increase the flock to at least 2,000. Some farming will have to be done as an adjunct to the sheep raising. All the feed necessary to carry the sheep during the Winter is to be raised on the ranch. Large barns will be built for the protection of the stock, and also for storing hay and grain.

New Use for Skimmed Milk.

An ingenious mind has made the discovery that an excellent sizing for glazing fine paper can be made from skimmed milk in place of the expensive glue formerly used. The skimmed milk to be used in this way is put in a vat, treated with chemicals and heated until curd is found; the curd is then washed, pressed and conveyed to the headquarters plant. Here it is ground fine and put in a large and improved drying kiln, where it is dried in about twelve hours; then it is bagged and is ready for shipment—Demorest's Family Magazine.

Barren Lands Redeemed.

The sandy lands of Eastern Carolina, which heretofore have been deemed too poor for any kind of cultivation and have been growing up in weeds and briars, are now being planted with tobacco. This has been going on for several years, and by the free use of tobacco fertilizers, made specially for this crop, this land produces a fine grade of bright, golden tobacco in sufficient quantity to make it a money making crop. The area in tobacco is being increased every year, and these old poor lands are now valuable property.

There are forty-seven Chinese temples in the United States.

J. R. Cosper at Rest

James R. Cosper died at the home of Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh, last evening at 9:30, passing into eternal rest like a tired child falling asleep. He had been growing weaker for some time, the result not only of sickness, but of old age, as he was nearly 86. The funeral will be at Union Chapel, near his old home, at 10:30 Friday, Feb. 3. They start from the residence here, at 9 a. m. Rev. Guild will conduct the services, and the interment will be in the cemetery near there.

OBITUARY

Rosa May Lockwood daughther of Mr. and Mrs Morton Lockwood, was born April 5, 1889, and died January 30, 1899, at the age of 9 years, 9 months and 25 days.

After several weeks of patient suffering, she passed peacefully away. She was a sweet child, of most lovable disposition, and was beloved by all who knew her. Her family have the profound sympathy of all, in this sad bereavement. She leaves to mourn her early death, a mother and father, two brothers and two sisters besides many friends.

The funeral will be from the Lutheran church tomorrow Feb. 1, at 2:30 p. m., the services being conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. D. Brosy. The interment will be in Woodlawn.

Too Previous.

The Editor of the Silver Dawn at Waterloo is evidently laboring under a mistake, when he couples Auditor Seiler with Senator Nusbaum in the preparation and advocacy of the bill to restrict the number and length of the special sessions held by the Boards of County Commissioners. Auditor Seiler knew nothing of the bill till he saw it in the papers and has not yet read it through. He has not had any talk with Senator Nusbaum on the matter, and feels that dragging him into this matter was an utterly uncalled for matter. That much good can be accomplished by the bill, he readily admits, as do people all over the state But that is all the interest he has in it, the same interest that every citizen has, who desires good management on the part of every officer, township, county or state.

An Enormous Business.

A. B. Walsworth, in a recent conversation, gave us some facts that were surprising, in regard to the vast business of the stock dealers in Chicago, such as the Armours and the Swifts.

Swift & Co., did last year a business amounting to 150 million dollars. They paid out to help alone, over 6½ millions. Their records show that they slaughtered, of cattle, 1,437,844; of sheep, 2,658,951; of hogs, 3,928,659.

If these cattle were housed in a double row of stalls, the building that covered them would be 544½ miles long.

The sheep would require a shed with a double row of pens, 257½ miles long.

The hogs will require a pen 558 miles long.

The by-products of the Swift establishments, including such things as wool, neatsfoot oil, glue, butterine, tallow, grease, oil, lard, hides and fertilizers amounted to 484,141,131 lbs. This, if loaded two tons to a wagon would make a wagon train 680½ miles long, and require 60,437 horses to move it.

Mail Robbery at Garrett

A strange story is told of a thing that occurred at Garrett Friday afternoon, and one that has set the detectives of the company and of Uncle Sam to work at a lively rate.

It appears that the usual batch of mail sacks was got ready for the west bound train, No. 47 and placed on the truck ready to load into the mail car, when it came in. In some way, these sacks, or at least one of them was spirited away. Reports at this point differ. One account is that the mail sacks properly labeled for No. 47, were put into the mail car and taken from the car. At all events, the next we hear of them is, that John Stagger whose home is in Auburn, discovered a lot of papers as he was coming home through "Dutchtown" this side of Garrett. He gathered up some of the papers, and finding they were drafts, postal orders and express orders, he brought all he could find, to the Junction and from there telegraphed back to Garrett. The bank officers and postoffice officials had him come over, and they at once recognised the papers they had so recently made out. Mr. Riley, the Postal operator here, went over with Mr. Stagger. The railway and Postoffice detectives were at once put to work to find out who did the mischief, but at present do not seem to have succeeded. The man who put the sacks on the truck insists they were not taken from him. It is believed the value of the papers taken was about $2300, but the thieves did not reap much benefit from their thieving as they were afraid to try using the drafts etc, for fear of detection, and so threw them away.

HOME FROM CUBA.

An Auburn Business Man's Experience in the Queen of the Antilles.

W. H. McIntyre one of the proprietors of the Kiblinger factory reached home Saturday evening after an absence of about a month, in the south a half of which was spent in Cuba. He went first to Little Rock to visit his family which is passing the winter there. January 2nd he left Little Rock, enroute to Cuba. He left the United States from Tampa, the 4th, and landed at Havana soon after the city had been evacuated by the Spaniards. The city then was almost free from soldiers, the few regiments of Americans that had landed, had marched through the city and after taking formal possession, had gone into camp a short distance out of the city. There were left in town only a small guard, absolutely necessary to secure good order and the safety of life and property. In Mr. McIntyre's party besides himself, were P. J. Lockwood, of Washington, D. C., a gentleman from Chicago and another from New York. On landing, they sought a hotel and at once realized they were in a foreign country, though only 100 miles from their own shores. They went to one of the best hotels, and as all the entrances looked alike they could not tell which was the one where they would find the office. Each man they asked shook his head, gesticulated earnestly and led them somewhere—to the wrong place, every time. At last they found the long sought office. There no one spoke English but a lad, who received their requests and translated to the hotel clerk, so at last they were located. From there they went to such points as they could reach during a stay of about two weeks. But they had learned the need of an interpreter so they hired a man who could speak both English and Spanish, and then he went every where they went. We can give but a small amount of the many intensely interesting things they saw and learned. They took a train east to Matanzas, and we believe to Cardenas. The road bed is good, but the rolling stock is in a frightful condition. They have first, second and third-class cars, and the first-class is such as we would not travel in at home The superintendent of the line, was with them, however, and gave them all possible attention. Another trip was to the other end of the island, going by train, west into the province of Pinar del Rio. In all their trips they noticed the wasted plantations which there grow up to cane and other bushes in one season, if not cultivated, showing that the soil is very rich. The plantations have much of them been ruined for the time, and it will take several years of peac, to make good tht ravages of war.

The surface of Cuba in general is rough though in places may be found some level ground. The fields that have been tilled for hundreds of years are still rich though never a pound of fertilizer has been put on them. But those that have been laid waste, will have to be cleared and subdued again.

They visited the American camps and saw our soldiers. They found them in pleasant surroundings, and as comfortable as soldiers usually are. But there is a great deal of sickness, a few cases being small pox. He went to the camps of both Indiana regiments, but as they are not from this part of the state, except the company from Columbia City, he did not find acquaintances. The soldiers are kept in camp and go to town but little. There are so many in some of the camps who will get drunk if they have a chance, that some are in the guard house in all the camps visited. He says this thing of getting drunk has become a disgrace. The Cubans and Spaniards drink, but do not get drunk.

The party went out to the cemetery where the unfortunate sailors of the Maine are buried. Each one has a small flag at the grave to designate where an American is buried. Grand monuments are in this cemetery, but what struck them verv disagreeably was a huge receptacle, or pile, of human bones, the ghastly skulls being prominent. It was explained to the party, that cemetery lots were not sold there, but the lots are leased or rented. Rent is paid for six months in advance. But if the rent is ever unpaid, the dead are taken up and thrown into the big pile, and the ground rented to some one else. This disgusting practice does not seem to strike the Spaniards as at all out of the way. They are used to it. But it is a common practice now, for American soldiers to carry off some of these gruesome relics and send them home to their friends.

The city of Havana is very beautiful and in some ways attractive, but there still remains a great deal of filth, and there is considerable sickness including some cases of yellow fever.

The party visited many points of interest including the great fortresses of Cabanas and Morro Castle on the harbor, and which are the chief defenses of the bay and city. It was hard work to get a permit to visit the fortifications, especially Morro Castle, which is on a rocky point at the mouth of the bay. It struck the party as a remarkable thing to see this fortress, one of the strongest and most important in the world, now in charge of two solitary American soldiers. They were regulars and seemed to feel their ability to take care of the big pile of stone and mortar. Mr. McIntyre secured as a relic, a fine piece of coral rock, that was lying by one of the gates. They came away by taking a boat across the bay, and saved much red tape delay of going back by the way they came through various guards along the fortifications that cover the peninsula from Morro around to the city.

The party were not favorably impressed with the cooking and fare in Havana and other Cuban Cities. The most of their dishes are too highly seasoned for Northern tastes. Garlic and red pepper seem to be more abundant than salt. The best food they had was fresh eggs. The butter which is all brought from Holland, is excellent. Fairly good beef comes from Mexico. They had good coffee. The hotels give really but two meals a day. But in the morning, on rising about seven or eight, you are given a cup of coffee and some oranges. At about 11 to 12 they serve the first full meal, or breakfastfast, and at four to six in the afternoon comes the last meal, which is dinner. The rates at the best hotels will be about $4 a day. The rooms are not extra good, but fairly comfortable The floors are cement, but even such cannot entirely keep out the various bugs and insects to be found in a warm climate. It was observed that often the bed posts stood in little pans, which had water or kerosene in them, so as "to catch the bugs comin' and goin'" as the saying is.

(CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

The Specialty Company.

The deal by which the Specialty Buggy Co. will have the lease of the Grogg & Kandel factory near the Lake Shore freight house, has been completed, and they will move in there at once. The stoves for keeping the building warm are being put in position now. The company will manufacture special jobs, such as piano wagons, light delivery wagons for various lines of business, and will make a rig especially for retail dealers to use to carry buggies over the country for sale. This will insure their good condition much better than the present way of hauling them around hitched together in a string. At this factory any sort of a special outfit needed may be had. It will be a great convenience for many lines of business and keep at home considerable sums of money that have heretofore gone elsewhere.

Twice Surprised.

About a dozen ladies of the Degree of Honor went over into East Auburn Saturday evening, and surprised Mr. and Mrs. Rhodefer, who are going to move into the country tomorrow or next day. There were a dozen or so of them and they found Mr. and Mrs. R had retired for the night. However all had a nice time, and besides they gave a handsome present of China to Mrs. R. The second surprise came on starting home. Mrs. Sam Brandon and her two children had come from the country in a buggy, and now the horse was nowhere to be seen. So they had to walk home. We have not learned whether the horse went home or not.

BROWN COUNTY INSTITUTE.

And Brown County as Seen by a DeKalb County Farmer.

The following letter from Cal. Huselman is published in the Farmers' Guide of Jan. 14th, and will be found interesting:

Who has not heard of Brown county in our state? Who has not heard it said many times that Brown county is the only county in Indiana that has no railroad within her borders? Not long since in conversation with a gentleman we spoke of Brown county and at once we were informed that Brown county was the only county in the state that had no railroad and that very few of the citizens of Brown county could read or write, and many other statements calculated to lead one to think that Brown county was certainly not only brown, but sere and ancient.

It was our good fortune not long since to visit this noted county and meet its farmers in institute work. Early on the morning of December 27, we alighted from the "limited" at Columbus, Indiana. An early breakfast, and at 6 a. m., we were ready for the twenty miles of hills and vales that lie between the capitals of Bartholomew and Brown counties. Like the Star of Empire, we wended our way westward and occasionally upward.

The first few miles we had very good roads and our carriage rolled along at good speed. The air was sharp and frosty, and the mercury standing at 6 degrees, with a steady breeze blowing in our faces "A good morning for snipe," suggested the driver as we tucked ourselves into several thicknesses of robes. "One thing surely, cannot be said against Brown county this morning," suggested the scribe. "What is that?" inquired the driver. "Mosquitoes ond gnats," said the pencil pusher. Even so. Six miles out and we come to our first hills. "This is Brown county is it?" "No, said the driver," this is Bartholomew county. Brown county is not so hilly."

Six miles more of hills, rocks, ravines and streams and we cross a road that is so only in name and the driver points it out and says, "Brown county line. This is the head waters of salt creek." "Where is salt river, the historic stream that so many would-be statesman have sailed?" asked we "That begins down at Nashville." This was one distinction for Brown county that we had never heard, so if it will ever be necessary for us to take a journey up "salt river" we will know where to go to embark.

Brown county is very near the center of population at this time, as in 1890 it was in the county east of Brown. There are seventeen counties in Indiana smaller in area than Brown and three others exactly the same, 330 square miles. There were five counties in the last census year that ranked below Brown in population. The oft repeated tale that Brown is the only county without a railroad is as far from the truth as many other statements made about this county and her good people. Switzerland and Ohio counties have no railroads within their borders and Perry has but six miles of railroad.

At ten o'clock we drew rein in front of the Nashville house and proceeded to the court house immediately, as mine host said. "They are waiting for you." Here we found an audience of at least one hundred men and women. Each one seemed glad that the speakers had come and Prof. W. C. Latta set the ball rolling in one of his practical and suggestive lectures. Next we talked on farm chemistry and were surprised to find men in Brown county that could answer questions readily on practical farm chemistry.

Following adjournment was one of the good old fashioned all-around hand shakes. No stiff formalities or introductions with the mere mention of names not to be remembered. In that half hour we forgot that we were twenty miles from a railroad station and that there was neither a telegraph nor a telephone in the town or near it. These people were glad to meet us. They are honest, sincere, truthful and friendly. They are intelligent, temperate, frugal and industrious. They live for each other. They have made mistakes in this county as many other, but they are eager to learn of their mistakes and eager to correct them. Brown county is not a grain growing county. Much of it should never have been plowed. It should be grazed. Blue grass and orchard grass do splendidly for permanent pastures. Clover does well. corn and wheat can be grown on the less rolling lands, but the future greatness of Brown county lies in her fruit. It is the natural home of the apple, the peach and the pear No finer fruit can be grown on earth than the apples that grow here. Many thousands of trees have been planted the past few years and tens of thousands will go in this coming spring.

The ridges and valleys cross the county nearly east and west and this gives many north hillsides for apples and south slopes for peaches. Pears do well also. All the bush fruits grow to perfection.

Many of the more pretentious counties of Indiana could take many useful lessons from Brown county and her people. There is not a licensed liquor saloon in the county. Her per cent of illiteracy was lower in 1890 than several other counties. A very large per cent of her population is native born; and patriotism and love of kindred and home are very strong. The court house, a modest brick structure erected some thirty years ago, is used but very little All the business of the court is done in less than six days at some of the "terms." Divorces are rare and convictions excepting for petty violations are the exception. The jail, which is a two-story log structure, is seldom occupied and no prisoner has ever escaped from its modest yet firm confines. It was without an occupant at the time of our visit. No saloons, but little court and scarcely a need for a jail in Brown, the Alpine region of Indiana. In this respect we envy thee.

United States as a Naval Power.

In about two years the United States navy will be the fourth largest in the world, being surpassed only by those of Great Britain, France, and Russia. Within the next thirty months the United States navy will be greatly strengthened by the addition of eight battle-ships, four monitors, twenty-six torpedo-boats, sixteen torpedo-boat destroyers, and one submarine torpedo-boat. This will give a numerical increase of twelve armored ships and thirty-three torpedo-boat destroyers, and aggregate a fleet of thirteen battle-ships, two armored cruisers, one armored ram and ten monitors, or twenty-six vessels in the armored class intended for the line of battle, either off shore or along the coast and in harbors. In addition there are thirteen single-turret monitors of old design and doubtful value. In the cruiser class there are thirteen protected cruisers, three unprotected cruisers, twelve steel gunboats and seven composite gunboats. Two other vessels—the Vesuvius and the Dolphin—are in a special class, and one of the gunboats—the Chesapeake—is classed as a training vessel. All of these, except the monitors specified, are modern steel vessels of fine efficiency. They will constitute a fighting force of twenty-six armored vessels, thirty-five unarmored and forty-nine torpedo craft.

Hook Swinging in India.

Hook swinging—the swinging of religious enthusiasts from hooks thrust through their flesh—is still practiced in India. In one place twelve couples recently underwent this cruel treatment to make a Hindu holiday, and one of the men lost his life by a fall.

Weekly Club Notes

The L. L. C. held a very interesting session on Saturday at the home of Mrs Josie Brown. The subject "Greater New York" was introduced by the leader, Mrs. Mabel Hodge, in a pleasing and able manner, and was followed by Mrs. Wildred Olds with a paper entitled, "Historic Haunts and Homes of New York City" which was full of interest and recalled the stories of olden times when the city was a small Dutch town. "New York City from a Cable Car" was the title of a paper by Mrs. Mary F Rose, and gave glimpses of the city in all its phases, good and bad, lovely and unlovely as might be seen from a swiftly moving car. "The Brooklyn Navy Yard" was the subject of a paper by Mrs. Wilson. This was a very timely subject as we have so lately become interested in the naval affairs of our nation. The program closed with an interesting sketch of the 'Great Men and Women of New York City" by Mrs. Eckhart. Current events were then given and when the subject of Cuba was reached, Miss McTighe gave some interesting notes from letters by W. H. McIntyre who has been to Havana. Preparations were completed by the committee for Guest Day, one guest being allowed each member, and the meeting to be held in the pleasant home of Mrs. Brown next Saturday afternoon.

The Culture Club met with Mrs. C C. Shaffer on Saturday instead of with Miss Laura Ober, account of sickness in the latter's home. The lesson "Latin Literature" was ably conducted by Mrs John Hebel in the absence of the regular leader, Mrs. M. E. Griswold who was not able to be present. An interesting paper, subject "How to Dress Our Children," was read by Mrs. J. J VanAuken. With the current events the session closed, to meet with Mrs. Roby next Saturday. An event of the meeting was the resignation of Mrs J. Y. W. McClellan who will soon remove to Fort Wayne. Mrs. McClellan has been an able and faithful member for a number of years, and the ladies regret very much to lose her. They made her an associate member and hope to have her with them often.

The Wednesday Reading Club met with Mrs. H. R. Culberteon and spent a very pleasant afternoon. While one of the members read several chapters the rest of the number were busy working up material to be used at the Art Loan and Fair to be given by the Auburn Military Band in the near future. The ladies of the club are very active in this good work and very much interested in its success. They meet this week with Mrs. Laura Zent.

The "Minerva Club" of Waterloo celebrated its 15th anniversary on last Tuesday evening at the Opera House. A very enjoyable evening was spent by those so fortunate as to have an invitation. The Minerva Club is next to the oldest club in this northeast corner in of the state, the L. L. C. of Auburn being the older by nearly two years.

GOLD IN CUBAN SEAS.

MILLIONS OF TREASURE LEFT BY SPAIN.

Wrecks with $6,200,000 in Gold and Ninety-four Tons of Silver—Official Records Give Details and Accurate Location of Sunken Treasure Ships.

Our new islands in the West Indies furnish one opportunity for American speculative genius that has been curiously overlooked. On the submerged rocks and reefs and in the dangerous passages around Cuba and Porto Rico is untold wealth—millions of dollars in gold coin, silver bars, and jewels. In the past Spain's rapacious rule has prevented the recovery of much of this treasure, although several men have been made millionaires by the findings of divers in Cuban waters.

During the early years of Spain's rule in the new world hundreds of galleons sailed yearly from Mexico and the shores of South America for Spain, stopping at the ports of Cuba and passing out into the Atlantic through the Windward passage. For more than a century there was a close rivalry between the buccaneers and the hurricanes to see which could sink the greater number of these treasure fleets. In many cases the location of the wrecks is now definitely known, while in many others the records at Madrid and at Havana show the location only approximately. West Indian waters outside of the harbors are exceedingly clear, so that it is oftentimes possible to see to the depth of eighteen or twenty feet, making it easy for divers to make the necessary exploration. Indeed, with some of the recently invented submarine boats—such a boat, for instance, as Simon Lake's Argonaut, which crawls on the bottom of the sea—it would be a comparatively easy task to prowl around on the bottom of the sea and discover these old wrecks and loot them of their gold.

A little research into the musty records of Madrid shows that during the early part of the seventeenth century over $30,000,000 worth of silver alone was shipped for Spain. During the latter part of the seventeenth century one mine, Valenciana of Guanzuato, employed 4,000 slaves, and the company owning it lost $1,000,000 every year by pirates and accidents at sea without in the least impairing its credit in European markets. Most of these enormous losses strew the ocean bottom around the West Indian islands. A careful search of old Spanish records would reveal the approximate location of scores of the treasure wrecks; so that they could be visited with very little difficulty.

East of the Isle of Pines are the Gardinillos, or famous Jardine rocks, where lies a whole fleet of good ships. It was here that the daring buccaneer captain, Barthelome Portugues, lost the richest prize he ever took in his adventurous career, and it lies there today, awaiting the lucky submarine explorer. The account of the wreck in the old books is circumstantial.

Bartelome Portugues had fitted out a small three-pounder vessel at Golpho Triste, on the Gulf of Campeachy, and with a crew of thirty men he had captured a treasure galleon bound from Carthagenia to Havana. It was a lucky adventure. The inventory of the ship's goods showed over $100,000 worth of gold and silver bullion, with as much more in coin. Portugues set his sails for Tortuga, but off the Isle of Pines a hurricane brought down venegeance upon him and carried him irresistibly on the Jardine rocks, and the galleon with all its treasure went down. Some of the hardy buccaneers escaped in a small boat to tell the story, but the gold and silver bullion for which they risked so much is still heaped in some hollow of that rock-bound bed of the sea. This treasure would pay richly for the recovery.

Another account of sunken treasure is told as a musty joke in a musty tome. In 1650 three canoes, manned by fifteen buccaneers, each crept around the western end of Cuba and came suddenly upon one of his majesty's treasure ships, bound from Caracas to Havana. They swarmed over the side of the great vessel like so many rats, and threw every Spaniard overboard. The uncouth victors ransacked the vessel for booty, but to their disgust found only a small quantity of wine in the officers' quarters, and in the hold a lot of grayish metal, which some wiseacre on board decided to be tin ore, and not wishing their newly acquired vessel to be laden with such trash, the leader ordered it to be thrown overboard; and there it lies to this day, not far from the Colorado banks, not less than fifteen tons of fine silver bars.

Three Millions in Bullion.

Another treasure wreck is the center of a most romantic and thrilling story of crime. In the year 1717 Charles Vane, a notorious pirate of the West Indies, captured about $80,000 in pieces of eight that were being taken by divers from one of five plateships that had gone down in a storm just east of Key West. The silver bars, as they were brought to the surface by divers, were stored in a little fort on the mainland to await the Guarducosta, which was carrying the treasure in installments to Havana. Vane learned of this and made a sudden descent upon the fort, captured the treasure, rowed out to the vessel where the divers were at work, captured the ship, and sailed away, leaving the destitute crew and divers marooned on the barren key. The plate fleet of five galleons, on which these divers were working, was carrying $4,000,000 in bullion when it was wrecked, and less than one-fourth was recovered and captured by Vane. The old records estimate that $3,000,000 still remains in the sea at this point.

Somewhere a few miles southwest of the Isle of Pines there is a princely fortune in diamonds and gold awaiting the hunter who will travel the bottom of the Caribbean Sea and cast a searchlight carefully over the hulls of sunken treasure-ships. It is the remains of a Spanish ship in the royal service, whose commander, Don Sebastian Jeminez, touched at Santiago de Cuba in 1560, on his way to Spain. He was carrying the "King's fifth" from the silver mines of Guanabacoa, amounting to nearly twelve tons of good silver bars and unknown but immense quantities of personal treasure shipped by homegoing merchants. Upon sailing from Santiago he was caught in a terrific tempest, which tore the ship from its anchor and drove it upon the rocks within sight of the observers on the bluffs at Santiago. No vestige of the ship or crew was ever seen again. The galleon probably lies not far from the recent naval battle ground between the Spanish and American fleets, and it offers a princely lure for the bold submariner who will conduct a patient search.

Richest of the Treasure Ships.

Another, and probably the richest of all treasure-ships lost in the West Indies, was wrecked in 1679. A notable company of officials, ecclesiastics, and citizens of New Spain were on board, bound for Spain, at the invitation of the King. They carried the most costly personal possessions. The record tells of diamond crosses of enormous value and presents that were to win the favor of the great King of Spain, besides many tons of silver bullion, which was actually used as ballast. But many times richer than all these were the bars of gold which most of the officials were carrying with them back to Spain, in the hopes of living the rest of their days in distinguished opulence. One of the ladies, Dona Inez Escobedo, was taking with her an Indian slave as a present to her brother, who was Governor of one of the Canary Islands. The few negro slaves on board were servile enough, but the Indian, whose name the records do not give, was unmanageable and grew more obstinate at every punishment.

One morning, when the ship was a few leagues southeast of the Isle of Pines, the captain was horrified to find that water was pouring into the hold. He was about to descend through the hatchway to discover the cause, when the warning voice of the Indian declared that the first man to appear through the opening would be shot. Immediately those who gathered about heard the blows of a hatchet upon the bottom of the vessel. The horrible truth dawned upon them that the untamable Indian intended to escape slavery by wrecking the ship with all on board. They threw down a negro slave, believing that his body would receive the fire of the Indian, but everything above the hatches was plainly visible from the darkness below and the negro lay where he fell, stupefied with fear while the blows of the hatchet rained faster than ever, and the roar of the water constantly increased in volume. At last an old officer, Jose Nunez, sprang suddenly through the opening into the hold, waist-deep in water, and charged upon the Indian, sword in hand. He was followed by half a dozen others. They splashed around and finally found the Indian under a beam, beneath the water, where he had crawled and drowned himself. The most frantic efforts were made to stop the leak, but the ship sank, and it was with difficulty that even one boatload of the passengers was able to escape. Numerous attempts were made by the Spaniards to recover the treasure from this ship, but divers never could find it.

These are only a few of many score of similar wrecks the records of which can be found in the old Spanish reports and histories. They will indicate in some measure the enormous richness of these hitherto undescribed resources of our new possessions.

LOCATION OF SUNKEN TREASURE SHIPS.

Curious Devices.

To produce sleep by the aid of machinery is among the newest ideas. Sleep will sometimes result from fatigue of the eyes. Looking at trees or other objects as we rush along in the train will frequently "send us off." An ingenious gentleman has produced a machine for this purpose. It is a box surmounted by two fan-like panels, one above the other, revolving horizontally in opposite directions. These panels are studded with mirrors that throw upon the retina a vibrating flood of twinkling light. A similar effect is produced by staring at a bright ball placed high above the head, so that some slight strain is caused by staring at it. Another apparatus for causing drowsiness is formed of clamps for squeezing the arteries leading to the brain. The clamps remain in position for less than half a minute, and by that time the sufferer from insomnia has been placed in a state of somnolence by the decreased flow of blood to the brain. Still another method is to arrange an elastic battery in the bed so that a mild electric current acts upon the spine.

YESTERDAY AND TOMORROW MEET IN UNCLE SAM'S DOMAIN.

TODAY IS TOMORROW IN MANILA.

Paradox of Time Leads to All Sorts of Queer Consequences.

The war with Spain has been full of surprises, but perhaps its oddest outcome is that Uncle Sam now has all his holidays—not to mention other days—in duplicate. For this we have to thank Admiral Dewey. Territorial expansion has involved us in time expansion also. It is a curiously literal fulfilment of the Spaniard's dream of "manana." To-day is always to-morrow in the Philippines. This paradox of time leads to all sorts of queer consequences. The cablegrams received to-day are dated to-morrow. Only the breaking of the cable at Manila prevented our hearing of Dewey's victory the day before the battle was fought! If you should start at noon to-day and travel westward at the rate of about a thousand miles an hour, it would still be noon in every region you passed through all the way around the world. You would catch no glimpse of night; you would see no sunset and no sunrise. Yet when you reached home again, twenty-four hours later, it would be to-morrow. Proceeding in the opposite direction, you would, of course, get just the opposite result. You would gain a day, apparently.

The day of the month is a purely arbitrary arrangement. Nature does not define it. One day slides into another just as yarn goes round the reel. Yet it is necessary to make the change somewhere. So we draw an arbitrary line from north to south, on the one side of which it is to-day and on the other to-morrow, even in places not a mile apart. Theoretically there are points where a single step would carry you from Sunday noon into the middle of Monday. This is the so-called date line. Here all ships as they cross drop or repeat a day, throwing your diary sadly out of gear. Sailing eastward you go to bed Sunday evening, and when you rise in the morning it is still Sunday. Sailing toward the west, you find that you have slept till Tuesday, though you got only your usual rest. The true date line is rarely shown on maps. The accompanying chart is therefore worth preserving.

Roughly, the course of the line is as follows: Starting at the north pole it passes through Behring strait, then slants to the westward to clear the long horn formed by the Aleutian chain of islands and give them the same day as the United States, to which they belong. This accomplished, it returns to the one hundredth and eightieth meridian and drops southward into the tropics, keeping far to the east of the Japanese group and the Philippines, until it approaches the latitude of the Fiji Islands. As these and some neighboring groups belong to Great Britain and do business chiefly with her Australian colonies, the date line here makes a sudden swerve eastward, so as not to embarrass the local commerce with a change of day. When we purchased Alaska we annexed the Siberian day, which at that time cut into the American continent, though occupying a remote and desolate region. We quickly revised the date line, however, to suit our own convenience.

The case of the Philippines is singular. For a long time they enjoyed the American day, though the Asiatic calendar prevailed all around them, thus dragging the date line far out of its natural course. Some who ought to know better seem to suppose that this absurd practice is still maintained. A statement to that effect appeared in a well-known magazine not many years ago. But in 1844 the much-needed change was made by Narciso Claveria, then Governor General and Archbishop, the 31st of December of that year being dropped from the calendar.

A BARGAIN IN FUNERALS.

How Lilian Bell's Frivolity Shocks Her Serious English Cousins.

"We were going on a coach to Richmond with Julia and her husband," writes Lilian Bell in the Woman's Home Companion, describing in her inimitable way many amusing incidents of her stay and adventures in London.

"It was a lovely day. The trees were a mass of bloom, and everybody ought to have enjoyed himself. We were having a very good time of it among ourselves reading the absurd signs, until we noticed the three girls who sat opposite to us. They had serious faces, and long, consumptive teeth which they never succeeded in completely hiding. I knew just how they would look when they were dead; I knew that those two long front teeth would still—They listened to all we said without a flicker of the eyelashes. Occasionally they looked down at the size of Julia's little feet, and then involuntarily drew their own back out of sight.

"Presently I espied a sign, 'Funerals, for this week only, at half price.' I seized Julia's hand. 'Stop, oh, stop the coach and let's get a funeral! We may never have an opportunity to get a bargain in funerals again. And the sale lasts only one week. Everybody told me before I came away to get what I wanted at the moment I saw it; not to wait, thinking I would come back. So unless we order one now we may have to pay the full price. And a funeral would be such a good investment; it would keep forever. You'd never feel like using it before you actually needed it. Do let me get one now!'

"Of course, Julia, my sister, and Julia's husband were in gales of laughter; but what finished me off was to see three serious creatures opposite rise as if pulled by one string, look in an anxious way at me and then at the sign, while the teeth began to say to each other, 'What did she say? What does she mean? What does she want a funeral for?'"

AN OPTICAL DELUSION.

How the Eye May Be Deceived by Peculiarly Organized Cubes.

How many cubes are there in the lower figure? Six or seven? Six, you say? Look sharp at the two black squares at the bottom. Now there are seven! No, six!

This funny illusion is used by Professor Jastrow in his article on "The

AN OPTICAL DELUSION.

Mind's Eye," in the Popular Science Monthly. The smaller figures above the main one are guides. Look at the left-hand one and then glance down, and the larger figure always seems to contain six cubes. Look from the right-hand one down and you always see seven.

CRETE'S NEW FLAG.

The powers have now decided on the design the Cretan flag shall take. The ground of the flag will be blue, quartered by a white cross. The upper quarter next the staff will, however, be red, bearing a five-pointed star. The flag is a pretty one, but it cannot be said to have given entire satisfaction to all over whom it will float. A section of the Cretans grumble that the flag does not sufficiently recognize the Ottoman suzerainty.

Some Good Old Rules.

Don't read facing the light.

Don't read in the twilight or in badly-lighted rooms.

Don't hold the book nearer than is necessary for clear, sharp vision.

Don't think because you have good eyes that they will bear all kinds of abuse.

Don't make a practice of reading type too small to be seen readily at eighteen inches.

Don't read while lying down. It causes an unusual strain on some of the external or directing muscles.

Don't attempt to read in a train or other jolting vehicles. It is a strain on the directing muscles of the eye.

Don't use the eyes continuously at close work without occasionally resting them by looking off in the distance.

Don't read when very sleepy, as the accommodation and convergence are naturally relaxed, and the extra effort necessary to force the unruly members to work may be shown by a congestion of the blood-vessels of the eyeball.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

A German scientist says that athletes have not realized the value of sugar. Financiers have.

An Atlanta woman's life was saved by a steel corset stay, which intercepted a bullet. This is another blow at hygiene.

An alliance between the French authorities and the German emperor would probably lose but little time in earning the epithet "brilliant, but erratic."

It seems the barrel is to be utilized in a new industry. The ship built in cylinder form has been tested at Toronto and pronounced a success. By rolling over the waves the inventor expects to fill up his barrel.

For many years our corn-growers sought official channels and otherwise to increase our exports of this king of the grains. Last year we exported 206,967,000 bushels, a gain of 31,000,000 over 1897. If the foreigners learn the virtue of our corn bread and hoecakes they need never starve.

It is said Colonel San Martin, who commanded at Ponce, Porto Rico, and abandoned the place on the appearance of Gen. Miles has been sentenced to imprisonment for life at Ceuta. Funny people, these Spaniards. Toral was relieved of his commission for fighting, while Colonel Martin is sentenced for not fighting. Of such is the Kingdom of Spain.

Says the Cleveland Plain Dealer: In a number of avenues of industry in which for years Great Britain has regarded herself as supreme the United States has taken the lead. The lead, once taken, can never be regained by Great Britain. There was a time when its large resources of iron ore and coal gave it an advantage. Its resources in these materials, however, are nothing compared to those of the United States.

Mushroom juice is a sure cure against snake poison, according to M. Phisalix's statement, before the Paris Academie des Sciences. He has found that all mushrooms possess a substance which acts as an antitoxin against serpents. Unfortunately his preparation possesses toxic qualities of its own, which he has been unable to eliminate entirely. The patient, however, will have the satisfaction of knowing that it is not from snake bite that he dies.

As a man grows in fame, his post office address sometimes lengthens out considerably. The time was when the hero of the late campaign in the Soudan could have been addressed as Mr. Kitchener, or Lieutenant Kitchener, somewhere or other in Britain. Now, however, his address reads: Major General Sir Horatio Herbert Kitchener, K. C. B., K. C. M. G., R. E., Baron of Khartoum and of Aspall in the county of Suffolk. Such is fame—in England.

For the first time in its experience, Tooley street in London, was recently graced by the presence of royalty, the Duke of Cambridge, who is patiently conscientious in the performance of his share of public duties, having visited the district to open an institute. Tooley street, which runs on the south side of the Thames from London Bridge to the Tower Bridge, is the street rendered famous by the three tailors who presented a petition beginning: "We, the people of England." This busy street is full of warehouses, and from it run narrow side lanes, so dingy that gas burns in them by day as well as by night.

Broadly and historically, George Dewey's is the only name that gained a dominating and deathless splendor in the war with Spain, thinks the Troy, N. Y., Press. It entitles him to rank more nearly than any other figure in history with the hero of Trafalgar—the immortal Nelson. While other reputations are suffering from charges and countercharges, and circumstances that tend to divide and diminish credit for the West Indian victories, Dewey's decisive triumph was at once overwhelming and unique in the annuals of naval warfare. His past career and high character prove that he is worthy of his good fortune, and is, in truth, "the noblest Roman of them all."

There is no doubt that the superior marksmanship of our gunners has given an impetus to the naval training of Europe. The recent gun practice of the Mediterranean squadron was directly owing to aroused British interest resulting from comparisons not very flattering to the naval authorities, and the criticisms of the French navy are partly directed to a similar deficiency. Our excellence in this respect is owing not only to the discipline prescribed, but also to an aptitude inherited from earlier days when the rifle was the constant companion of the settler. There has never been a people among whom the struggle with nature in colonizing has developed so thoroughly a skill available in war and in practical invention for the arts of peace.

Seventy compositors in New York city were out of work as the result of the introduction of type-setting machines. Some of them were also out of health from confinement in the close air of printing-offices. After consultation as to what course they should pursue, these men agreed to undertake an experiment. Combining their resources, they hired a tract of land outside the city, employed an expert and practical market-gardener to superintend it, and then went to work under him—as laborers so far as the work of the farm went, but as joint masters of the profits. The experiment has been a success. The men have gained a good living, they have a prospect of profit, and every one among them who was ill has regained his health.

Japan's large Chinese war indemnity has not long protected her from financial stringency, but, on the contrary, has led her into expenditures which have percipitated it. The budget for the current fiscal year shows a deficiency of $37,000,000, which must be met by an increase of internal taxes, in which incomes are included. She has made great progress in all directions since the war, but now confronts the evidence that she has spent too much money in promoting it. It is not a novel experience, observes the New York Tribune. Other states have gone the same thing, and repeat the process periodically. The lesson of it, though not a money asset, may, however, be of some value, instructing her in the wisdom of keeping within her means, no matter how urgent the temptation to exceed them.

A curious case of complicated relationship exists in Oakland, Cal., as a result of a father and son marrying two sisters. Alinio Tolentino de Figueredo, aged fifty, married May Carmyn, an eighteen-year-old girl, and Wilfred A. de Figueredo, aged eighteen, married Katherine Carmyn, twenty-three years old. Thus the boy will be his father's brother-in-law; the two sisters will be sisters-in-law; the father's wife will be a step-mother to her brother-in-law; the son's wife will be the old gentleman's daughter-in-law, as well as sister-in-law. If children be born to the wife of the son, the grandfather will be their uncle, and should there be children in the father's home the son will be uncle and step-brother. The old man's wife will be aunt and step-grandmother to her sister's little ones.

One of the results of the late war with Spain has been an awakening of a new interest on the part of American manufacturers in the possibilities opened up to them in new territory which has come under the protection of the Stars and Stripes. The interest goes still further, and every commercial territory on the earth is being scrutinized by careful eyes. Foreign trade is one thing, but when it is backed up by a navy which has won for itself the esteem and profound respect of other nations it has an added significance. England's great foreign trade has been in a large measure owing to the naval power that was back of it. Dewey, Sampson, Schley and every officer and seaman of the American navy has combined to bring about results which will live for all time to come.

The President of the British Association last summer predicted the coming inadequacy of the world's wheat-producing capacity. The investigations resulting from his note of alarm have abundantly proven that his facts were inaccurate, his arguments fallacious and his fears groundless. The prediction of a future universal bread famine has no better basis than had the coal famine scare in England years ago, when it was demonstrated that within a century or so the wheels of industry would be stopped for lack of fuel to drive them. The fact is that Great Britain's resources of coal will not be exhausted for a long time to come; and the larger part of the vast sources of supply upon which she may easily and cheaply draw were unknown and undreamed of at the time that the speedy exhaustion of her fuel was predicted.

The rapid growth of the wealth of college Greek letter fraternities was emphasized a few days ago by the statement that the Kappa Alpha lodge at Cornell, Ithaca, N. Y., which was recently burned, was valued at $45,000 and that the total value of the fraternity property at the institution amounts to nearly half a million dollars. One fraternity lodge alone at Cornell is worth nearly $100,000. Williams College comes next to Cornell in the value of its fraternity property, and then Yale, Amherst, Wesleyan and Harvard, in the order mentioned, according to a recently published estimate. Since Columbia moved into her new building in New York city, the more prosperous fraternities have each made plans for extensive chapter houses. These houses are not owned by the fraternity at large, but by each individual chapter, and some of them are excellent illustrations of the work of our best known architects. It has been estimated that there are 8,000 or 9,000 college fraternity men in New York.

Something more than anxiety finds expression in articles published by the London papers regarding the consequences, present and to come, of the "conscientious scruples" law. This cowardly and disgraceful measure was enacted, not from a belief in its wisdom, but simply to make party capital by yielding to the clamor of certain ignorant and unreasonable fanatics, not numerous but voluble, who think that they think vaccination is a bad thing, and who either held, or pretended to hold, the balance of power in several Parliamentary districts. The medical profession were unanimous in denouncing the law while it was under consideration, and now that it has been in operation for a few months they are unanimous in asserting that all the evil effects expected of it have come, and that to-day England is in grave peril of a smallpox epidemic such as the country has not known since the time of Jenner. Not only have those who really had something faintly like "conscientious scruples" against vaccination availed themselves of the law's provisions, but a vast number of others have called their disinclination to spend a little money, or to take a little trouble, or to suffer a little inconvenience, "conscientious scruples against vaccination," and England is now full of people who will fall victims of smallpox the first time they are exposed to it.

Making Spurious Antique Coins.

"A physician of Gannat, Dr. Sahut," says the Revenue Scientifique, as translated in The Literary Digest, "has had occasion to observe a new so-called 'Paris-pointed' nail that had remained for several days in the gastro-intestinal tube of a child, and he has shown that the digestive juices acted on the smaller parts of the foreign body as to cause the edges and the point to disappear and that the brilliant metallic surface was replaced by a brownish tint. This demonstration will explain the methods used in Italy to make 'antique' medals supposed to date from the most ancient times. The people who made a living by this industry, it is said, are accustomed to cause large birds, such as peacocks, to swallow coarsely counterfeited coins of Tiberius or Caligula. After some time the birds excrete the coins, which have acquired a more or less perfect 'patina.' If the time has been too short the coin is sent on another gastro-intestinal trip, and this is kept up until the piece has acquired a look that permits of no possible doubt of its authenticity."

TRIAL OF GENERAL EAGAN.

Military Court-Martial Begins Its Work in Washington.

The board of army officers designated by the Secretary of War to sit as a court martial in the case of Brig. Gen. Charles P. Eagan, commissary general of subsistence, charged with conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman and conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline in connection with his testimony before the war investigating committee, met on Wednesday morning in Washington.

GEN. EAGAN.

Gen. Eagan exhibited no signs of nervousness, but the expression of his face and his manner clearly indicated that he realized that the trial involved consequences to him of the gravest character. At the conclusion of the reading of the charges, on being requested to plead to the specifications, he said "Not guilty," not denying, however, that the specifications set forth correctly part of the language used.

Judge Worthington, Gen. Eagan's counsel, said the specifications did the accused a great injustice in that the prosecution selected particular expressions without giving the context, and in one or more instances the specifications quoted began in the middle of a sentence. Continuing, Mr. Worthington said that he desired to state briefly to the court the substance of Gen. Eagan's defense. Whatever, said he, the court may thing of the propriety of the language used by Gen. Eagan before the war investigating committee, there was no doubt in his (Worthington's) mind that he was fully protected in using that language by the laws of the land. In addition to this, the President of the United States had instructed the war investigating committee to announce publicly that witnesses before that tribunal would be given immunity for whatever they might testify to. This was a solemn promise given by the President of the United States, and counsel had no doubt that the court would find that Gen. Eagan could not under these circumstances be held to answer to a military court martial for his language.

This is the first time in many years Washingtonians have had an opportunity to witness a court martial, and it was a rather spectacular event. The proceedings of the court were open to the public, and there was quite a demand for admission, but as the parlor in which the court met was small, no crowding was permitted and few people were admitted.

GREENE ON CUBAN NEEDS.

Says Soldiers Must Be Given Employment or Brigandage Follows.

The report of Maj. Gen. Francis V. Greene, who was until recently on special service in Cuba ever since the blockade of Havana was raised, has been made public. He reports that he found the equipment of the Cuban soldiers wretched, but thinks the soldiers themselves are fit to form a country constabulary. The officers, says the general, are intelligent and patriotic and their troops, if properly organized, possess all the elements of civil guardians. But should these not be utilized, the general fears that they will resort to a life of brigandage.

They lack food and clothing and can be turned either way by a breath of wind. Disbanded, they would take to the hills and give the American forces a great deal of annoyance. The general reports that about half of the Cuban forces desire to quit the lives of soldiers, return to their homes and go to work. But their homes are burned and their implements of agriculture destroyed. To remedy this he falls in with the idea of a popular loan to Cuba that will enable the island to pay off its soldiers, thus enabling them to return to their homes.

Gen. Greene strongly urges the prosecution of public works in Cuba, the employment of local labor thereon and a systematized endeavor to care for the orphans made by Weyler's cruel reconcentration policy, to the end that they may be useful citizens instead of vagabonds and profligates.

CUBANS THREATEN REVOLT.

Order by Governor General Brooke May Be Resisted.

The silence that is maintained by the department officials regarding the order from Governor General Brooke as to the expenditure of public moneys without the approval of the division commander has excited distrust among the volatile Cubans, who have learned of the order despite the decision of the officials not to publish it.

Under the caption, "The Boa Constrictor Tightening Its Coils," El Cubano of Santiago recently said that it was the intention of a number of Cubans to make a public demonstration against the order. It added that the feeling among many Cubans regarding the manner of protest was that the order should be resisted in the mountains by force of arms.

DEATH OF A. H. GARLAND.

Ex-Attorney-General Suffers Stroke While Addressing Court.

Ex-Attorney General Garland of Arkansas fell unconscious in the United States Supreme Court at Washington while addressing that tribunal in a case and died almost immediately. Death resulted from a stroke of apoplexy.

A. H. Garland was one of the old school of Southern statesmen, brought prominently to the fore in politics by the return of the Democrats to power in 1884 through the election of Grover Cleveland to the presidency. Mr. Garland was considered one of the ablest statesmen of the South and a lawyer of pre-eminent ability. He had served his State in the United States Senate and Mr. Cleveland appointed him Attorney General.

Bad as Boston.

The cyclist was a stranger in literary Fleet street. That was evident from the cautious manner in which he picked his way through the half-empty thoroughfare. It was evening. The penny-a-liner approached him.

"Sir," said he, "your beacon has ceased its functions."

"Sir!" gasped the cyclist.

"Your illuminator, I say, is shrouded in unmitigated oblivion."

"Really! but I don't quite——"

"The effulgence of your radiator has evanesced."

"My dear fellow! I——"

"The transversal ether oscillations in your incandenser have been discontinued."

Just then an unsophisticated little paper boy shouted across the street:

"Hey, mister, yer lamp's out!"

Sent Free to All.

Feminine Sisterliness.

"What made you lose your place in the line?"

"Because I wasn't going to be kissed by the lieutenant right after he smacked that odious, peppermint chewing Bagley girl!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Delegates representing a number of neighboring farmers in Clay County, Minnesota, who visited the Edmonton district of Western Canada last summer are evidently very well satisfied with the result of their trip. They think so well of the country that in addition to the privilege of obtaining a free homestead of 160 acres of land they have also purchased land. In a recent interview on the subject Messrs. C. E. and A. Hughes of Barnesville, Clay Co., say:

"We are well pleased with Western Canada. It is far ahead of what we expected. We find the climate to be warmer than we expected. As for the crops we have never seen anything that can compete with them. We have lived in Minnesota and have farmed some of what they count the best lands in the Red River Valley for ten years and have done very well in that part of the country, and have farms there at present free of all encumbrance, but believe that this country (Western Canada) is so much better that we have bought from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company one section of land northeast of Edmonton in the Beaver Hill district. We have traveled through that part of the country and have seen the grain in the granaries and the amount of land that it was taken off and find that they have grown as much as fifty bushels and over to the acre, and they say that this has not been a good year, and very little, if any, grain has been touched by the frost. Hay seems to be plentiful, and if you wish to put up log buildings you can get the logs within a few miles. Coal can be had at the mines for 75 cents per ton, or you can dig it yourself. Nearly all kinds of garden truck can be grown in abundance. We find everything that can be grown in good demand. The farmers tell us that they can get four and a half live weight per hundred for hogs, and for three-year-old steers from fifty to sixty dollars per head, providing they are good. We will move into that part of the country next summer. All the people in that part of the country seem satisfied, and we do not see any reason why they should not be so."

The Messrs. Hughes also stated that they would be very glad to afford anyone desiring particulars about the country they had visited the fullest information, on receiving inquiries at Barnesville, Clay County, before the 1st of June next, when, it is understood, they propose to return to the Edmonton district.

Joys of Peace.

"As soon as a soldier gets home he wants to do three things."

"What are they?"

"Eat a square meal, kiss his sweetheart and get his photograph taken."

PUTS SPAIN IN A HOLE

ACCEPTANCE OF AGUINALDO'S PLAN WOULD MEAN WAR.

Offers to Release His Prisoners on Almost Prohibitive Conditions—No Anxiety Felt in Washington Over Proclamation of Philippine Republic.

Having failed to secure any consideration in the United States, Aguinaldo is now trying desperately to secure the formal recognition by Spain of the republic of the Philippines, which he publicly proclaimed at Malolos, and he has managed affairs so shrewdly that Premier Sagasta finds himself in an awkward fix.

Advices from Manila say that Aguinaldo now offers to release his Spanish prisoners on the condition that Spain will recognize the independence of his self-styled republic and become its ally. He has also demanded recognition of the vatican and has invited the Pope to send a commission to the Philippines to negotiate for the release of the priests who are held by the insurgents. Greatly as Spain would like to see the civil and military prisoners of Aguinaldo set free, she has no desire to stir up any more trouble with the United States, and recognition of the Philippine republic would mean a renewal of hostilities.

AGUINALDO.

Washington officials are not moved by the reported threats of the Filipino junta in Europe to withdraw Agoncillo and his fellows from Washington if they are not speedily recognized officially. While Agoncillo has been well treated informally, he has not been recognized by the Government, and it may be stated positively that he will not be. The United States Government is pledged to endeavor to secure the Spanish prisoners' release and it will use every proper effort to do so, but it cannot be held to the performance of the impossible, must be allowed its own time and the use of what it deems the best means to accomplish the task.

It is not to be supposed for a moment that the Spanish Government, no matter how desirous of securing the release of the prisoners more speedily than could be accomplished through the efforts of the United States Government, will enter into any alliance with the insurgents.

FILIPINOS MAKE THREATS.

General Burgese Says 30,000 Are Under Arms and Will Fight.

Agoncillo, the Filipino representative in America, has received re-enforcements in the arrival of Jose Lozaro, Juan Luna and Capt. Marti Burgose, who expect to form a Philippine junta with Washington as headquarters.

Capt. Burgose says the delegates are under sealed orders from "President Aguinaldo of the Philippine republic, the great patriot and statesman." He declares that there are 30,000 Filipinos under arms, that they will not submit peacefully to the United States forces, and that their ability to resist is unquestioned. Spain could not conquer them, nor can the United States.

Mr. Lopez called at the State Department Tuesday afternoon and delivered to Secretary Hay the ultimatum recently forwarded by the Filipino chief. It is stated in the communication that unless this Government recognizes Agoncillo within ten days as the Philippine minister to the United States Aguinaldo will break off diplomatic and friendly relations between the Philippines and this country.

SAMPSON AND SCHLEY.

Long Wrangle in the Senate Over Their Proposed Advancement.

The contention between Sampson and Schley stirred up the Senate to such an extent on Monday that the peace treaty was forgotten and the Senators fought anew the great battle of Santiago, touched upon pending scandals in the army, deplored the opening of similar sores in the navy, and postponed all action on the President's advancement of Sampson and Schley for a period of twenty days. This conclusion was not reached, however, until the Senate, by a vote of 37 to 17, or exactly two to one, over the protests of Senators Chandler, Hale and Lodge, ordered the Secretary of the Navy to send to the Senate all the papers in the case of each of the commodores who had been advanced on account of conspicuous conduct.

This was the opening chapter of the struggle between the friends of the two admirals, and was embellished with several heated references to other officers who had or had not been advanced. The call for the papers shows that there are several Senators who believe that no harm will result from an investigation of all the facts and the transmission to the Senate of the information which led the President to advance Sampson ten numbers and Schley only eight.

REPORT ON CURRENCY LAWS.

Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures Reports.

The Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures reported to the House a bill for the revision of the banking and currency laws. The bill provides that the gold dollar shall be the standard of value in the United States; that all obligations of the United States are payable in gold unless otherwise stipulated, and that no more silver dollars shall be coined, except from the silver bullion now held in the treasury against the silver certificates or treasury notes issued under act of July 14, 1890. A division of redemption is provided for. The bill also provides for the gradual retirement of national bank notes and treasury notes.

CUBANS FIRE CANE FARMS.

Disgruntled Natives Try to Destroy Property in Cuba.

Col. Ray reported in Santiago that an attempt was made to burn the cane on the San Miguel sugar estates near Guantanamo. The property was saved by the arrival of two companies of the Third immunes. Reports from various quarters show that all the cane fires are the work of disgruntled Cubans, soldiers who have failed to get desirable offices. Bad feeling exists among the negroes in the Cuban army over the evident intention of the white Cubans to occupy the official places to the exclusion of the blacks.

THE 18-YEAR-OLD BROTHER.

He Needs Frequent Large Doses of Commendation from His Sister.

Your brother is not particularly handsome, and now that he is 18 years old you cannot deny that he is awkward, says the Ladies' Home Journal. He suggests to you a shape not unlike that of a spider, for he seems principally arms and legs, while he has wonderful ability in the way of stumbling when he ought to walk straight. The girl who tries to do right should be quick enough to realize that to make her brother more at ease in the general world she must clear from his mind any ideas he may have as to his own lack of beauty or grace. The boy of 18 usually needs a good dose of commendation, or else he believes that everybody is banded to scoff at him.

When he is introduced to a strange girl he doesn't know what to say, and yet she is a pretty girl, for she stands and looks at him and seems to convict him of being out of place, while he wishes that he were at home. He wishes again that he hadn't come to the party and he is about as awkward-looking and as unhappy as any boy of his age can be. The belle of the room gets rid of him with a great quickness, and he realizes that she is laughing at him as he sees her chatting and smiling with an older man. Then he grows bitter.

This is the time that his sister needs to bring all her sweet influence to bear upon him. She can ask her partner to take her over to her brother, and politely excuse herself as being engaged to her brother for the dance or promenade. She can make him grow to believe in himself, and soon may present him to some girl, less beautiful, perhaps, than the other, but one who knows how to encourage and make happy another girl's brother, because she has a brother and knows how tender the feelings of a boy are and how easily wounded.

A Thoughtful Rector.

"Cornhill" tells of the rector of a small country parish in the Midlands who had lived among his people a simple, unobtrusive life, which had endeared him to the hearts of those who knew him. In very cold weather he would invite the congregation to come and warm themselves before leaving the church. Under other conditions of weather this thoughtfulness for the comfort of his flock took a somewhat different form, and at the end of a half-hour's sermon he would sometimes say: "As the weather is still so inclement, I will, my dear friends, lengthen my discourse somewhat, in the hope that it may clear later."

Wanted to Escape.

A traveling medium who recently gave a seance in a Georgia town began by saying: "I have been requested by some of the men present to recall the spirits of their wives who have gone before. Keep perfectly quiet, friends—and in one moment they will be with you."

"John," whispered an old man in the audience, "gimme my hat—quick! I don't mind meetin' Molly in heaven, but I'll be durned if I want her to resume business on earth!"—New York Tribune.

Another Solar-Plexus Blow.

Softleigh—I—aw—am suah we are going to have a beastly hawd wintah, doncher know.

Miss Cutting—No, I'm sure I don't know. But why are you so sure of it?

Softleigh—Because I—aw—feel it in me bones.

Miss Cutting—Really? I wasn't aware you were a believer in the old goose-bone theory.

A very important commissioned officer of the regimental staff is the adjutant, whose title comes from adjutans, the present participle of the Latin verb adjutare (to assist), and whose province it is to aid his commander in the discharge of the details of his military duty. The records of the regiment are in his charge, he receives the returns from company commanders, receives and communicates orders, forms the parades, etc. His duties are multifarious and he is altogether the busiest officer of a regiment if he performs them all faithfully.

Something Very Soothing.

There is something very soothing in the use of St. Jacobs Oil for the cure of Neuralgia. It soothes the pain, while it strengthens and restores the weak nerves to a natural condition. It is prompt and sure.

Every reader and history critic will admit that of all Thomas Hood's works the two which stand pre-eminent are "The Song of the Shirt" and "The Bridge of Sighs." Yet these were written at the age of 46.

HEALTHY MATERNITY.

Two Grateful Women Tell of the Help They Have Received From Mrs. Pinkham.

The climax of life force in woman is capable motherhood.
The first requisite for a good mother is good health.
Health of body means health of the generative organs.

Read what Mrs. G. A. Nonnamaker, Bluffton, Ohio, says about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and how well it prepared her for maternity:

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—I must say a word in praise of your Vegetable Compound. I used three bottles of it when I was pregnant, and labor was not nearly as long as it was with my other babies; and my baby is so healthy to what the others were. I think every woman should use your Compound when pregnant, it will save them so much suffering and misery. I cannot say enough in praise of it. If ever I need medicine again, I shall use your Compound."

The most successful tonic known to medicine for women approaching maternity is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It is a safeguard for every woman who uses it, and the fullest benefit comes from its use with Mrs. Pinkham's advice freely offered to all women. Her address is Lynn, Mass.

Here is a convincing statement, bearing directly on this subject, from Mrs. E. Bishop, of 1846 Pacific St., Brooklyn, N. Y.:

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—I am a great believer in your Compound. I was almost despairing of ever again being well, as I was a great sufferer, and had been for years. I suffered from womb trouble, and had terrible blind fits. After writing to you I tried your Compound. The result was astonishing. I have used it and advocated it ever since. In childbirth it is a perfect boon. I have often said that I should like to have its merits thrown on the sky with a search-light, so that all women would read, and be convinced that there is a remedy for their sufferings."

The Knight Ditch Case

The people in Jackson and Concord townships are familiar with the Knight Drain case. It came up before the commissioners in March 1894 and again in June of the same year. Parties who claimed their lands would not be benefited brought in a strong remonstrance It was carried into court, where it was decided by Judge Adair that the ditch should go through. It was next sent to the supreme court which now after nearly four years confirms Judge Adair's decision, in these words:

18 262 Culbertson et al. vs. Knight et al. Dekalb C. C. Affirmed. Headley, J.

1. The fact that land near the line of a proposed public drain is high, and is already reached by ditches that carry off the surface water, does not conclusively establish that such land will not be benefited by the construction of the proposed drain.

2. Land through which a proposed public drain will not extend should yet be held benefited by whatever results from the construction of the drain would make it more desirable for tillage, of more desirable as a place of residence, or would otherwise make it more valuable in the general market.

3. Persons who discharge the water from their own lands upon the lands of others by means of artificial ditches are liable to an assessment to construct drains sufficient to carry the water away from the lands on which they have discharged it.

Coffee Production in Porto Rico

The territory which produces the most coffee is in the high and mountainous parts of the islands, along the central range, and here it is that the greatest need is felt for transportation facilities, the only existing means of communication being by horse roads or mule paths built by the residents. From the plantations where the coffee is gathered to the nearest towns on the coast whence the berries may be carried in ox-carts to the markets, carriage is effected, at the present time, on the backs of horses and mules, which can take only 200 pounds a trip These same horses bring back an equal quanity of provisions and merchandise for the subsistence and necessities of the laborers and other inhabitants of the interior. For this transportation on horses and mules $1 a hundred pounds, each way is paid from the points most distant, and 50 cents from the nearer points. There are at least 300 plantations along the same range, between Maricao, Yauco and Adjuntas,—Antonio Mattei Lluveras, in The Engineering Magazine for February.

Ice Companies.

It appears by a decision in the circuit court at Laporte, that an ice company must pay for use of the land that abuts on a lake or pond where they cut ice. The John Hilt Ice Company, cut ice on Pine Lake, and Zart owned land abutting on the water. He sued the company for damages and got $450. If this holds good, all the land owners about a lake can collect damages, or rent, whichever you choose to call it. It will knock the profits out of the business.

Douglas Kelley.

By the kindness of Doctor James Adams, we learn further particulars of this terrible tragedy. Mr. Kelley and his hired hand, Wm. Anthony were at work together, both cutting at the tree, and just over the fence near by were two men chopping for Free Kelley. So there were three witnesses of the tragedy. As the tree they were cutting, fell, the two men stepped back the other way as usual, and supposed they were safe. But the falling tree, which was a large one, caught on another, and twisted off a good sized limb and hurled it back. It had a forked end, one point striking Mr. Kelley on the head about at the top of the skull, and the other point passing down the face, grazing the right cheek. The men sprang to him and pulled the limb out of his head, he not making a motion or sign of life except that he breathed. The skull was crushed in and the brain torn and began oozing out. They hurried to the house for a team and took him home. They then went to Waterloo and got Dr. Darby, and also telephoned to Auburn for Dr. Adams and wife, the latter being Mr. Kelley's mother. Dr. Darby went out and did what he could, and also sent for Dr. Showalter. But nothing could be done. Dr. Adams and wife hurried up there and found him still breathing, but unconscious. He soon after, ceased breathing. There was no appearance of suffering. The funeral will be tomorrow, Jan. 27th, starting from the house at 10:00 a. m and going to the U. B church at Waterloo, where services will be held by the pastor, Rev. S. H. Yager, officiating. We believe the K. of P's of which he was a member will have charge of the services. The interment will be in Waterloo cemetery by the side of his father the late James D. Kelley.

As mentioned yesterday he leaves a wife and two young children, a boy and a girl. Their second child, a bright little boy, died from the effects of an accident on the evening of the presidential election, Nov. 3rd, 1896. He was standing near the table where the family were preparing to sit down to supper, when the hired girl brought in a teapot full of scalding hot tea. The little fellow caught hold of the teapot, pulled it over onto him, and as he was looking up, the boiling hot contents struck him in the face and a large amount went into his mouth and down his throat. He lived but a short time.

Mr. Kelley was born on the farm, on which he died, Nov. 12th, 1862, so that his age at death was 36 years, 2 months and 12 days. He was married to Dora Walker, daughter of Eli Walker, March 13th, 1892.

He was a man of the highest integrity and intelligence, active, industrious and kind hearted. A loving husband and father and a kind neighbor. Few men of his age would be so universally missed.

Robbed The Grave.

A startling incident, of which Mr. John Oliver of Philadelphia, was the subject, is narrated by him as follows: "I was in a most dreadful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in back and sides, no appetite—gradually growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up Fortunately, a friend advised trying 'Electric Bitters;' and to my great joy and surprise, the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. I know they saved my life, and robbed the grave of another victim" No one should fail to try them. Only 50cts., guaranteed, at H. B. McCord's Drugstore.

Now He's Off.

Sheriff Hathaway started off on the forenoon Wabash train for the south end of the, state. He went to take Gnagy, the man who stole clover seed in Franklin township, to start in on his one year term at the reformatory prison at Jeffersonville. He would have started a day or two ago, but Gnagy was sick, or at least he pretended to be.

In Polynesia.

A Polynesian bridegroom is conspicuous by his absence during the wedding festivities. As soon as negotiations are opened with the family of his bride, the young man is "sent into the bush," and there he is obliged to stay until the wedding ceremonies are completed.

Unnecessary.

"My dear," said the legislator's wife, "some of this speech doesn't make sense." "That's all right," he answered, taking the manuscript out of her hand and putting it into his traveling bag; "it's just a filibustering speech. It doesn't have to."—Washington Star.

At It Again.

She Who Had Been Abroad.—And what do you think? At Monte Carlo I placed a 5-franc piece on the number of my age on the roulette board and won! She Who Had Not Been Abroad—But, dear, there are only thirty-six numbers in roulette.—Indianapolis Journal.

Why They Tittered.

At a Unitarian church not far from Boston last Sunday, after a very spiritual sermon, a notice was sent up and read by the preacher as follows: "All pie plates left after the fair should be sent to Mrs. Lovejoy." The congregation tittered audibly.

Defined.

"I wonder why they call them 'raw recruits?'" "Oh, I suppose because so many of them seem to be half-baked."

A MOST WONDERFUL CURE.

Eminent Physicians Pronounced It Consumption.

Dr. C. D. Warner, Coldwater, Mich.

Dear Sir:—I have received great benefit from your White Wine of Tar Syrup. I had a cough and the doctors gave up all hopes of my recovery and pronounced it consumption; I thought that it was death for me. I tried everything that I could hear of. Finally one of my friends prevailed upon me to use your White Wine of Tar Syrup. I took one and one half bottles and am cured entirely Such medicine I can recommend to those who are afflicted as I was Cured Bronchial Trouble.

CHAS. E. DAVIS, 1704 W. Congress St. writes, I have suffered for years with bronchial trouble and have tried many kinds of medicines without relief until I began taking Foley's Honey and Tar, which cured me. It saved me doctor bills this winter. 25 cents.

No Rush About It.

Republican papers are putting forward the name of D. L. Ballou, of Lagrange as a good one for the democratic candidate for congress next time. They say he is a good man. That is true in a general sense. But democrats have not probably forgotten the treachery of Mr. Ballou to Hon. Robert Lowry, and when the returns came in showing Lowry's defeat, he sent a a dispatch to the successful republican J. B. White "in the name of 1000 democrats who rejoice in your election." Oh, no. There is no great rush on the part of anybody to put Ballou up for congress, unless it is Ballou himself and a few republicans who feel grateful for the service he did them. And if they are really grateful, why not run him themselves. Democrats have no great cause to be grateful.

Lies About the West.

A yarn comes from the far west about a slot machine bearing the announcement "Put a quarter in the slot and get a surprise." Sometimes a tenderfoot who thinks he wants a surprise drops in a quarter. He gets the surprise all right, for the mechanism points a loaded revolver at him and displays this notice: "Drop in all your money and your watch, or I'll explode in thirty seconds."—New York Tribune.

Another Way to Go.

"Miss Hiland—er—I know what I want to say, but—er—I don't know how to express myself," began Mr. Homewood. "Express yourself, Mr. Homewood," Miss Hiland cut in. "won't the railroad people let you travel as a first-class passenger?"—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

She Knew Him.

Mrs. Potts—It was rather late when you came home last night. Where were you? Mr. Potts—Why, my dear, Wednesday night is the regular weekly lodge meeting night, you know, and—Mrs. Potts—Yes, of course I know; but did you win or lose?

THE "MAINE" ENTERING HAVANA HARBOR

The Spanish-American War.

The last vestige of Spain's western empire has disappeared. The expulsion of Spain from America and from the Philippines is the fit conclusion of the long strife between the people who stood for civil and religious freedom and those who stood for bigotry and tyranny as hideous in their action as any which have ever cursed humanity. The work has been a long one, but Spain at last is confined practically to her peninsula, where her people can do as they please with one another, but whence they can trouble others no more. Spain has ceased to rule. Her once vast empire has gone, because she has proved herself unfit to govern, and for the unfit among nations there is no pity in the relentless worldforces which shape the destinies of mankind.

We are prone to assign as the chief reasons for the war with Spain the cruel treatment of the Cubans and the destruction of our battle-ship in Havana Harbor. At least the greater number of magazine and newspaper articles called forth by the way have discussed these causes as if they were alone responsible. It is natural that they should be most prominent, because they were the immediate causes and affected the United States directly But the underlying causes of the war are as old as the United States itself, and have been steadily working towards the results achieved in the battles of Manila and Santiago for several centuries. In the February issue of Harper's Magazine appears the first installment of a calm and unprejudiced history of the late war, written by Senator Henry Cabot Lodge. With a dispassionateness that is truly historical he presents the history of Cuba from the first insurrection of the natives to the time the Maine steamed into Havana Harbor, to meet her fate a few days later at the hands of the treacherous Spaniards.

Dr. Luella Day Underhill

Medical Supt. Chicago Working Woman's Home writes as follows: "As a laxative and remedy for ailment of stomach and bowels we have found nothing that acts so well as your Dr. Caldwe l's Syrup Pepsin. We have found it invaluable in cases of sick headache and can heartily recommend it to all sufferers from such trouble."

To Whom It May Concern.

Strong words of indorsement for Pe-ru-na, and for the manufacturers of Pe-ru-na, from prominent officials of its home city.

Hon. Samuel L. Black, Mayor of Columbus, O., whose picture adjoins this paragraph, writes the following letter:

Executive Dept., City of Columbus.

To whom it may concern:

I can most cheerfully recommend Pe-ru-na as of the very greatest possible benefit in cases of catarrh and other diseases of the mucous membrane. This remedy has established itself in the minds of the people as of the greatest possible worth and genuineness. I have known Dr. Hartman for a number of years, and am pleased to say that he is one of the leading citizens of this city, a man of the very highest standing and character in the community.

Respectfully, Samuel L. Black.

Col. Arthur L. Hamilton, commanding officer of the Seventeenth Infantry Ohio National Guard, whose residence is at 309 West First Avenue, Columbus, O., bears witness to the efficiency of Pe-ru-na. Here is Colonel Hamilton's letter and picture.

Columbus, O., May 18, 1897.

Dr. S. B. Hartman.

Dear Sir:—Besides having the merits of Pe-ru-na so fully demonstrated in my family, I have a number of friends who have taken it for catarrh and stomach trouble, and all unite in praising it. As a remedy for summer and winter catarrh I can fully recommend it. Arthur L. Hamilton.

From the Hon. Samuel J. Swartz, Police Judge, Columbus, O.

State of Ohio,
Supreme Court Law Library,
Columbus, O., Nov. 12, 1897.

Pe-ru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, O.

Gentlemen:—The result of using Pe-ru-na has been so gratifying to me that I cannot but congratulate you on the success of your remedy. Your high standing in the business community, and the worth of the gentlemen conducting this great enterprise, prepared me to expect a meritorious article only, from your establishment, but its real worth is best demonstrated by its use.

Respectfully, Samuel J. Swartz.

But we presume its capacity will now be increased, but whether it will be continued as a sawmill, or will be utilized in some other line, we are not informed. My First Days In School.

(FROM OUR BUTLER CORRESPONDENT.)

"Backward turn Backward Oh time in thy flight, make me a child again just for tonight."

It is long ago, and as I turn my thoughts toward the time, it seems like looking down through a dim vista, with objects growing smaller and smaller until they mingle together, and are by distance rendered indistinguishable. Memory reaches back and grasps many of them and presents them in colors rendered more bright, by the medium through which they were viewed. About the year 1844, my mother talked about my going to school. I felt a great reluctance about the undertaking. I was extremely timid, and the thought of being shut up with a number of other strange children filled my mind with grave fears. The day came, however, and after many preparations on the part of my mother, I at length started for the dreaded school house, with an older sister. The sun shone bright, and every object along the way had its attraction, and had it not been for the watchful eye of my sister, I would have hid among the bushes and chased the squirrels until hunger would have forced me home again. Our way led across fields, over high staked and ridered fences, through the woods, up and down lanes, until we reached a highway, then along it for a distance, until across a hollow and over the tops of houses on a hill, could be seen the school house. To reach it, we again entered a lane as no highway passed it and passed by an old log still-house, as still-houses did duty in those days, and whisky sold for a shilling (12½) a gallon. Here a nice cool fountain poured into a great trough and its cold water was a treasure on a hot summer morning. From this point, our path led through a "sugar camp," that upon many occasions proved a source of pleasure and peril, as the owner did not care to fill a small army of boys with his "sugar water." Climbing more fences, we reached the school house. How I dreaded to enter, can only be realized by the small boy who has never entered one, and whose mind has been filled with horrible stories of punishments by older children. I see the building now as plainly as if it were only yesterday that I stood at its wide door, made of two broad boards with slats nailed across the top and bottom and hung on wooden hinges. It seems now that I could count the nails in that door. The building was of logs with the cracks between them "chunked and daubed." The roof, of boards split with a frow, ceiled over head, a door of rough boards, heated with a tin plate stove and seated with long, rude benches, one at each side and one at the end, the stove in the center. Behind the long seats stretched around the three sides of the house, was a board about two feet wide and sloping at a moderate angle toward the center of the room, securely fastened to the wall. This was the desk, and upon it was placed books, slates, etc. There were no backs to the seats or rests of any kind, but when we got tired looking at our book or at the school-ma'am, if she were pretty, and they all were, then we would throw our limbs over the bench, with our back to the teacher and make believe study, but more likely make pictures on slates, or if old enough write a sly note to the prettiest girl in school. The room was about twenty by twenty-four feet in size and from forty to sixty pupils with ages ranging from six to twenty-five years would be gathered in it, and when all were busy the buzzing sound could be heard across the street. The morning hours were usually quiet, but hard seats, cold corners and lack of viligance on part of teacher would, by the by, stir the most lethargic, and produce a din, that would render hearing difficult. The chance for the small boy was slim. Four recitations a day, of perhaps five minutes each, was about all he got and if he learned anything it was largely his own fault. I distinctly remember, how impossible it seemed to me to learn to read, how I would spell over the small words in my lesson and try to name them, and how dreadfully long the days were, and how I abhorred the sight of the school house, when it came in sight in the morning. But it is time that recitations begin, and a description of that part of school life will have to be deferred until a later day, as my sheet is already full.

The Rhetoricals.

The rhetorical exercises at the school yesterday were said to be the best we have had this year. There were recitations, essays and two debates. The first, was, Why not have the presidential term six years instead of four? The affirmative was taken by Bessie Zimmerman and the negative Sadie Huston. The second debate was. Shall we annext the Philippines? The The affirmative was by Robert Howard; negative by Chas. Borst.

A very chatty paper was edited by Gladys Fitch and Maud Link, the former reading it. It had locals and similar items. There was also a nice song by Leah Little.

Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.
Cures a Cough or Cold in one day! Why cough and risk Consumption? This famous remedy will cure you. Doctors recommend it. Price 25 cents. Sold by all druggists.

Are You Constipated?

You may not know it or at least fail to realize it but Constipation is the greatest enemy to mankind. This condition unless corrected will bring on Indigestion and Dyspepsia. This condition places the system in such shape that if you are exposed to any one of the different kind of fevers you are sure to be affected thereby. In this condition a large amount of poisonous matter is retained in the system and you are therefore not in a condition to throw off disease. A cold cannot be eradicated when the system is clogged. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin gives perfect relief for this trouble. Try a 10c bottle just once; you will be convinced. Also in 50c and $1.00 sizes of Davenport.

COURT NEWS.

Thursday, the Stamets case came up before D. R. Best as judge for the hearing of argument. At the close it was taken under consideration by the judge and will be decided by him at the next term of court.

The divorce case between Gettz and Gettz was called up before judge Hartman. Mrs. Gettz said he had been in the habit of beating her till she was tired of it. When asked if she ever struck him first she said "No, except once, when he called me a vile name, a name I will permit no man to call me." Gettz has not showed up at her home for some time, and it would not probably be safe for him to do so. She got a divorce. Gettz was not present, but his attorneys, Gengler, Mountz and John W. Baxter attended to his interests. Her attorney was D M. Link.

The Grimm case was argued for a new trial, but this was refused. The case having gone against him in the original trial, the only thing now was damages or a term in jail. He was sentenced to pay $240 damages, payable $20 every three months, for the support of Miss Wildasin's child. He seemed all broke up over it.

The sheriff has four prisoners in his popular hotel at present. They are Shilling, who has been in for some time; Marion Kinney from Butler, for stealing coal; the boy tramp, Kilgore and the other tramp, that he tried to make the officers believe was his father.

These two tramps and two others, who were not held, were found to be lodging in a school house. This is an old game. For many years people have been annoyed now and then, by tramps breaking into the school house and staying there all night making up a hot fire with the good, dry wood that was carried in that evening when school closed. Burnt matches and tobacco smoke were very much in evidence the next morning, and sometimes the remains of canned fruit and chickens the fellows had stolen and roasted in the fire. Sheriff Hathaway proposes to put a stop to this. And he don't get some other man to go and arrest them. He can do it for himself. This is the precious gang he went up and got Wednesday evening. The boy's name is Otis Kilgore, or at least he says so. He at first claimed that the other tramp was his father, but now admits that this is not so.

Facts in regard to Hollabaugh, keep coming out. He was arrested at Garrett over two years ago by Mr Hathaway, who caught him for parties he had swindled at Bluffton. The plan he works is to draw a check on a bank where he is storping and get his landlord to identity him. The check proves to be a forgery but he is by that time out of town. Still, they get him now and then. At the time he was arrested for the Bluffton affair, he was sent to Michigan City, for a two year term. So he is only recently out. But he has been pretty busy. He came to Auburn to write up the town, and of course came to the COURIER as the leading paper and wanted to get up a big edition, of say 3000 to 5000, with a good writeup of every business man. The COURIER did not care to bite. He was here a week or so, and put up at the Hollister House. He seemed a gentlemanly sort of a fellow, and when he asked Mr. Hollister to identify him at the Farmers Bank so he could get a check for $9.50 cashed. Mr. H readily consented. Then Hollabaugh left town, and Mr. H. has to foot the bill. After leaving Auburn, or at least recently, he got off bogus checks on $30 each at Defiance, Fostoria, Tiffin and other places amounting all to over $300. It was a witness against him that Sheriff Hathaway was called to Lima, Ohio, before the grand jury.

Mrs. Hilkey was a beautiful character. She never was strong but was a quiet, patient girl, always doing the little things in the home that add so much to the happiness of the household. As a wife she was contented and happy. Tuesday night Jan. 31, 1899, she went home after an acute attack of Diabetes. She leaves her husband, parents, one sister, four brothers and many friends, whose hearts are sad because she has gone, but she left the assurance that all is well.

She was buried Thursday afternoon from the M. E. church in Auburn and laid away in Woodlawn. Rev. Guild officiating.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

James R. Cosper.

When death strikes the old settler down, some other, who has lived here a less number of years, can be enrolled to fill his place. But when a pioneer yields his sturdy spirit to its mysterious source, no man on earth can take the vacancy.

Such a one was James R. Cosper, of Union township, DeKalb county, Indiana, born of Saxon ancestors, on February 20, 1813, in Tompkins county, New York. For ten years he lived in Pennsylvania and then removed to Knox county, O. 'Squire Cosper was a carpenter from his youth, and while long owner of a fine farm, give his time to his trade for many years.

In February, 1835, he married Mary McKay, worked as a builder until 1841 when he came to Auburn where he lived one year in a log cabin on the lot now long occupied by A. J. Ralston. Many dwellings and barns in Noble and Defiance counties and houses in Auburn were built by him. He was prominent at the erection of the Methodist church which long stood on the lot now partly occupied by the Gandy block, and with his father, David Cosper, and his wife, was a faithful member of the Methodist denomination in the organization of the first class in Auburn.

Moving upon the farm four miles east of the village, worked at his carpentry, and with the money thus earned hired the chopping of his land. He put up his own buildings, was burned out in 1850 and the same year, lost heavily in stock. Undaunted, he resumed his trade and in time retrieved his losses.

It was his pride to have been instrumental in advancing the great interests of education as well as religion in his boyhood, and he stood ever ready to give of his means to the extent of his ability to further these objects. In politics he had been a democrat, but on the question of slavery he took advanced ground in favor of restricting its limits and during the war for the Union, he was, and since has ever been a loyal upholder of republican principles.

On April 29, 1889, his wife died and was laid away in the little cemetery located on his farm east of his dwelling, and not long after, he disposed of his property, and coming to Auburn, made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Anna Z. McIntosh, and there died on January 31, 1899, at the ripe age of eighty-six years.

As age increased, infirmities grew, but with a patience that never failed, he silently accepted his lot and waited in confidence the summons that has finally called him home. To him, death was welcome and peaceful, and on February 3, exercises were held at the church near his old home, attended by former neighbors, who saw him laid by his wife in the humble country graveyard. And so the end has come of a long and useful life.

In Very Poor Taste.

—The Dispatch of yesterday had the following article, which was very untimely and in bad taste, to say the least.

"The Dispatch may be oversensitive in noticing snubs, but it has the circulation and right to recognition. The Hilkeys and Feaglers have been our lifelong friends and all are patrons of The Dispatch yet yesterday the obituary of Mrs. Linas Hilkey was not handed us until too late for the daily, but the other paper got it in time. We want to say, however, that neither the minister nor any of the relatives are to blame for this slight."

Now if this is a whine at the COURIER, it is of no value, and there is no comment needed. But if it is a stab at Mr. Hilkey, it is very cruel and uncalled for. Mr. Hilkey has just laid to her eternal rest, a young, lovable and lovely companion dearer to him, than all else the world holds. His heart strings are already torn and bleeding. His soul is in the shadow of a great grief. It is the sunlight of sympathy and consoling works, he needs not the stiletto thrust of one he had never wronged. The Dispatch should be ashamed to intrude its little, imaginary grief in the presence of so great a sorrow.

Forest Standing on Ice.

One of the largest forests in the world stands on ice. It is situated between the Ural and the Okhotsk sea. A well was recently dug in this region, when it was found that at a depth of 116 meters the ground was still frozen.

OBITUARY

Sophia Warstler was born near Canton, in Starke county, Ohio, June 6, 1824 and died at her home in Richland township, Jan. 29, 1899, aged 74yrs, 7mo and 23 days. At the age of nineteen she was united in marriage to Jacob Warstler, and to this union were born twelve children, four sons and eight daughters, seven of whom have preceded the mother to the other world. Five remain to mourn besides three brothers and three sisters. In the year 1864, she with her husband moved from Stark Co. Ohio, to DeKalb county, Ind. During her residence in Ohio, she united with the Lutheran church, and after having removed to this state, united with the Lutheran church at Richland Center. Her husband died June 13, 1864, leaving her to support the family. But God proved true to His Word, viz, "I will be a husband to the widow," and by hard work and economy she succeeded in supporting herself and those dependent on her. But while she looked so carefully after the temporal interests of her household she did not forget their spiritual interests, but by precept and example taught them to believe on One who died for them on Calvary. Her children may with grace, rise up and call her blessed.

The funeral services were conducted in the Richland Center, Lutheran church by Rev. E. E. Campbell. Text, Prov. 31:27, "She looketh well to the ways of her household and eateth not the bread of idleness" Subject, Diligence and Industry commendable characteristics. Interment in Richland cemetery.

Remarkable Rescue.

Mrs. Michael Curtain, Plainfield, Ill., makes the statement, that she caught cold, which settled on her lungs; she was treated for a month by her family physician, but grew worse. He told her she was a hopeless victim of consumption and that no medicine could cure her. Her druggist suggested Dr. King's New Disrovery for Consumption; she bought a bottle and to her delight found herself benefited from the first dose. She continued its use and after taking six bottles, found herself sound and well; now does her own housework, and is as well as she ever was.—Free trial bottles of this Great Discovery at H. B. McCord's Drug Store. Only 50 cents and $1.00, every bottle guaranteed.

HOW TO FIND PRIME BEEF CUTS.

The Chucks, Rump and Brisket—Flank Steak.

The prime steer used for beef purposes weighs about 900 pounds. Of this amount there is in the carcass two sets of first quality ribs, consisting of seven ribs in each set and weighing about forty pounds per set. There are also two loins weighing about forty pounds each. There is, on an average, 175 pounds of choice beef in each well-regulated steer, but some butchers have been known to sell porterhouse from a carcass after everything was gone but the horns. The remainder of the beef, after the choicest has been cut away, is called the "misnomer," from the fact that it sells at a lower price. A large percentage of the most nutritious meat is found in the coarser cuts, but nearly every one demands a part of the 175 pounds, which is a false idea of domestic economy as well as judgment. Practical experience has shown that the utilization of the chucks, the best part of the round, the rump, flank and brisket gives the best results and is conducive of better health than the higher-priced meats. Such parts need more attention while cooking, however, yet the many tempting dishes that may be made from them more than repay for all extra trouble. The average housewife may not know it, but nevertheless it is a fact, that butchers who are daily and hourly handling all kinds of cuts of beef almost invariably choose for their own consumption flank steak. They say it is more savory and just as tender as tenderloin, which cuts the butcher seldom eats. The flank steak is situated between the inside and outside layers of creamy-colored fat in the flank, and when taken from well-fed stock is excellent. It costs at the market but half as much as porterhouse or sirloin. An old butcher once told me that the best piece of meat in the bullock for making a dish of boiled beef is the close-grained top piece over the shoulder blade. Meat adhering to the ribs makes much more satisfactory steak than the so-called sirloin, and costs but little. This piece may be larded and served as is filet de boeuf. It is also quite acceptible as Mignon steak.

It Shows.

HISTORY OF A WEEK.

PEOPLE, PLACES AND THINGS OF THE WORLD.

News of Crimes and Criminals, Accidents, Fires, Etc., from North, South, East and West, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

Died with His Boots On.

Bob Marks, a noted sporting character and typical dead shot of Texas, was killed in a duel with John W. Bennett, proprietor of the Texas Silver King saloon and gambling house at San Antonio, Texas. Marks had been drinking, and announced as he left his own saloon that he was going to die with his boots on. He entered the Silver King saloon and threatened to shoot out the lights. Guns were drawn. Marks emptied five chambers of his revolver, shooting Bennett through the abdomen. Stretched on the floor mortally wounded, Bennett fired three shots at Marks. The latter was shot through the body and died with his gun still in his hand. Bennet died in a few hours.

Big Columbus Blaze.

Fire made a clean sweep of fine property bounded by High, Chestnut and Wall streets, Columbus, Ohio, unless possibly the Green & Joyce building may not be a total loss. The loss is estimated at $1,100,000. The Green, Joyce & Co. building and stock were worth $750,000; the Dunlap building, $75,000; Chicago bankrupt store, $100,000; the Sonder Bright building, $75,000; McCauley, milliners, $25,000; Jones building, $75,000, were the chief losses. Several firemen were injured by a falling wall. None seriously.

General Miles.

The Cabinet at a recent meeting had the matter of Gen. Miles' conduct and utterances under discussion, and while no formal action has yet been taken, there is reason to believe that a court of inquiry will be ordered. In the meantime it is not likely that he will be relieved of his position as General of the army. It is, however, understood that the court of inquiry will not be ordered until the War Investigation Commission makes its report, as the report itself probably will form the basis for the court of inquiry.

Italian Counterfeiters Caught.

New York special: Directly the steamer Spartan Prince, from Genoa, reached quarantine secret service agents boarded her and arrested three members of an alleged gang of Italian counterfeiters. They were Francisco La Barbera, Conti Providera and Anzelmo Alberto. A fourth arrest was afterward made at the barge office. All the prisoners have families with them. The agents of the sec et service have been looking for the gang for some time.

Closer Customs Inspection.

A New York dispatch says: The new Treasury regulation providing that American tourists returning home shall make detailed declaration of all things purchased abroad has gone into effect. The cabin passengers by the Buffalo, Aller and Westernland, aggregating seventy-two, shivered in the cold while the customs inspectors examined their smallest belongings. One small valise and hangbag took twenty minutes to examine.

Robbed a Miser.

A special from Chicago says: As a result of indictments returned by the grand jury, W. C. Hoyer, a lawyer, and Peter Casey, a street foreman, were arrested, charged with complicity in the robbery, in March, 1895, of $56,000 in bonds of Christopher Sehrage, a miser. Allen C. Storey, a prominent attorney, is also under indictment on the same charge, and a warrant is out for his arrest.

Four Fell to Death.

One man was instantly killed and three others fatally injured by falling a distance of fifty feet while working on a bridge on the extension of the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburgh Railroad, near Punxsutawney, Penn. Charles Mothimer of Hamburg, Penn., was killed and J. S. Tellear and Edgar Seigel of Selin's Grove, Penn., were internally injured.

Lose Their Seats in Congress.

The House Committee on Judiciary has decided that the members of the House who accepted commissions in the army vacated their seats. They are Wheeler of Alabama, Campbell of Illinois, Colson of Kentucky, and Robbins of Pennsylvania. Members serving on civil commissions are held not to have forfeited their seats.

Killed by Natural Gas.

Patrick Flinn, his wife and their son Owen were found dead in bed at Lafayette, Ind. They were asphyxiated by natural gas.

A Conflagration.

A fierce conflagration burned half a million dollars' worth of property in Philadelphia. W. S. Cooper's plumbers' supply house on Thirteenth street, caught first. The Stewart building and Hoops & Townsend bolt plant turned next.

Fourteen People Burned.

Vienna special: News has been received here of a great fire at Nagy Bodrogh, Hungary. Two hundred houses were destroyed and fourteen persons burned to death.

Intense Cold Aids a Fire.

Fire started in the McCarty block at Monroe City, Mo., and before it was extinguished had inflicted a damage amounting to $80,000. The fire department responded promptly, but in twenty minutes the intense cold froze the valves and the block was at the mercy of the flames.

Court-Martial Convicts Eagan.

"Guilty under both charges; sentence, dismissal from the service; no recommendation for mercy or executive clemency." This is the verdict of the military court before which Brig. Gen. Charles F. Eagan, commissary general of the United States army, was tried.

THE RISE IN STOCKS.

Public Confidence in Business Tested—Increasing Prices of Three Staples.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: "The country is in a stronger position than a week ago. Remarkable strength in its industries is an important but not the chief element. Public confidence in the business of the country and in its securities has been tested to an unusual extent by the sudden fall in stocks and the subsequent rise. Confidence in the value of wheat, corn and cotton has been shown by the markets, and at rising prices the world buys because it has to buy. The vast supply of unemployed capital has been shown impressively and the new and startling independence of foreign money markets fixes attention. The lumber movement is unusually large for the season, with prices of low grade sharply advancing. Railroad earnings and tonnage have shown surprising gains. Wool grows weaker because forced by speculation a year ago to prices which the market for goods could not sustain and has been much embarrassed in trying to sustain ever since. The sales of wool are still small. Cotton is higher ¼c and goods have been strong. Pig iron has risen at Chicago because higher freights from the South and at Pittsburg a shade for Bessemer and gray forge because of growing demand, but for the moment the rise of 2 per cent in pig is exceeded by the rise of 2 per cent in products. The demand is heavy in all lines. Wheat has risen 8 cents, with much buying based on extraordinary exports. Failures for the week have been 224 in the United States, against 342 last year, and 33 in Canada, against 34 last year."

NEW MINING LAW A BOOMERANG.

British Columbia's Action May Lead to Retaliation in Alaska.

The adoption by the Legislature of British Columbia of a bill designed specially to shut American miners out of the Atlin country is likely to prove a boomerang. The Alaska homestead law passed by Congress last session accorded to native-born Canadians the same mining rights and privileges as are possessed by citizens of the United States, provided the laws of the dominion or any of the local laws of the dominion accorded similar rights to Americans either in British Columbia or the Northwest territories. Many Canadians are to be found mining in Alaska, and the news that their rights have been legislated away by the British Columbia Assembly will not be very encouraging to them. It is hoped at Ottawa, Ont., that the Governor of Alaska will not enforce the congressional law of last year for the present, as the impression is general that the dominion government will veto the obnoxious British Columbia measure as soon as it is received there.

DROWNED IN NELSON RIVER.

Member of Philadelphia Party, Bound for Alaska, Loses His Life.

Captain John Mason of a large Philadelphia party bound for the gold fields was accidentally drowned in the Nelson river, three miles above its mouth. The Philadelphians, with the big four party of Chicago, were rafting horses and outfits down the Nelson river, and the raft which Captain Mason was on stuck on a sandbar. It was necessary to unload the horses in order to get the raft off. Captain Mason stayed with the horses on the bar and the raft drifted down the river to make a landing. When about half a mile below the men on the raft heard the captain cry loudly for help, as he was driving the horses to the shore. His hat was found about half a mile below, but the body was not recovered.

OHIO FOOTBALL PLAYER DIES.

Charles Ort, of Springfield, Succumbs to Spinal Meningitis.

Charles Ort, son of Dr. S. A. Ort, president of Wittenberg college, died at Springfield, Ohio, of spinal meningitis. He played full back in the Wittenberg foot-ball team on Thanksgiving and received serious injuries. A short time ago he took the grip, which resulted in a complication of diseases. Ort was one of the best players in the foot-ball team. Although only a little over 18 years of age, he played a splendid game as full or quarter back. He was a member of Phi Kappa Psi fraternity.

RICH ORE AT CRIPPLE CREEK.

Strike of Fabulous Wealth Made in One of the Mines.

A wonderfully rich discovery of gold has been made in one of the mines at Cripple Creek, and in forty-one days the property has advanced $2,700,000 in value. No assays have been made on the rock; it is not necessary, but pieces of the free gold ore are said to be almost solid metal and of immense value. Joining this metallic body there is six feet of quartz that will run from $1,000 to $2,000 per ton.

Political Party Is Formed.

Delegations of farmers from Fulton, McDonough, Warren and other counties in western Illinois, at a meeting held in Greenbush township, adopted a set of principles and appointed a committee of three to prepare for the calling of the first national convention of what is proposed shall be the farmers' party of the United States. The object set forth in the declaration of principles is the securing equitable representation in Congress and the legislative bodies of the several States. The committee consists of A. W. Holeman of Greenbush township, A. L. Wingate of Avon and William Starr. They have power to add to their own numbers and expect to have representatives in all the Western States before Feb. 15. Farmers' clubs in Missouri, Nebraska, Wyoming, Minnesota, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky have already proffered their co-operation in the movement, which was first projected by A. W. Holeman. Resolutions adopted declare the purpose to call a convention for the early part of March. Chicago is favored by the Illinois men, but no conclusion will be reached until the representatives of the party in other States have been consulted. The temporary organization in the State claims a membership of 500 active workers.

Died Because He Couldn't Compete.

Close competition in business and inability to collect money due him from customers caused August Branding, a retail oil dealer of Carnegie, Pa., to commit suicide on his child's grave. As an employe of the Allegheny cemetery was passing through that burying ground the other morning he found Branding's corpse. The body was lying face upward. In one hand was clutched a revolver, with two chambers empty. From a wound in the right ear had flowed blood, which froze on the man's face. In the abdomen was another wound. In Branding's pockets three letters were found. One of them read: "I can't stand it any longer. I want to be with August, my child, here in the cemetery. Nobody paid me for the oil they owed me." Branding was one of the small dealers who tried to compete with the Standard Oil Company.

Palmer Pension Bill Passed.

The Senate has passed without opposition from any quarter, Senator Cullom's bill placing John M. Palmer of Illinois on the pension roll at the rate of $100 per month.

Awakening Among English Manufacturers.

Consul Halstead of Birmingham, England, reports to the State Department at Washington that there is a great awakening going on among English manufacturers over the disastrous possibilities of American trade competition. A new trade paper there has met with a most cordial reception, he says, and the news columns of both daily and trade papers are filled with facts about American trade, while the matter is given serious editorial discussion, which in English papers means much more serious consideration than the same editorial space devoted to a like subject in the average American newspaper. In this week's issue of the particular trade paper referred to Mr. Halstead says that fully twelve 900-word columns are devoted to American trade matters, about one-half taken from the American consular reports.

DYNAMITE FOR NEGRO TROOPS.

Tenth Cavalry Conflicts with Civil Officers Down in Arkansas.

The other day there passed through Texarkana, Texas, eight train loads of negro soldiers, 1,200 in number, composing the Tenth United States cavalry, en route to San Antonio. When they arrived there they were a drunken mob and an effort was made to tear up the town. A number of them kicked in a door, entered a disorderly house and started to run the place at the points of loaded rifles, breaking up the furniture. Constable James Rochelle attempted to arrest the negroes and a chase for the cars resulted. Just as they were reached Rochelle captured the leader and as he did so 100 loaded guns were leveled at him. At every car window was a drunken negro with a cocked rifle. After the guns had been stuck in the officer's face the negro escaped into the cars. The news spread and every officer in the town and hundreds of citizens flocked around the negroes, who were bent on having trouble. County Attorney Horace Vaughan placed himself in communication with the Governor and as a result the trains were held seven hours. The negroes wanted were kept in a car with an armed guard outside. The trains were surrounded by citizens, who had their pockets filled with dynamite ready to blow up the entire outfit. The negroes learned this and said they would hand over the guilty ones on identification, but as this was impossible no arrests were made.

YOUNG BOY IS BRANDED.

Stripped of His Clothing and Tortured with Hot Irons.

The citizens of Sodus Point, N. Y., are aroused over the branding of a 12-year-old son of Daniel Williams by three boys, all between the ages of 12 and 17, two of them being colored. The three boys persuaded young Williams to enter the basement of the Methodist Church, where they stripped him of his clothing and proceeded at once to heat the blades of their jackknives in the furnace fire. Then they applied the hot steel to the flesh of the Williams lad, branding him until the odor of the burning flesh was almost stifling.

Disinherited Girl Wins.

When John Conallin, a wealthy merchant of Fort Scott, Kan., died he left a will declaring that Miss Mary Margaret Conallin of Chicago was not his daughter, but the daughter of his divorced wife. In the will he expressed a desire that neither of the two should ever receive a cent of his property. Notwithstanding this, the young woman entered a claim for the entire estate as next of kin, and gets five-twelfths of the estate, city and mining property.

Remarkable Bird Is Dead.

Mynah, a pet bird belonging to Miss E. Thursby, died at the home of the famous singer in New York. The bird was valued at about $10,000. It was considered to be the most remarkable feathered creature in the world, as it spoke grammatically and with disconcerting fluency in five languages. It sang in several others.

Two Men Blown to Atoms.

There was a terrific explosion of nitroglycerin at an oil well on the Moore farm, five miles from Geneva, Ind. Gideon Goodin, an oil well shooter, and James Thompson, a driller, were blown to atoms. Twenty quarts of the stuff exploded. There were 150 quarts twenty feet away, which withstood the shock.

Attacked by Masked Men.

The home of James Skeens on Guyandotte river, not far from Hamlin, W. Va., was attacked by four masked and armed men. Black Skeens was killed, James Skeens was mortally wounded and his wife and babe and Ambrose Spurlock were seriously wounded. The tragedy is the result of an old feud in that mountainous district.

BLOWS ICY BLASTS.

FRIGID WAVE SWEEPS DOWN FROM THE NORTH.

Below-Zero Weather Reported from Various Parts of the Country—Extends Over Greater Portion of Western States, Causing Much Suffering.

THE whole country has experienced a taste of the bitter cold wave which swept down from the frozen regions of the north. Weather reports from various parts of the United States showed great differences in temperature. Telegrams to the Chicago weather office showed the entire middle West to be affected, temperatures of from 15 to 20 degrees below zero being recorded in many places. Fears have been expressed for the winter wheat, as the cold came when there was but little or no snow on the ground. The following table shows temperatures at various points:

Winnipeg	—30	Dodge City	34
Swift Current	—30	Kansas City	18
Minnedosa	—28	Springfield, Mo.	24
Qu'Appelle	—28	St. Louis	14
Bismarck	—20	Cairo	20
Chicago	—13	Denver	44
Duluth	—12	Cheyenne	32
Huron	—10	Salt Lake City	48
Marquette	—10	Helena	14
Green Bay	—10	Philadelphia	28
Milwaukee	—4	Washington	32
St. Paul	—4	New York	22
Des Moines	14	Boston	15
Omaha	20	New Orleans	52
North Platte	22	Jacksonville	52

The great differences in temperatures shown in this table were due to the situations of the places with reference to the cold waves and a low pressure storm center which had developed in the southwest and brought milder weather as far as it extended.

Even the balmy South did not escape from the wave. A storm swept along the Florida coast, and was attended by precipitation throughout the Southeastern States. In the interior of Alabama and Georgia the first real snow of the winter fell. New Orleans shivered with the temperature near the freezing point, and residents at Tampa and Jacksonville, Fla., plunged through the rain with umbrellas at an angle of 45 degrees to windward. The people of New York got a taste of the cold wave, and the people of Boston had weather 15 degrees above zero. Only San Francisco and the people beyond the Rockies were safe from intrusion by the cold wave, and San Francisco basked in the sunshine with the temperature at 54 degrees.

The cold brought with it great suffering for many people, especially among the poor in the cities. The homeless wanderers of the tramp and "hobo" classes were by no means the worst off, for they collected in the police stations, where they had at least shelter and warmth, even if the quarters were crowded and uncomfortable. But in many poverty stricken homes, where there was no money for fuel and hardly any warm clothes for the protection of the inmates, the suffering was very severe.

Since 1871 only nine lower temperatures in as many years have been noted by the Chicago observers. In December, 1872, the mercury went to 23 degrees below zero. Three years later a minimum three degrees higher was placed on the weather office charts. During the seven other years the story is told in the following figures: 1879, —18; 1883, —18; 1884, —18; 1885, —17; 1887, —15; 1888, —18; 1895, —15; 1897, —20.

SECRETARY ALGER TESTIFYING BEFORE THE WAR COMMISSION.

FAMOUS WAR MINISTER DEAD.

Rev. Myron Reed Passes Away at a Hospital in Denver.

Rev. Myron Winslow Reed died in St. Joseph's hospital in Denver Monday morning, after a protracted illness. Nervous prostration, which developed insomnia, was the direct cause of Mr. Reed's death.

Mr. Reed was the well-known chaplain of the Eighteenth Michigan infantry during the civil war. In 1883 Mr. Reed became pastor of the First Congregational Church in Denver, which position he resigned on account of ill health, and lately he had been preaching to large audiences in the Broadway Theater, forming an independent church.

FALCON ISLAND IS SINKING.

Now Three Fathoms Below the Surface of the Water.

Officers of the British man-of-war Penguin have discovered that Falcon Island, which arose from beneath the sea level in 1885, is gradually sinking and is now three fathoms under water. The Penguin has returned to Sydney, N. S. W., after taking soundings between the Island of Longe and Auckland, New Zealand. The same officers also procured the temperature of the sea at a greater depth than it has ever been taken before—at 4,762 fathoms. The thermometer registered 35.5 degrees under a surface temperature of 82 degrees.

FOR ALASKA MAIL ROUTE.

Soldiers to Be Sent Into the Copper River District.

Advices state that the Government will send three detachments of soldiers into the Copper River district of Alaska next spring to lay out a mail route to the Yukon river and establish posts. The purpose is to establish an all-American route to the Yukon. It will extend from the mouth of Copper river to Eagle City, sixty miles below Dawson.

WISCONSIN CONTEST ENDED.

Joseph V. Quarles, of Milwaukee, Wins the Senatorial Race.

After a long and bitter fight Joseph V. Quarles secured the unanimous Republican caucus nomination for United States Senator from Wisconsin and his election by the Legislature was afterward a mere matter of form. Congressman Joseph W. Babcock, chairman of the national Republican congressional committee, who has been one of the hardest fighters for the plum, threw his forces to Quarles when he saw that his own election was impossible, and Isaac Stephenson, Judge Webb and ex-Congressman Cook, the other candidates, followed suit. It required 100 legislative and caucus ballots to end the fight.

GOMEZ ASKS $60,000,000.

Refuses to Disband Cuban Army Until This Sum Is Paid.

Maximo Gomez, the Cuban commanding general, is determined to retain his alleged army unless the sum of $60,000,000 is forthcoming from the United States. The insurgent leader is to all appearances unmindful of the fact that Calixto Garcia, the former Cuban commanding general, shortly before his death agreed while in Washington to have the United States advance $3,000,000 to the insurgents who are still under arms. This amount was to be paid in order to secure the prompt resumption of labor on the plantations of the island. One hundred dollars was to be paid to each of the 30,000 soldiers when the army was disbanded.

Gen. Gomez opposes this scheme, which heretofore met with general satisfaction to most of the Cubans. Gomez says he is entitled to $11,000 for his services as lieutenant general, which he claims is the American pay for that grade. Gonzales Quesada and Robert P. Porter will go to Cuba and endeavor to persuade Gomez that he is wrong.

BRIGANDS AT WORK IN CUBA.

American Restrictions on Lawlessness Causes a Revolt.

Reports of incendiarism and brigandage in unfrequented parts of the province of Santiago de Cuba are being received daily. Postmaster Kempner has reported that a courier named Arturo Varrios, who was sent by Gen. Ewer from Mayari with sixty-five letters for San Luis, has disappeared. It is believed he has been murdered. Captain Lee reports that it is necessary to maintain a constant guard along the telegraph and telephone lines in order to prevent their being cut. The American restrictions on lawlessness are arousing the same spirit of revolt as prevailed under Spanish authority.

$500 for a Dime.

One man in New York has offered $500 for a dime. He isn't a coin collector, and the piece is not of a rare issue. Though the $500 offer has been standing several days, no one has brought the dime to get its face value 5,000 times over.

It takes 378 employes to look after the wants of Missouri's lawmakers.

Last year New York State spent nearly $22,000,000 on various public charities. The beneficiaries of this enormous sum numbered 2,500,000 persons.

San Francisco's city hall is completed at last. It was begun twenty-seven years ago and the salary of the men in charge of it was sufficient inducement for them to prolong it to the limit.

There are sixty-five Democrats in the lower branch of the Massachusetts Legislature to 165 Republicans, though at last year's election the Republicans carried every county in that State and had a popular plurality of 83,000.

Ex-Gov. Leedy of Kansas expresses publicly the private opinion that office-holding is unprofitable—for an honest man. Speaking about his late job he says: "It's only $3,000 a year, and the way they pull a Governor's leg he has little left."

Judge Ross, successor in the Senate of the late Justin S. Morrill, has long flowing white whiskers, surpassing the crop that drew attention to Senator Peffer. The Senator is very proud of them. He parts them in the middle and rolls them over his shoulders.

The House on Saturday continued the consideration of the army reorganization bill until 2 o'clock, when the members paid their tributes to the memory of the late Representative Simpkins of Massachusetts. Very little progress was made with the army bill. The time before the eulogies began was chiefly devoted to a continuation of the debate on the advisability of retaining the Philippines. A spirited debate was precipitated in the Senate while the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill was under consideration. The Appropriations Committee was sharply criticised for not providing adequate salaries for some of the consular officers and secretaries of legations of this Government in foreign countries, and the parsimony of the nation in this respect was denounced as a disgrace. The bill, which appropriates $1,710,533, was finally passed. A bill amending the law relating to the apportionment and election of representatives in Congress so as to permit the use of voting machines was passed.

The House put in a hard day's work on the army bill Monday, and when it adjourned thirteen of the twenty pages had been completed. Much of the time was occupied in short speeches on the general proposition to increase the army and annex the Philippines, and there were several lively personal controversies. At the opening of the session of the House Mr. Hopkins (Rep., Ill.) reported the census bill and gave notice that he would call it up the next Monday. An effort on the part of Mr. Allison to obtain consideration in the Senate for the Indian appropriation bill precipitated a running debate, which occupied all the time until the Senate, at 2 o'clock, went into executive session on the peace treaty. The President sent to the Senate correspondence on file in the State Department bearing upon the peace treaty, and it was read in the executive session.

The bill to reorganize and increase the standing army to about 100,000 men, but giving the President authority to reduce the size of infantry companies and cavalry troops to sixty men each, thus fixing a minimum of about 50,000 enlisted men, passed the House on Tuesday by a vote of 168 to 125. Mr. Burton (Rep., O.), chairman of the River and Harbor Committee, called up the river and harbor bill. The House went through the form of going into committee in order to put the river and harbor bill under consideration. The committee then rose and the House at 4:35 p. m. adjourned. During almost the entire morning hour the Senate had under discussion the policy of this country to be pursued in the Philippine Islands. Mr. Berry (Ark.), in a speech upon the resolution offered by Mr. Vest, discussed the policy of expansion. An attempt by Mr. Bacon (Ga.) to secure a vote upon his resolution which, in brief, declares that the United States Government will not make war upon a people seeking for their freedom, precipitated a lively debate, which was participated in by Mr. Platt (Conn.) and Mr. Teller (Colo.). No action on the resolutions was taken. A bill was passed at the opening of the Senate session granting extra pay to the officers and men of the temporary force of the navy—two months' extra pay to those who served beyond the limits of the United States and one month's pay to those who served within the United States.

The House entered upon the consideration of the river and harbor bill on Wednesday, and made rapid progress. Fifty of the eighty-eight pages of the bill had been completed when the House adjourned. The bill appropriates directly about $12,500,000 and authorizes contracts to the extent of $18,000,000 additional. The general debate was unusually brief. Its feature was a speech in opposition to the bill by Mr. Hepburn of Iowa. Practically the only amendment adopted was one striking out an appropriation of $250,000 for a channel from Galveston to Texas City, Texas. Mr. Rawlins (Utah) addressed the Senate upon the Vest anti-expansion resolution. Mr. Lindsay (Ky.) offered a resolution declaring that territory not a part of the continent of North America shall not be admitted into the Federal Union as a State or States. During Mr. Rawlins' speech a message was received from the House transmitting the army reorganization bill. It was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. At the conclusion of Mr. Rawlins' speech the Bacon resolution was laid before the Senate. Mr. Sullivan (Miss.) then offered his own resolution as a substitute for the Bacon resolution. Senators Teller and Hoar were the speakers in the executive session of the Senate. Mr. Teller made a set speech in support of the treaty, and Mr. Hoar replied.

A notable speech was made in the Senate on Thursday by Mr. Spooner of Wisconsin. He took for his text the anti-expansion resolution offered by Mr. Vest, but did not confine himself closely to that proposed declaration of policy. The executive session of the Senate was merely a continuation of the legal argument which started with Senator Spooner's speech, in the open Senate. The river and harbor bill, carrying slightly more than $20,000,000, passed the House by a vote of 160 to 7. A bill was passed to pay the heirs of John Smith $1,000 in satisfaction of a judgment against Gen. John R. Brooke for trespass and false imprisonment while he was lieutenant colonel of the Third infantry in 1869.

Connubialities.

A Kansas City couple gave as an excuse for marrying suddenly that both had the "blues."

Baron Rolf Zederstrom, who is to marry Madame Patti, is only 28 years old. The diva is 55.

The "marrying squire" of Jeffersonville, Ind., is dead and his books show that he had performed 9,000 marriage ceremonies.

Miss Annie Fowler, one of the most prominent of the volunteer Red Cross nurses, is engaged to be married to Albert Van Schelle of the Belgian Red Cross, whom she met for the first time and worked with in the hospitals at Santiago.

Jesse Lewissohn, who is reputed to be willing and under contract to marry Lillian Russell-Braham-Solomon-Perugini as soon as she is sufficiently disentangled from the bearer of the last name, is a New York merchant well known in the copper trade as a busy, prosperous, shrewd man of affairs.

Telegraphic Brevities.

John Daly, the alleged dynamite plotter, has been unanimously elected Mayor of Limerick, Ireland.

At Norristown, Pa., a negro burglar was tracked by corn which sifted through a hole in his coat pocket.

Twelve members of the family of John Peterson of Ohiowa, Neb., were poisoned by eating dressed hog meat.

The output of the mines at Cripple Creek, Colo., in 1898 was 416,556 tons of ore containing $15,735,757 in gold.

Rosa Bonheur's great picture, "The Choice of the Flock," was sold at the Powers sale in New York for $4,200.

STATE LAW MAKERS.

The bill under which the State authorities had hoped to prevent lynchings by making the county in which lynchings occurred liable for a penalty of $5,000 was indefinitely postponed in the House Friday afternoon by a vote of 35 to 60. The House took the view that it would not be right to make innocent taxpayers suffer for the acts of mobs. In the Senate the Goodwine bill for the reorganization of the State Board of Education was substituted for the Holgate bill. The substitution was a triumph for the State college faction.

The House alone held a session Saturday morning. The only important business transacted was the killing of a bill for a large executive mansion for the Governor in Indianapolis.

The bill introduced by Senator Shea and intended to regulate and tax express companies was deprived of its main feature on Tuesday when the Senate struck out the section providing for a tax of 2 cents on all packages and consignments received for transportation in this State. A bill giving to the voters of an incorporated town the right to demand a referendum in the acts of the board of trustees was passed to engrossment. Senator Gwin of New Albany, Democrat, introduced a resolution calling for an investigation of the Indiana reformatory at Jeffersonville. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Benevolent Institutions. The House, under a suspension of the rule requiring a bill to be read on three several days, passed a bill dividing the institution known as the "Reform School for Girls and Woman's Prison." Two new institutions are created by the bill—"The Indiana Industrial School for Girls" and "The Woman's Prison."

The Senate on Wednesday passed the bill prepared by the Senate commission providing for a uniform system of bookkeeping by the several counties and authorizing the Auditor of State to make an examination of county affairs regularly. By just enough votes to pass the bill the house advanced to engrossment a bill under which it is hoped to bring out of hiding a good deal of property for taxation. The bill, by Mr. Herrold, as presented, provides that on the 1st of April each year, or as soon thereafter as possible, the Assessor in each township shall stamp all promissory notes, and that interest on any unstamped note shall not be collectable. The House amended the bill so as to include "all bonds, certificates of stock and other written obligations."

The Senate on Thursday passed the bill granting the widow of Oliver P. Morton $100 a month pension during her lifetime. She is now 76 years old and is in destitute circumstances. The people of Newton County, who would like to have the county seat removed from Kentland to Morocco, lost in the House in the first skirmish over the relocation bill. The majority report of the Judiciary Committee, recommending that it take 65 per cent of the vote of the county to order a removal, was adopted. The House passed several Senate bills, among them Senator Osborne's bill to limit the issue of bonds by county commissioners for gravel and macadamized roads.

He Proved His Point.

At a little uptown gathering not long ago the guests played some simple games and told ghost stories, and managed to have a good time in the old-fashioned way.

Pretty soon one of the gentlemen said:

"I don't believe we appreciate what a steady old slow coach the human brain is. Notwithstanding all our talk about quick wits and flashes of intelligence, the brain is not so easily thrown from its accustomed ruts. If, for instance, I ask a question which is entirely new to you, but which your honest old brain mistakes for a query quite similar in construction, it will go right ahead and telegraph the reply in its own hidebound way."

"That sounds interesting," said one of the guests, "but show us an example."

"I will," said the first speaker, "with the proviso that you answer it promptly." He smiled and then without any haste quietly asked: "Who saved the life of Pocahontas?"

"John Smith!" roared twenty voices.

"You see," said the questioner.—Cleveland Plaindealer.

A Day of 3,552 Hours.

The Oldest Dressmakers' Bill.

Most likely the oldest dressmaker's bill in the world has been discovered on a Chaldean tablet, dated 2800 B. C. It has an entry of "92 pure vestments for the priests." Among the items are "ten white robes of the Temple, eight robes of the house of his lady, ten collars of the house of his lady, ten pair of gold collars, two white robes, and four scented robes." Also "two winders," probably scarves for binding about the waist.

FREEDOM.

I care not who were vicious back of me,
No shadow of their sins on me is shed.
My will is greater than heredity;
I am no worm to feed upon the dead.

My face, my form, my gestures and my voice
May be reflections from a race that was;
But this I know, and, knowing it, rejoice:
I am myself, a part of the Great Cause.

I am a spirit! Spirit would suffice.
If rightly used, to set a chained world free.
Am I not stronger than a mortal vice
That crawls the length of some ancestral tree?

A Trapper's Nerve.

By COL. NOAH PARKER.

"In the days when I was knocking around the Rocky Mountains and beyond, it required a good many different kinds of nerve for a person to keep the lamp of life from going entirely out, to say nothing of being comfortable and happy. One was the nerve of Jesse Bell, who made a journey of 120 miles with his upper jaw and part of his nose and cheek gone, half of his scalp torn off, one foot crushed and mangled, his right arm fearfully lacerated and three ribs broken.

"Jesse Bell was a miner, prospector, hunter and trapper, well known in the Wind River country, Wyoming. He had a partner who went by the name of Arkansas Bill. I never knew what his real name was, but he was a good one. The time I was in that region Jesse and Arkansas Bill had been prospecting, hunting and trapping about the headwaters of Snake, Wind and Green rivers for some time, and, meeting with poor luck, had worked down to the mouth of Horse Creek, where they found great signs of big game and good fur. Following a herd of antelope one day, the chase took them eight miles toward a high bluff, around one edge of which the hunters were cautiously creeping, Jesse in the lead. Turning a sharp corner of the rock, Jesse came face to face with a big she silver tip, a yearling cub and two spring cubs. They were not ten feet away and they saw Jesse as soon as he saw them. They were in a hollow and the position and place Jesse was in made it a dangerous spot either for an attack on the bears or for defence against them if they should attack. Arkansas Bill had crept to his companion's side before Jesse could warn him what was ahead of them. Bill lost no time in getting back around the corner. Jesse was backing away for the same purpose, when the old bear, her blood being up, made a rush for him. Jesse fired as quickly as he could. The shot broke the bear's shoulder, but she came on more ferocious than ever. Jesse jumped one side, but the bear was too close to be evaded, and she caught him in the side. Hunter and bear tumbled in a heap, the bear on top, at Arkansas Bill's feet. The bear's jaws closed in Jesse's side. Fortunately her under teeth struck a heavy leather bullet pouch that Jesse carried slung over his shoulder by a strap, or her jaws would have come together in Jesse's side and torn half of it away. As it was, three of his ribs were crushed as if they had been pipestems. Jesse managed to give the bear a powerful kick in the abdomen, and at the same moment Arkansas Bill fired and lodged a bullet just back of her shoulder.

"Paying no attention to Bill, the bear turned her head and grabbed Jessie's right foot, just below the ankle and crushed it to a pulp with one savage bite. Not content with that, she bit and chewed at the foot and leg and tore away the flesh at every bite. Jessie all the while struggling to get his revolver out of his belt. This at last caused the bear to wheel about again and she made a grab for Jessie's head. Arkansas Bill had his gun loaded by this time—breech-loaders not having got there yet—and sent another bullet into the tough old silver tip. This toppled her over, and Jessie raised himself partially to his feet and got his revolver in his left hand. The bear quickly recovered herself and struck Jessie a blow with her paw on the head and face that knocked him down again. He held onto his revolver and sent a bullet into her body. Before he could shoot again the silver tip seized his arm between her teeth and crunched it entirely through. Bill shouted to him to move his head. Jessie did so. At the instant he moved it the bear snapped at it. Jessie Bell, in describing this situation afterward, declared that he could look right down the bear's throat.

"Arkansas Bill, who had been striving to get a chance at the bear, placed the muzzle of his rifle at the silver tip's ear and fired. She sprang back. She did not take the trouble, though to loosen the hold of her jaws on Jessie's head and face, but rasped her great teeth over them, tearing away his upper jaw, part of his nose, one cheek and a piece of his scalp nine inches long and five wide. Then the bear fell over against Arkansas Bill, dead. Her enormous weight carried him down with her. She fell across his legs and pinned him down. It was some time before Bill could get from beneath the heavy carcass. He was badly hurt and limped with difficulty to the aid of Jesse, who was sitting up. While he was dressing Jesse's scalp the best he could, the yearling bear, which, with the two cubs, had been a passive spectator of the fight, concluded to take it up where the old bear had been forced to leave it and made a savage rush upon the two hunters. Arkansas Bill had a long and severe struggle with the fierce young silver tip before he succeeded in killing the animal with his six-shooter every chamber being emptied before the bear gave up.

"Jesse waited patiently and without a groan or murmur until Bill had finished the young bear and returned to the dressing of his wounds. Fixing them up the best he could with the means at hand, Arkansas Bill took his wounded comrade on his back and started for camp. It was late in the afternoon, and it was important that camp should be reached before dark, for black wolves are common in the hills, and both Bill and Jesse knew that they would follow their trail if darkness overtook them. Some idea of Arkansas Bill's capacity may be had when you know that Jessie Bell was a man six feet four inches in his stocking feet and made in proportion. The camp was eight miles away, and the way was extremely rough. Bill reached camp with his burden a short time after dark, and was not any too soon, for behind them, and not far away, they heard the howling of pursuing wolves.

"They found the cabin occupied by a stranger, a prospector who had stumbled upon the shelter and entered. He was a providential visitor. Together Arkansas Bill and the stranger fitted a bed of buckskin and furs on tepee poles, which they fastened to Jesse's pony, Indian fashion, and placing Jesse on the drag, started at once for the nearest point where medical and surgical aid could be had, which was Fort Bridges, 120 miles away, through a rough and unbroken wilderness. They travelled day and night, stopping only to bathe Jesse's wounds at the streams they had to cross. They ate as they travelled, and on the afternoon of the third day they reached Fort Bridges with their wounded charge. On all that remarkable journey Jesse never once complained, either of his sufferings or the hardships. I was at the fort when the three men arrived. No explanations were asked or given until Jesse had been placed safely in the hospital. Then the commandant said to Arkansas Bill:

"'Indians?'

"'Naw!' replied Bill, contemptuously. 'Bears!'

"The surgeon told Bill that Jesse could not possibly survive his injuries. But he did, and was out within a month, permanently disfigured, but the same tough and intrepid mountaineer that he was before his encounter with the bear. That was the sort of nerve Jesse Bell had."

KNIFE TRADE BY QUAY.

A Deal Engineered by Him When a Boy with a Future Pennsylvania Judge.

"I see that Judge Harry White of Indiana County, Pennsylvania, was conspicuous among the workers for the re-election of United States Senator Quay," said an ex-member of the Pennsylvania Legislature to a Sun man. "And this in spite of the way Quay traded knives with him when they were boys together, going to school in western Pennsylvania. Judge White is about the last of the old school of politicians in that State who is still prominent and influential among the Republican leaders. He was a smart boy, but not quite so smart as Matt Quay. There never was a sharper, more mischevious, successful schemer as a boy than Matt was. He was continually cutting up pranks that no other boy would ever think of. He was always looking for a dicker of some kind, and he never traded a knife, or a handful of marbles, or anything else, that he didn't get the better of the boy he traded with, no matter how much the advantage seemed to lie with the latter in the preliminary negotiations. But the transaction in the matter of the knife trade with Harry White was a little ahead of any deal evermade in those halcyon days.

"Matt had a jackknife that was the envy of all the boys. It had a buckhorn handle, and I don't know how many blades and files and other implements dear to the boy heart. This knife was particularly coveted by Harry White, and he made all sorts of offers to Matt for a trade, one of which included a knife he owned, a dozen marbles, a ball of twine, and a tin squirtgun; but Matt persistently declined to make a dicker. One day, though, much to the surprise and joy of Harry, Matt brought up the matter of a deal for his knife, and suggested that he might be induced to swap for something.

"'I haven't got my knife with me, though,' said the future statesman, 'and if we strike up a bargain you will have to go after it.'

"'All right,' said Harry, too much pleased to ask any questions. 'How will you trade?'

"'Well,' replied Matt, 'if you will give me your knife, the marbles, the twine and the squirtgun and throw in that horsehair fishline of yours I'll call it a go.'

"'I'll do it!' exclaimed Harry, and he produced the articles Matt had mentioned and handed them over. 'I'll go up to your house and get the knife.'

"'Matt stowed Harry's knife and the other things in his pockets and said:

"'You needn't go up to our house after the knife. It ain't there.'

"'Where'll I go after it then?' asked Harry.

"'Up to the tannery,' replied Matt. 'I was fooling around there this morning and dropped my knife in the old vat. Me and some o' the boys fished two hours for it and couldn't find it. But it's there. Go up to the tannery, and maybe you can get it.'

"Harry kicked like a steer, but there wasn't any use. He never found Matt Quay's knife, and it's in that vat yet for all anybody knows. But Quay has stuck by Harry White during all his political career, and Harry White has been sticking to Quay ever since in spite of that disastrous deal."

Practical Results of an Idea.

In 1842 a Russian farmer named Bokareff conceived the idea of extracting oil from the seed of the sun flower. His neighbor told him it was a visionary idea and that he would have his labor for his pains. He persevered, however, and from that humble beginning the industry has expanded to enormous proportions. To-day more than 7,000,000 acres of land in Russia are devoted to the cultivation of the sunflower. Two kinds are grown, one with small seeds, which are crushed for oil, and the other with large seeds, that are consumed by the poorer people in enormous quantities.

THE TRIBUTE DAY OF LIBERTY AND ENLIGHTENMENT.

WIDOW DARBY'S VALENTINE.

THE widow Darby, fair, plump and looking far younger than her 45 years, had ridden into town with Jared Kent because her horse had lamed himself that morning, and Jared "happened to be going in," and had asked the widow to ride with him.

Jared was what some of the people of the neighborhood called a "regular born old bach." He had flouted and scorned womankind most of the fifty years of his life, and had openly set forth his conviction that men were "better off without 'em than with 'em," particularly when it come to "marrying of 'em." He had held to this conviction so long and had proclaimed it so boldly and so constantly that all of the match-makers in the rural neighborhood in which he lived had given him up a hopeless case beyond the pale of their schemes for making a benedict of him.

Jared was not, like most avowed women haters, a crabbed, cross-grained, sneeringly cynical man, which made his celibacy all the more unpardonable in the eyes of the match-makers.

"He'd make a real good husband if he'd try," they said. "Then he has the nicest farm in the neighborhood, with one of the best houses on it and money out at interest, although he's not a bit mean and stingy. He'll do his full share always for a neighbor in distress. It isn't because he's too stingy to support her that Jared doesn't get him a wife."

It was a clear, crisp morning in February when Jared rode to the village with the widow Darby seated beside him in his neat little cutter. The sleighing was fine and the air keen and exhilarating. It gave the widow's plump cheeks a beautiful crimson glow and made her black eyes sparkle. She was in high spirits and her laugh rang out frequently as merry and rippling as the laugh of a child.

But then the widow Darby was proverbially cheery. She had suffered keenly the loss of her husband and both of her children, but time had softened her grief, and she was too wise to spend her life in gloom and grief over the loss of those who were beyond all care and sorrow.

She had a comfortable little home and a few acres of land adjoining Jared Kent's. She had known Jared all of her life, but not once had she thought of him as a possible successor to Joel Darby.

"Jared will never marry any one," she had said. "He isn't of a marrying disposition. Some men are that way. It's all they lack to make 'em what God intended they should be. My husband and I used to talk Jared over a good deal, and we did our full share to get him settled for life with a good wife. We used to invite lots of nice girls, young and elderly both, to our house and then have Jared come over to tea and to play croquet with him. He'd be nice and pleasant and all that, but he never came any ways near falling into any of the traps we set for him. We thought once that he did take a kind of a shine to a nice, sweet, real good looking girl of about 30 named Janet Deane from over Shelby way, who was visiting us. She'd of made him an awful good wife, and I sung her praises all the time, but nothing came of it."

"It's an elegant morning, isn't it?" said Jared, as he and the widow flew along over the hills and through long lanes in which the snow was drifted almost to the top rails of the fences.

"Oh, it's lovely!" replied the widow. "I like snow."

"So do I. You got much to do in town?"

"No; I'll be through with all of my errands in an hour. I can let something go if you don't want to stay in town that long."

"Oh, that'll be none too long for me. Where shall I meet you?"

"I'll be at Smith & Hanscom's dry goods store, any time you say."

"We'll call it 11 o'clock, then."

It was three minutes after 11 when Jared drove up to the appointed place of meeting. The widow had stepped into the sleigh and he was tucking the robes in around her when she said:

"There, Jared, I'm just like other women; I've forgotten something."

"What is it?"

"I forgot to go around to the postoffice. I know that there's nothing there for me, because one of the Stone boys brought my mail out last night, and there's no mail trains in until noon; but poor old Jane Carr came over just before I left and wanted me to be sure and see if there was a letter for her. Her daughter is very sick out West, and she hasn't had a letter for a week, and she's half wild. I couldn't bear to tell her I'd forgotten to go to the office."

"I'll drive 'round that way," said Jared. "It won't be three blocks out of the way."

Two or three boys stood idling in front of the postoffice and Jared said to one of them he chanced to know:

"Say, Jimmie, run into the office and see if there's any letter for Mrs. Jane Carr. You needn't ask for me, for I've been around and got my mail."

"You might look in box 184," said Mrs. Darby. "Mebbe there's a drop letter for me."

The boy came out a moment later with a very large square white envelope in one hand and a small blue envelope in the other. He grinned as he handed them to Mrs. Darby. She glanced at the blue envelope and said joyfully:

"O here's a letter for Jane, and it's from her daughter, I know by the postmark. How glad Jane will be! And here—well, I declare!"

She burst into a merry laugh as she looked at the big white, embossed envelope. The boy had told the truth when he had gone back to his comrades and said with a titter:

"She's got a valentine!"

"Who in the land ever sent me that thing?" said Mrs. Darby, holding the envelope out at arm's length. "I didn't even know it was Valentine's day. If it isn't the greatest idea that I should get a valentine!"

"I don't know why you shouldn't," said Jared.

"Oh, because I—but I guess some child sent it."

"Maybe not."

"No one else could have had so little gumption!" said the widow with another laugh. "Maybe there's one of these comic valentines inside of it—some ridiculous thing about a widow likely."

"Why don't you open it and see?"

"I will."

She burst into another laugh as she drew forth a dainty creation of lace paper, tinsel and bright colored embossed pictures.

"How perfectly ridiculous!" she said. "The idea of any one being ninny enough to send an old woman like me a thing like that!"

"You're not an old woman."

"I'm forty-five!"

"Well, I'm older than that, and I don't call myself an old man. Many a woman around here would be glad to get a valentine like that if the sender really meant it."

"Yes, and if you were the sender."

"I'm not vain enough to think that and not foolish enough to say it if I did think it."

"No, I don't think that you are, Jared. But I wonder who could have sent me this. The writing on the envelope is evidently disguised, and—O here is something inside! Let's see what it says.

AT JANE CARR'S GATE.

"'O wilt thou be my valentine
Forever and forever aye,
And wilt thou take this heart of mine,
And give me thine to-day?'"

There was another verse, but before she had read it, the widow Darby cried out: "Jared Kent, that's your handwriting and you need not try to deny it!"

"I'm not trying to deny it. You'll find my name signed in full to the next verse on the other page." This was the next verse:

"If 'yes' my answer is to be,
My heart with joy will fill,
If 'no,' I yet shall be your friend
And I shall love you still."

They had reached the outskirts of the town now. Jared brought the horse to a standstill and said:

"Is it yes or no, Lucy?"

She looked at him with shining eyes and laughing face for a moment. Then she laid one of her mittened hands on the sleeve of the great fur coat he wore and said:

"I think it is yes, Jared."

He turned his horse's head toward the town.

"Where are you going?" she asked.

"Back to the minister's. It's Valentine's day, you know, and if you are to be my valentine, I want you to-day."

An hour later they stopped at Jane Carr's gate. She came skurrying out for her letter with her apron over her head. "I brought you a letter, Jane, and I got a valentine," said Lucy, holding up the big white envelope.

"I got one also," said Jared, as he put an arm around his wife and kissed her.—Detroit Free Press.

WANTED HIS HALF OF THE BERTH

A Good Story Geo. M. Pullman Loved to Tell of Lincoln.

There was one story of his career that the late George M. Pullman of sleeping car fame used to tell with manifest delight. It was as follows:

"One night going out of Chicago, a long, lean, ugly man, with a wart on his cheek, came into the depot. He paid George M. Pullman 50 cents, and a half berth was assigned him. Then he took off his coat and vest and hung them up, and they fitted the peg about as well as they fitted him. Then he kicked off his boots, which were of surprising length, turned into the berth, and, having an easy conscience, was sleeping like a healthy baby before the car left the depot. Along came another passenger and paid his 50 cents. In two minutes he was back at George Pullman.

"There's a man in that berth of mine," said he, hotly, "and he's about ten feet high. How am I going to sleep there, I'd like to know? Go and look at him."

In went Pullman—mad, too. The tall, lank man's knees were under his chin, his arms were stretched across the bed and his feet were stored comfortably—for him. Pullman shook him until he awoke, and then told him if he wanted the whole berth he would have to pay $1.

"My dear sir," said the tall man, "a contract is a contract. I have paid you 50 cents for half this berth, and as you see, I'm occupying it. There's the other half," pointing to a strip about six inches wide. "Sell that and don't disturb me again." And, so saying, the man with a wart on his face went to sleep again. He was Abraham Lincoln.

James Parton's Prediction.

In 1862, James Parton, the celebrated biographical writer, made the following prediction in regard to Abraham Lincoln:

History will say of Mr. Lincoln that no man of a more genial temperament, a more kindly nature, ever tenanted the White House; that he gave all his time, his thoughts, his energies, to the discharge of duties of unprecedented magnitude and urgency; that, hating no man, he steadfastly endeavored to win the confidence and love of all the loyal and patriotic, and that, in spite of four chequered years of such responsibility and anxiety as has seldom fallen to the lot of man, he bore away from the Capitol the sunny temper and blithe frankness of his boyhood, returning to mingle with his old neighbors as one with them in heart and in manner, in retirement as in power a happy specimen of the men whom Liberty and Democracy train in the log cabin and by the rudest hearth to guide the counsels of the Republic and influence the destinies of the people.

Lincoln When a Boy.

An exhibition of Lincoln's practical humanity occurred while a boy. One evening, while returning from a "raising" with a number of companions, he discovered a straying horse, with saddle and bridle upon him. The horse was recognized as belonging to a well-known drunkard, and it was suspected that the owner was not far off. The fellow was found in a perfectly helpless condition upon the cold ground. Lincoln's companions intended to leave him to his fate, but young Lincoln would not hear of it. At his demand, the miserable man was lifted to his shoulders, and he actually carried him eighty rods to the nearest house. He then sent word to his father that he would not be back that night. He nursed the man until morning, and believed that he had saved his life.

The Ship of State.

Gen. John A. Logan related the following: "On the morning of President Lincoln's arrival in Washington I called upon him at Willard's Hotel, in company with Mr. Lovejoy of Illinois. We both urged on the new President the necessity of a firm, vigorous policy. He listened to the end and then said very seriously, but cheerfully, 'As the country has placed me at the helm of the ship I'll try to steer her through.'"

MILES OF STAMPS.

Some Men of the Millions That Were Issued Last Year.

Uncle Sam printed just a few postage stamps during the year 1898. The number of 2-cent stamps issued during the year was 2,500,000,000. Such a number, obviously, is beyond the grasp of the human mind, but perhaps the matter may be made more clear by putting it otherwise.

An ordinary 2-cent stamp is exactly one inch long. From this fact, by a little calculation, it is easy to discover that the number of stamps of this denomination issued in 1898, placed end to end, would extend a distance considerably exceeding 39,000 miles. In other words they would make a continuous strip of stamps, each one adorned with the head of the father of his country, stretching in a belt more than once and a half around the equator.

Of course, though the 2-cent stamps are those principally used, there are others. Enough 1-cent postage stamps have been issued to stretch from New York city, by way of Europe and Asia, to Bombay, India, if similarly arranged in one strip. All other stamps, as to production and sales, are of minor importance, comparatively speaking, but it is interesting to know that almost exactly one mile of $1 stamps were manufactured for the demand of 1898. Of $5 stamps the production was equivalent to a little more than half a furlong, or about one-fifteenth of a mile.

Now, if all the postage stamps printed by the United States government were placed one top another, as neatly as might be without putting them under pressure, how high do you suppose the pile would be? There is no use guessing; you would never get it nearly right, unless you went to work to calculate for yourself. The 3,500,000,000 stamps of all denominations printed during the current year—the statement, of course, is approximate—would tower to an elevation of twenty-one miles. This is more than three times the height of the highest mountain in the world—Mt. Everet, in the Himalayas. If the same number of stamps was piled up in the form of the ordinary sheets of 100 hundred each it follows that the stack would be over a fifth of a mile high.

During the year 1898 the number of special delivery stamps sold was about 5,250,000. It is only reasonable to suppose that the average journey of the special delivery messenger is half a mile. Indeed, that is an absurd underestimate; but let it go at that. On this assumption the total distance traveled for special delivery in 1898 was about 2,625,000 miles. That is a very considerable space to traverse, as may be realized when it is considered that a messenger boy, in order to accomplish that total distance, would have to go about 1,100 times around the world, or five times to the moon and back.

It appears, from figures furnished by the Post Office Department, that the average person in Massachusetts, including men, women and children, spends $2.30 on postage per annum. New York comes second with an expenditure of $2.27. The District of Columbia third, with $2.16. Colorado is fourth with $1.93, and Connecticut is fifth with $1.80. The states ranking lowest in this regard are South Carolina, with 25 cents per capita; Mississippi, with 34 cents; Alabama, with 35 cents; Arkansas, with 37 cents and North Carolina, with 41 cents.

Cause of Cancer.

The London Lancet declares, in discussing the fact that four and a half times as many persons die from cancer as fifty years ago: "Probably no single factor is more potent in determining the outbreak of cancer in the predisposed than high feeding. There can be no doubt that the greed for high food manifested by modern communities is altogether out of proportion to their present requirements. Many indications point to the gluttonous consumption of meat, which is such a characteristic feature of this age as likely to be especially harmful in this respect. Statistics show that the consumption of meat has for many years been increasing by leaps and bounds, till it now has reached the amazing total of 131 pounds per head per year, which is more than double what it was half a century ago, when the conditions of life were more compatible with high feeding. When excessive quantities of such highly stimulating forms of nutriment are ingested by persons whose cellular metabolism is defective, it seems probable that there may thus be excited in those parts of the body where vital processes are still active such excessive and disorderly cellular proliferation as may eventuate in cancer."

An Old Paper.

Russia is not usually associated with newspaper progress, but it is a singular fact that the Viedomosti of St. Petersburg, is one of the oldest newspapers in Europe, for it can boast a continuous existence of 172 years. Printing was unknown in Russia until a short time before its first appearance. Just two centuries ago Peter the Great licensed one Ivan Andreivich Tessing to print at Amsterdam and export into Russia certain books, for the most part of an educational character. In 1704 he himself had types cut and sent them with a font cast by Tessing to Moscow, where under priestly direction a specimen number of the Viedomosti was got up. It was not, however, until 1726 that the Viedomosti started on its career in St. Petersburg.—London Chronicle.

Fish Which Never Sleep.

There are several species of fish, reptiles and insects which never sleep during their stay in this world. Among fish it is now positively known that pike, salmon and goldfish never sleep at all. Also that there are several others of the fish family that never sleep more than a few minutes during a month. There are dozens of species of flies which never indulge in slumber, and from three to five species of serpents which the naturalists have never yet been able to catch napping.

Two British Guiana stamps, dated 1850, and worth originally one penny each, were sold in Berlin not long ago for $5,000.

"Kit and Kit's Sister."

Kitty Riley and her sister Maggie had been married on the same day nearly two years ago. Both had married honest workingmen, with steady positions, and the wages of both husbands were about equal. Each had been presented with a son and heir, and both the sisters ought to have been happy, but while Kit and her husband were always in good spirits, light-hearted, contented and pleased with their lot, there seemed to be a shadow hanging over the household that was ruled by Kit's sister.

It was not that any trouble or misunderstanding existed between Maggie and her husband. Far from it. They loved each other dearly, and were always happy in each other's society, as true wives and husbands ought to be, but there soon crept into the young wife's eyes a careworn, worried look that betokened secret sorrow of some kind. Between care for her baby and her household duties her time was fully occupied—indeed, it was noticed that she did not take her infant out for an airing anything like as often as did her sister Kit. At first her husband, John Clarke, was too busy to notice any change in his wife, and it was only when Kit's husband, Tom White, began to ask if Maggie was ailing that poor John directed his attention to his wife's appearance.

"Maggie," he said one evening in a self-reproachful way, "I have been rather neglectful of you of late. I am afraid, and I haven't been taking care of your health and comfort. You are beginning to look pale and thin, and, now I notice it, the baby is not as healthy looking as he ought to be. You'll have to go out more. You don't get enough of fresh air, and neither does the child! Why don't you put him in the baby carriage and take him out for an hour or so in the mornings and afternoons?"

"I haven't time, John," replied Maggie, in a sad tone of voice. "There is so much to be done in the house, you know, and between that and the baby I don't have a minute to spare."

"Well, your sister Kit has just the same to contend with. She keeps her house clean and attends to little Tommy, and yet she finds time to take a run in the park every day with the boy, and she is as blooming and fresh in appearance as a new-blown rose."

"I know she is, John, and I can't understand it." (Here a tear crept into the little woman's eye and her lip trembled.) "It isn't that I don't feel well, but somehow or another I am always tired. I am trying to keep things clean and straight all the time, and yet I never seem to get ahead. God knows I would often like to take baby out for a blow of fresh air, but I don't seem to be able to afford the time!"

"Well, see here, now, Maggie," said her husband kindly. "Your health and the child's is of much more importance to me than the house work. Don't do so much cleaning! It isn't a bit necessary. I've noticed you scrubbing and rubbing many a time when I couldn't see the use of it. Take more healthy exercise and do less hard work."

"No, John, that will never do," answered Maggie; "I'm quite willing to have some restful exercise, but not at the expense of a clean house. I like my home to be scrupulously clean at all times."

"Well, it is clean; I'll give you credit for that," said her husband quickly, "but then you are too particular. Give as much care to yourself and the baby as you do to the housework, and you'll feel better and so will I! Now just get baby and yourself ready, and we'll walk over to your sister's—there's a good girl."

Maggie rose and dressed the baby and handed him to papa while she prepared herself. In the midst of her preparations she said: "Really, John, I don't see how I can afford the time to go! That kitchen floor ought to be scrubbed to-night and I was going to clean up all the door knobs and brasswork."

"Let the brasswork be—photographed!" exclaimed John, somewhat testily. "You'll keep on rubbing and scrubbing, and brushing and cleaning until you drop into the grave! Hereafter you'll have to go out every day for at least two hours. I insist on it, and I'm going to ask Kit to come over and take you with her regularly from this day."

At Kit's house they naturally met with a cordial reception from Tom and his wife. The house was as trim and neat and straight as busy hands could make it, but Kit and the baby had been out in the park all the afternoon! John Clarke sighed as he noticed the different complexions of Kit and her sister. The one was ruddy with health, the other pale, wan and sickly looking.

"You poor dear!" exclaimed Kit, commiseratingly, "I'm sure she must be ill, John, or she would not look so tired and weary."

"I am not ill, Kit—indeed I am not, and you know I never was lazy, but somehow I don't seem to keep up with my work, and yet you get ahead of yours always. I was always as strong as you were, and naturally as quick, but I honestly cannot understand how you manage to get through all your housework and yet have so much time to yourself."

"Perhaps," said Tom White, as a light gleamed in his eyes, "perhaps this secret is easily solvable after all. Tell us, Maggie, do you use Sapolio in your housecleaning?"

"Why no! I use almost anything I can buy at the store."

"There," cried Kit, triumphantly, "that is really the secret of your troubles! You just use Sapolio as I do, Maggie, and you'll find the work easier in every way. You'll have lots of time to yourself, and therefore you'll feel better, and enjoy good health!"

Plants Which Give Light.

There are a number of plants and flowers which give out a phosphorescent light in the dark. Linnaeus first noticed this phenomenon in the common nasturtium, whose flowers seemed to him to have a faint iridescence at night. Later observations by others showed that the light was stronger after very sunny days. Among other plants which possess this singular property are the marsh lily and the fraxinella. The last named secretes a volatile oil which oozes out during hot weather, spreads in a thin layer over the flowers, and forms a vapor which becomes luminous in the darkness. In the coal mines near Dresden grows a species of fungus which "exhibits the appearance of luminous festoons of shifting colors."—La Nature.

COURT NEWS.

The closing days were occupied by finishing up the odds and ends of work, and as often happens in laying out and getting ready some things for the next term.

In the case of Kennedy, the administrator de bonis non, of the estate of the late Jacob Myers vs J. W. Clark et al. D. R. Best was appointed to try the case, as Judge Hartman had been an attorney in it before.

Judge Watkins who had been trying the case between the Benninghoff heirs and the Evangelical Association of the church of God of Cleveland, Ohio, has finished it, but the decision is not rendered. He has taken it under advisement, It is a case to quiet title to property.

There was a case on a mortgage of J. A. Bevard vs Eli Snyder, but it has been dismissed "without prejudice" If not satisfactorily fixed up, it can be called up in the future.

The attachment case of Getts vs Albertson has been dismissed by the plaintiff at his cost.

Sanford vs Cyrus Jackman on a note, he gets a judgment of $54.80.

In the case of Brunson vs Burns the plaintiff gets a judgment of $835.50.

In the case of Walker, administrator of the Gettz estate against the Insurance Company. the case was argued for a new trial, but this was refused

It will be remembered by those who read the COURIER, that the company had insured Gettz against sickness, and they refused to pay. Gettz finally died and the administrator brought suit to recover the insurance, and got a judgment of $300. When the motion came up for a new trial, Judge Hartman explained that this $300 exceeded the wages Gettz would have earned, and the Company insures only that much and limits the time. So he reduced the amount to $262 50 and let it stand at that. We have not heard whether there will be an appeal from this.

The Getts divorce case from Garrett was granted as already stated. She is to have an allowance of $5 per month till further orders, beginning March 1st. The two children are allowed to live with either parent as they may choose, till further orders.

There is a case from Steuben county, where Anderson sues the Jackson road for damages to stock being hauled over their lines. Preliminary arguments have been heard, and the case got ready for next term.

There is another request from Allen county to bring another case up here in change of venue, but Judge Hartman does not encourage them in this instance as we already have so much work set down for that term.

Ross Baxter is Dead.

George Baxter came home from Hamilton yesterday noon, and reported the death of his nephew, Ross Baxter, the son of Charles Baxter, whose dangerous illness had been reported in the COURIER. It appears that about a year ago, the had had an attack of bowel trouble; and this time the grip caught him and went to the recently affected part When Dr. Baxter was called there Sunday, he saw the case was desperate, but he had some hope. For a time the lad rallied, but he suddenly got worse, and after terrible suffering died at 2 in the morning of yesterday, Feb. 7. He was a bright boy of twelve and a most promising one. The funeral is held at the home at 2 p. m today and interment at Hamilton. The bereaved parents and relatives have sympathy from all.

THE LEGISLATURE.

The Solons Hard at Work Earning their Money.

We are not prepared to say whether the proposed change in township government is wise or not. It is likely some change should be made, but this one looks bunglesome. They want a council formed, so as to have a sort of township legislature. To this body, the trustee must report, If the right men are selected, the plan will do. We understand they are to serve without pay.

The legislature has done some good work as well as some not so good. It has killed the bill of giving one cent a pound, state bounty on beet sugar. We might with better reason give five cents a bushel on wheat. But as it is impossible to give a bounty to all industries, it would be wrong to give to any. Mr. Brown voted against this bill.

The bill to have surveys made of the swamp lands granted to the state in early day is being discussed. We are not to infer that no surveys were ever made. But the boundaries of some lands have changed, as the lowering of a lake, or the changing of a river bed, and no one will buy unless he knows what he is getting.

A bill is being worked through to have the board of county commissioners to have charge of turnpikes, gravel roads, etc, each in his own district.

They are trying to get some plan by which prison labor may be made useful. Another bill requires the auditor to post up at the court once a month, the amount of unloaned school fund on hand. One bill proposes to open a channel from Lake Michigan into Wolf Lake near Hammond, Indiana, so as to make a big inland harbor.

Mr. Brown is making a hard fight for his bill to separate the state colleges from the state Board of Education. Educators have long known of the abuses of educational matters, going out of the connection of state school laws. Suppose you are a county superintendnt and you receive an order from the state board to use a certain book in preparing pupils to become teachers. Now the book may be all right and desirable. But suppose you find out that some member of the state board, or his friend owns the copyright on that very book.

A bad precedent was established by voting a pension to Mrs. Morton. If she is poor, why not have her son support her? He has a good position at the public crib.

A bill has been passed extending the life of the appellate court.

A law is proposed, to make women eligible to the office of county superintendant. It is likely that the state constitution should be consulted in this instance.

A MOST WONDERFUL CURE.

Eminent Physicians Pronounced it Consumption.

Dr. C. D. WARNER, Coldwater, Mich.

Dear Sir:—I have received great benefit from your White Wine of Tar Syrup. I had a cough and the doctors gave up all hopes of my recovery and pronounced it consumption; I thought that it was death for me. I tried everything that I could hear of. Finally one of my friends prevailed upon me to use your White Wine of Tar syrup. I took one and one half bottles and am cured entirely Such medicine I can recommend to those who are afflicted as I was.

Very Re-p'y Yours,
JOSEPH E. UNDERHILL,

Mrs. John Owens.

Mrs. John Owens died very suddenly Sunday night at her home in South Auburn. She has not been well for about two weeks but has been up most of the time until Saturday, she was compelled to lie down most of the day and Sunday she was able to sit up a little while but her friends had no thought of her dying, until a few minutes before she passed away at 9:30 in the evening. Her sister Mrs. J. H Rowland has been confined to her bed for some time and did not know she was sick, until she received the news of her death. It is a sad blow to her. The funeral will be from the home at 11 a m., Wednesday and interment in Evergreen cemetery.

Auburn Normal

Auburn will have a Summer Normal beginning June 12. The work will be adapted especially to teachers wishing to review and those preparing to teach. Instruction will be given also in any higher studies that may be desired. It will be our aim to make this school profitable to our students and worthy of their patronage and we know it to be the opinion of the County Superintendent that such a school should be held.

For information address H. G. Brown Secretary, or any other instructor.

The Manila Fight.

It appears the insugrents had got enough by Sunday night and stopped fighting.

We have several thousand of them, prisoners, and their losses in killed and wounded are large, Our own losses are probably larger than at first reported.

Agoncillo, the Filipino agent in Washington has fled to Canada. He should have been arrested as is known he has sent cablegrams home advising war.

Dr. H. D. Wood, who has been having a long siege of the grip, is still in a critical condition. He is somewhat alarmed concerning himself, as he seems to be gradually wasting away.

Fighting at Manila.

Saturday evening soon after dark, the insurgent army near Manila made a general assult on our lines about the city. We defended with land and naval forces. The fight lasted all night, but at daylight Sunday morning it slacked up for awhile, then begun again and lasted all day Sunday. The result is we lost quite a number killed and wounded, but drove the insurgents from their lines. They formed at a second line, but having lost so heavily it is believed they will now have sense enough to quit.

Committed Suicide.

SPECIAL TO THE COURIER.

ANGOLA, IND., Feb. 6, 1899:—Ex-County Surveyor, Frank Noyce, of Fremont, this county, committed suicide Sunday afternoon at that place at 2 o'clock by shooting himself through the head with a revolver at his home. Death was instantaneous. He was about 40 years old and leaves a wife and one child. He had been worrying over his business affairs and also sickness in his family.

The three ministers of St. Joe, Rev. Dunlap, Rev. Johnson and Rev. Clark are writing a series of articles for the St Joe News. The first one appeared last week The question asked, was; "Should Christians Dance?" From the feeling over the article it would seem that there are some professed christians who think it is right to trip the light fantastic toe.

W. H. Hart has a job moving a big barn 2½ miles northwest of Auburn and last week went up there to do the work taking with him two of the St. Joe boys. One of them came home Saturday night with badly frozen feet so bad that it is unlikely he can go back and finish the work.

The series of meetings at the M. P. church are still going on and may continue for several days.

BUTLER.

The M. E. friends continued their revival efforts with fair success.

Darwin McIlrath's lecture was but sparingly attended. It was reported to have been excellent. Butler is a poor lecture town. It takes a circus to awaken the average Jarvisite.

Quite a large number of our people are suffering from grip.

R. A. Copp of St. Joe had a like experience last Sunday. Damage moderate in each instance. Both insured.

A Mrs. Stacy of Chicago, a lady M. D., and a singer, is assisting at the M. E. revival efforts.

THE TREATY RATIFIED

A Majority of 30 in its Favor in the Senate

We have been slow to believe that enough senators could be found to defeat the Peace Treaty. It was our own treaty, the treaty of the conquerors and dictated by the conquerors, and such a thing as a conquering nation refusing to ratify a treaty embodying fully its own terms was never heard of. Yet we had a few men who voted against this very thing. COURIER has all along said, we should ratify the treaty and then if we don't want the Philippines, let them go. But if we did not ratify the treaty the Islands would still belong to Spain, and we would still be at war with Spain.

The vote yesterday, stood 57 for the treaty and 27 against, a total vote of 84 and 3 votes more than the needed two thirds. Had the full senate of 90 members been present, it would have required 60 affirmatives votes to make the two thirds as there are now 45 states.

REPORT OF SECRETARY.

THE HONORABLE BOARD OF HEALTH OF THE TOWN OF AUBURN:

Your Secretary herewith submits his report for the five months ending December 31, 1898, being the full time from the date of his appointment, August 1, to the close of the year.

The sanitary condition of the town has not been of the very best grade for the period named. This state of affairs your Secretary believes is largely due to causes which were beyond the control of the Health Board; notably the condition of public streets. The mains for the waterworks plant were laid during the season of the year prolific in disease germs. Auburn has no system of sewerage, and hence the earth but a few feet below the surface is contaminated more or less by such waste as has accumulated for many years—filth carried down by successive rains until below the subsoil there is one continous layer of polluted earth. In digging the trenches much of this polluted earth was thrown above ground, and worse, was left so uneven and porous that many times more surface was exposed to the air than if it had been properly packed and rolled. Also the ridges thus formed held the subsequent rainfall in pools of mud, during the warm weather which followed; thus making veritable hot-beds of infection. Foreseeing in part this evil, the Health Board endeavored prior to that time, to place the town in as good sanitary condition as possible.

During the months of August and September a thorough renovating and general cleaning up of all resident and business was done under the the direction of the Health Officer, so that few, if any unsanitary places were left to further pollute the surface.

Fearing an outbreak of typhoid fever or other filth disease, four hundred Health Circulars were placed in the houses and personal visits made where they seemed needed to secure proper sanitation.

The public co-operated with the Health Officer, and in no instance was it found necessary to begin prosecution in order to abate a nuisance.

As the result of good work on the part of citizens there was almost no typhoid fever, and only a minimum of diarrheal diseases, Cholera-infantum was unknown. There were only a few cases of malarial fever and no deaths were reported from that disease.

Diphtheria made its appearance October 16, and in spite of the usual quarantine and isolation of cases, in two weeks time it threatened to become epidemic. To meet that emergency, the Board held a number of special meetings and on November 7, passed an ordinance closing all schools, churches, theaters, etc., and prohibiting the meeting of societies for a period of two weeks, during which time all children were forbidden to go about the streets.

The Health Officer was required to take personal charge of all infected houses, and to use his utmost vigilance in every way possible to eradicate all sources of contagion.

About 700 circulars of information were distributed and much renovating done during the two weeks that the ordinance was in force. School houses and churches were disinfected before being again occupied.

From November 15 to December 31, there were no new cases of diphtheria or other contagious disease.

There were reported:

Diphtheria cases	15
Deaths from diphtheria	6
Scarlet fever	2
Deaths from scarlet fever	none

Thanks are due all citizens for the very faithful manner in which the orders from the Board of Health were observed.

Your Secretary is especially grateful to teachers, clergymen and the officers of societies and lodges, who so uniformly gave him their support in the enforcement of the Health ordinance. In this regard also he desires to thank the managers of our home papers for their kindly assistance, in many ways, and freely given without compensation other than that which tends to promote the best interests of our town.

Respectfully Submitted,
D. J. SWARTS, Secy.

Club Notes.

The Up-to-Date met last Friday evening with Nellie Harding, There were games, refreshments and a social time, generally, lasting till about 10 o'clock. They will meet next Friday evening with Georgia Zimmerman.

The Wednesday Reading Club met last week with Mrs. Dr. Buchtel. The session held was a business meeting finishing work and planning for the Band Fair which opens Feb. 20, in the Ford building. The Club will meet Wednesday of this week with Mrs. Herb Weaver on South Main-st.

The L. L. C. met Saturday with Mrs. W. B. Brown. This day had been set apart by the Program committee as "Guest Day," and each member had the privilege of inviting one guest. The large and pleasant rooms of the hostess were filled with intelligent and interested ladies. The subject for the day, "The Home." being of interest to every one present. The first paper, "The Care o' the House" was given by Mrs. Holmes. It was excellent, full of good thoughts with a delicate vein of humor running through it. She contrasted the new with the old way of keeping house. "The Furnishings" of this same home, was given to Mrs. Tillie McCord to handle which she did in a pleasing but practical manner, beginning with the kitchen, the most necessary room, and closing with the "guest chamber." This guest chamber she advised the hostess to sleep in once or twice a year, that she might know of a certainty, if it were comfortable. This same home furnished by by Mrs. McCord was an ideal one, and one suitable for persons in moderate circumstances, not wealth, but comfort and good taste. She did not forget to mention books, magazines and newspapers as necessary furnishings of the home. "Emergencies in the Home" was the title of a paper by Mrs. Abbie Sprott. This was witty and yet very practical. She caused a smile to pass over the audience when she enumerated the list of old fashioned remedies on a shelf needed to make her sleep well, in the early days of motherhood, not forgetting the "fit" medicine. Now hot water and the hot water bag is nearly always used in small emergencies. She gave an amusing incident of the making of a mustard plaster by the new method of using ginger, which failed to "draw".

The question for discussion "Is it possible for a Housekeeper to be too Neat?" was opened with a fine paper by Mrs. Priscilla Zimmerman. She gave both sides of the question, relating some incidents that had been under her own observation, one in particular where the wife was so neat that shoes must be removed before coming into the house, and of one wife who compelled her husband to sleep on a rug, that his clothing might not soil her spotlessly clean bed. The discussion that followed was very informal, several ladies taking part with spirit and intelligence, one lady stating that in her early married life she was a painfully neat housekeeper, but was glad to state that she had reformed; another one said she wished to ask a question of the club. She said that often when she had so much to do she could not see her way out, she asked her friends or sometimes her husband what she should do, and she always got the answer, "Let some things go." She gave a list of the things to be done all necessary ones for the comfort and happiness of her family, and then asked the club, "what things should she let go." Silence reigned a moment every lady busy thinking what she could let go. presently a voice from the other side of the house said. "Let the baby go." This caused a hearty laugh, for those who know the lady asking the the question, knew it would be the most unlikely thing that she would do. Before the discussion began, the committee having the day in charge, consisting of Mrs. McCord chairman, Mrs. Sprott, Mrs. Hartman and Mrs. Hortense Robbins, appeared bearing dainty refreshments. Ice-cream, lady fingers and a beautiful carnation as a favor for each one. It was a bright and pleasant afternoon for both members and guests The club will meet with Mrs. Swineford next Saturday.

There was a large attendance at the Culture Club Saturday afternoon held at the home of Mrs. Judge Roby, and a very interesting session. Mrs. Moody led the lesson, the subject being German Literature Mrs Winnie Hebel was elected Vice President to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mrs. J. Y. W. McClellan.

The Jolly Eight met with Miss Helen Garwood last Saturday afternoon. They had indeed a "jolly" time, a cake walk, was one of the features of the afternoon, they also played show, and music and dancing was a part of the program. Light and dainty refreshments were served and they went home happy. The bibles they brought were not nowever much in evidence except as ornaments to the hall tree. The following are the members: Geraldine Nusbaum, Helen Vann, Vera Zerwis, Josephine Howard, Allie Mitchell, Bessie Baker and Helen Garwood. They meet with Helen Vann next Saturday.

Forecasting Storms.

The first attempt at scientific forecasting of the weather was the result of a storm which, during the Crimean war, November 14, 1854, almost destroyed the fleets of France and England. As a storm had raged several days earlier in France, Vaillant, the French minister of war, directed that investigation be made to see if the two storms were the same and if the progress of the disturbances could have been foretold. It was demonstrated that the two were in reality one storm and that its path could have been ascertained and the fleet forewarned in ample time to reach safety.

FOREIGN LOVE MAKING.

Dr. McIlrath Relates Some Experiences and Customs in Love Making During His Tour.

"The love making of foreign countries?" replied Dr. McIlrath with a beaming smile, "I knew little of the native methods," but if you ask me of the methods employed by native charmers in this endeavours to attract the fair skinned foreigner. I have had sufficient experiences to turn the head of men not placed in that unconvenional situation of being in love with their own wife, or, so self loved as to be invulverable in that delightfully embarassing situation I have had experience.

During the Mikados visit to Shokouba Park, Tokio Japan, Mrs. McIlrath, a Japanese nobleman and myself were invited guests to the functions. Gorgeous as were the combats, the visitors, and the royal receptions, we found most interest in the quiet of the tea booths, and luncheon surrounded by pretty maidens and mature matrons fluttering in silks and satins with as much grace as did they manipulate their softly tinted fans.

One booth became our favorite, one pretty attendent our favorite also, and as day after day slipped by without egotism I can state, I became the favorite of the soft-eyed attendant. The ceremonial celebrations were drawing to a close, when one day we sank into our accustomed places in Miss Cherry Blossoms corner of the booth. The hot saki was brought and poured into cups, my friends as usual, mine by a peculiar manner which might be turned as a backhand movement. I noticed nothing, Our Japenese friend sighed and gave vent to the national expression of surprise or assent, a long drawn hiss. My cigarettes and pipes were lighted by the little maid whose black eyes, cream tinted complexion and dove colored robes harmonized so well. She had seated herself beside me, the loose sleeves fell back from rounded arms as she gazed at me and anticipated each want, when we arose to depart I tendered a large fee, our attendant had been unusually atteution. The money was refused but the brown hand entended in an appeal, I raised to my lips and kissed. Once outside the tent our Japense friend explained that the girl was in love, all her actions of serving and attention had well known Japanese forms, I would hear more of my foolish acceptance of courtesy and the finale

Two days later one of my photos disapeared from our rooms at the hotel. The fourth day I received a note in Japanese. Four similar notes arrived and then came a pitiful letter written in very poor English. My lady love knew only the words, "Big man good bye and me and you," so I knew the letter was from Proxy. I called upon the willowy maiden and with my wife endeavored to dissuade her. She begged to be taken with us as a slave girl—a servant When I refused she displayed my photograph—the missing one—and swore that each week I remained away from her she would drive a nail through some part my body, finally driving a nail throun my heart, and at that time I should die. Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned, be it in Japan or in Shakespear. My Japanese friends were horrified when we returned to them and told them of the resolutions of the little maid. I would die and naught could save me. Three months later I returned from a moutain exploration. One of the first friends I met was Ogowa. "What has become of our little madcap?" I asked. "Ah! Honorable sir" she cried "You were saved in time, "The love-mad woman was affianced to a heroic Japanese Lieutenant who retured from the Formosan war but one month after you had departed into the heights of peerless Tyino-Yama and not because he wished to save you, but because he was jealous of your Honor's great height and noble face. He tore up your photograph and withdrew the nails, otherwise you would have died.

SIGNALING SOLDIERS

Since the news of the surrender of Santiago was signaled to Admiral Sampson by the heliograph, that device has become a more popular consideration in a prominent and interesting way. From time immemorial there has existed with all nations some system of communication by sight or sound. In this country it dates back to the aborigines, who made use of a method involving the waving of a blanket to obscure fire or smoke at long and short intervals. From this crude system of the red man there has evolved by slow stages the perfect heliograph code of to-day, whereby flashes of sunlight are sent scores of miles by the Morse system of telegraphy, conveying messages from one body of troops to another; or from headquarters to a detachment in the field. In the larger cities, of late years, when there is a street parade and the national guard turns out, spectators have noticed a peculiar detachment of troops following in the wake of each regiment—men with crossed flags on their sleeves, long leather-bound cases like gun cases under their arms, and other unfamiliar paraphernalia. These men constitute the "signal corps," and this branch of the service is now on a plane with the costly regular army.

The heliograph, or sun glass, is the greatest of modern improvements in the field of signalling devices. In form it is a glass four inches square, and in its center is a minute hole. The operator holds the glass to the sun in such a position that, sighting through the aperture, he strikes a spot on the sighting rod. This, on rifle principle, is gauged by distance, and is set by experiment until the operator knows that a certain point upon it will give him the range of the point he desires to send his message to by flashes. The communication, in dots and dashes, is carried on by a shutter with which the operator cuts off the flashes or elongates them at will. A short flash is a dot—a long one a dash. The heliograph can send its sunlight a wonderful distance. Last year in the Rocky Mountains, Captain Glassford, of the department of the Colorado, flashed a message from Mount Ellen to Mount Uncompaghre, a distance of 185 miles. The power of the light is also great. Turned on to the dome of a State capital building one day recently, from a station miles away, the refraction of the rays proved so great that the dome could not be seen.

The shutters are worked by two little rings, arranged like the handles of a scissors, into which the thumb and one finger of the operator fits. When the hand is closed the shutters fly back, exposing the mirror to the sunlight, and a flash is at once emitted like that with which a small boy tantalizes one in a window with a piece of mirror. With a few minutes' practice any telegraph operator can manage a heliograph. Reading the flashes as they came over miles of space to the other station is not so easy, however. One soldier stands behind the instrument which is not in use, and reads off the message flashed to him by the distant instrument to another man, who takes it down in regular form on a telegraph blank.

In November, 1893, Assistant Superintendent Lloyd, of the Western Union, tendered his services to the Second Illinois Regiment for the organization of a signal corps. This led to an organization, so that now in three State brigades there are ninety skilled signal men. The first important work of the corps was during the thirty-three days of camp service during the great Debs labor strike at Chicago. The system was here found to be invaluable, for in at least half a dozen instances the sun flashes warned bodies of soldiers of the approaching riot, or served to convey calls for assistance. There was a signal station at every threatened point. Later, at Camp Lincoln encampments, the system was advanced to the very highest grade of proficiency.

In addition to the heliograph, the various signal corps are now fully equipped with flags for day use, torches for night service, telegraph instruments and reels of wire, and every known device for transmitting messages by sight or sound, skilled signallers can telegraph by wire, by wigwag, by flashes, by torch, by knife or fork. They can make a common mirror do heliograph duty in time of need, and can clogdance to the dots and dashes of the Morse alphabet. During the war of the rebellion signalling was mainly done by flags. The code was cumbersome then, the heliograph unknown. Yet the signal corps was an effective aid to every division of the army. Grant signalled the orders that concentrated the brigades below Vicksburg, and in the later battle of Lookout Mountain, the famous "battle above the clouds," accurate information of the enemy's position was waved from cliff to valley headquarters, and from tree to riverside. General Albert J. Meyer was the father of the army signal service, and his principles—save as to code—are still followed.

The flag code now is very complete, and every move of the red flag to right or left, up or down, or swung in circles, conveys a definite message to field-glasses far away. During the Indian wars out West signalling was an important feature of an erratic and difficult warfare. The far-distance system was there in general vogue. It was the heliograph which caused the surrender of the terrible Apache chief, Geronimo. When he was corralled in some hundreds of square miles of Arizona desert, a signal service station was placed at every watering place. The flashes gave warning whenever the thirsty remnant of the once powerful band approached any of the springs. Finding that he would die of thirst unless he made a hopeless attack upon the troops, the chief at last consented to a parley and to final surrender. The effectiveness of the signal system with both land and sea forces during the Cuban war, is one of the most interesting and important features of that campaign. Everywhere the heliograph and the wig-wag system of flags were in use, and the signal corps were influential in hastening the course of many events upon which hung the destinies of army and fleet.

SOLDIERS USING THE HELIOGRAPH.

Duties of a Landsmen.

An uptown drug clerk desired to enlist in the United States navy. He was an efficient druggist, but he strenuously disliked being in undignified haste over anything. In fact, his disposition to take everything slowly and in the most dignified manner had seriously stood in the way of his advancement even in his own particular calling, and it was partly for this reason that he desired to join the navy.

"In what capacity do you wish to enlist?" asked the recruiting officer very briskly.

"As a druggist, sir," replied the applicant.

"Can't do it; we'll have to ship you as a landsman."

"What does a landsman have to do?" questioned the applicant, doubtfully.

"Anything he's told, and do it — quick, too."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

OLD BANBURY CROSS.

Once a Real Thing, Its Site Is Still Marked.

Old Banbury Cross, of which everyone has heard in the rhyme, "Ride a cock horse," is not a fiction. It once stood in Banbury, which is a town that dates back even to the Reformation. In literature, too, it has had secure mention any time the last 300 or 400 years.

BANBURY CROSS.

It is, therefore, as a disappointment to be told—although we knew it before, we always know it—that Banbury is a mere country place in England, which for centuries remained of no little commercial importance, even crediting it with plenty of cheese and tarts of its own production. These, it is true, are still famous all over England. In recent years there has been an accession of business there in the manufacture of agricultural implements. It is a market and borough town, situated on the River Cherwell, sixty-five miles from London. It boasts a large church that is an imitation of St. Paul's cathedral.

The original Banbury cross was, unfortunately, destroyed by the Puritans at the Reformation. A steeple type of structure, something on the lines of the Martyrs' Memorial at Oxford, now marks the place where it stood. The fine lady of the nursery jingle is an allusion to the habit of the "old woman of Banbury," known also as the "witch of the white horse." Like the cross she has long since disappeared, but her memory is kept green by the procession in the town at royal jubilees, occasions of rare occurrence, except in recent years under the present happy reign.

FATHER OF PENNY POSTAGE.

J. Henniker Heaton, M. P., Receiving Great Praise for His Work.

J. Henniker Heaton, M. P., the father of the imperial penny postage in the British Empire, is receiving no end of praise for his work, especially from the colonists. He has been in Parliament many years, and has made himself immensely popular by his labors for a reduction of the letter postage which is almost international. Perhaps Mr. Heaton was not altogether disinterested in the scheme, for he is the proprietor of one of the largest newspaper properties in Australia. At the same time he is receiving the blessings of millions of her majesty's subjects who write letters to friends beyond the seas. The penny postage plan went into effect on Christmas day, and is only one of its author's schemes for postal reform. It was he who introduced the telegraph money order system into Great Britain. He likewise showed the French postal authorities the utilities and beauties of the parcel post. Mr. Heaton has other phases of character than that of postal reformer. He is an author of ability and a contributor to the periodicals. His "Australian Dictionary of Dates and Men of the Time" is an authority and a most useful book. He was born at Rochester in 1848 and is a very rich man. Among his other achievements is that of inaugurating international parliamentary chess matches between Great Britain and the United States.

J. HENNIKER HEATON.

COAL IS KING.

Its Mighty Power Controls Our Entire Civilization.

We could not do without coal. This commodity has become an absolute necessity of modern life. A failure in the coal supply would deprive us at one blow of the means of locomotion, light, warmth and cooked food. It would more than treble the cost of all commodities which are at present manufactured by steam power. In our great cities it would at once cause an unprecedented famine, as it would be impossible to meet the requirements of the markets. It would convert our navy into a collection of useless hulks, and would probably establish Norway or Sweden as the greatest naval power in the world. It would make Russia the greatest commercial power, as this is the only country which uses oil almost entirely for purposes of locomotion, and which has enormous stores of that commodity within its borders. Countries with large populations would become uninhabitable, and the world would drift back into a pastoral condition. The vast majority of stocks and shares would be converted into so much waste paper. It would probably take at least a century to repair the devastation that would ensue.

Pearls of Great Price.

The most magnificent and costly pearl necklace in the world is in the possession of the Countess Henckel, well known in London and Paris. It is made of three historical necklaces, each of which has enjoyed considerable celebrity in former times. One of them, valued at £2,000, was sold to the Countess by a grandee of Spain, and is known as the "necklace of the Virgin of Atokha." The second belonged to the ex-Queen of Naples, and the third was the famous necklace belonging to the Empress Eugenie and by her lately sold to a London jeweler for £20,000.

An Old Palace.

Lambeth Palace, London, has been the home of the primates of Canterbury for seven centuries. This place can show specimens of almost every style of architecture which has prevailed since 1190.

SENATOR WILLIAM M. STEWART.

United States Senator William Morris Stewart of Nevada is known as the "Santa Claus" of the Senate. The Senator gets this name by way of his plentiful crop of shiny gray whiskers and his rubicund face, which beams through its snowy frame of beard with the incandescence of that robust health the old miner has ever enjoyed. Stewart was first elected to the Senate in 1864 and was re-elected in 1869. After that he practiced law in Nevada until 1887, when he was sent back to his seat to succeed Senator Fair, and he was re-elected in 1893. Senator Stewart has passed through some exciting and dangerous incidents during his long life. Born in New York, brought up in Ohio, and half educated at Yale, he went West in 1850 to dig gold, and found it. In 1860 he settled in Nevada and has been prominent in mining, law and politics ever since. Stewart likes to tell stories of his early mining experiences and to relate marvelous tales of his ability as a pistol shot, of certain brave work he did among the desperate men of '49. Stewart has ever shouted about Nevada—"my Nevada"—and his tremendous knowledge of mining laws won him a big practice and caused him to be popular. He has been the foremost champion of free silver in the Senate, and the foremost in Congress, with the exception of Richard Parks Bland.

REV. CHARLES CHINIQUY.

His Career Was Unparalleled in Canada's History.

The death of Rev. Charles Chiniquy, which occurred in Montreal recently, removed a prominent figure in Canadian religious circles and one who had a career unparalleled. Brought up a devout Roman Catholic and ordained a priest, he devoted the last thirty-nine years of his life to teaching a doctrine that was entirely opposed to the one he so zealously propagated in his youth.

He was born at Kamomaska, Quebec, in 1809 and was educated in the Catholic faith. When only 8 years of age he was thoroughly acquainted with the main facts of Bible history. He entered upon a theological course and was ordained in the Cathedral of Quebec in 1833. He became specially interested in temperance work in Quebec province and met with flattering success. His fame as a temperance advocate grew apace and the Parliament of Lower Canada in 1851 passed him a vote of thanks and £500 in recognition of his fight against drunkenness. The city of Montreal gave him a gold medal. The pope sent his benediction to Chinoquy for his work and the bishop of his diocese bestowed upon him the title of "Apostle of Temperance."

In 1850 he was called by Bishop Vandevelde, of Chicago, to found a Roman Catholic colony in the valley of the Mississippi. He accepted the task and brought over 5,000 French Canadians to St. Anne, Ill. Everything went well for a time, but Bishop Vandevelde died and his successor treated Father Chiniquy's colony in a way that displeased the priest, who appealed to the higher authorities of the church for protection against his bishop. In fact, Father Chiniquy's theological views were undergoing a change. The bishop interdicted him and a land speculator named Spink had him arrested on a certain charge. Chiniquy was defended by "Abe" Lincoln, and was honorably acquitted. Bishop O'Regan was deposed, but his successor, Bishop Smith, wished to subdue Chiniquy, and after a stormy interview declared that Chiniquy was no longer a priest of Rome.

The latter returned to his colony, told them what had taken place, explained how his views had changed and that he intended applying for admission to a Protestant body. His parishioners stood by him to a man and in 1860 the pastor and congregation were received into the Presbyterian Church.

INVENTIONS

Intended to Discourage the Noble Profession of Burglary.

Applications have been made to the Patent Office in Washington for the protection of three inventions to discourage burglary and more especially train robbery. They provide punishments compared with which the tortures of the Inquisition were mere pastimes.

The penalties are electrical. Those who make use of them may choose between scalding a burglar to death, filling him full of lead, or merely shocking him into unconsciousness, if it is not desired to execute him by machinery.

The best device is quite original. It provides for a kind of trap door directly in front of the safe, placed in such a position that it will be impossible for the burglar to reach the safe unless he steps upon it. Directly he touches this trap the robber will be enveloped in hissing, blistering steam.

The purely electrical protector is more interesting. It can be adjusted so that it will paralyze, maim or kill as is desired. A powerful electrical battery is connected with a safe. In front of the safe is a steel mat. When the thief stands on the mat and touches the knob or any part of the safe he will receive a shock that will put an end of his energy.—New York World.

BEECHER RIFLES CHURCH.

One of the Oldest in Kansas and One of the Most Interesting.

One of the most interesting churches in Kansas and a striking reminder of the character of Henry Ward Beecher stands in the little town of Wabaunsee. It is the Beecher Rifles Church, erected by the men who went out from Hartford, Conn., in 1854 to help free Kansas. Beecher went to the meeting at which the company was organized, and standing before the large audience subscribed enough to buy a rifle for one of the men. He went home to Brooklyn and raised enough in his own congregation to purchase a rifle, a Bible and a hymn-book for every member of the company, and these were carried away when the 125 men marched out of their home city toward the West. They built the church soon after founding their colony, and called it after their regiment, the Beecher Rifles. They went to church carrying the rifles, and stored them in the vestibule. Once they were called upon to attack Indians and Southerners while the service was in progress. The preacher adjourned until the skirmish was over and then returned to his sermon. The church is perhaps the oldest in the State, and is cherished as a reminder of a great man and of stirring times.

How a Town Is Populated.

Every town has a liar or two, a smart Aleck, some pretty girls, more loafers than it needs, a woman or two that tattles, an old fogy that the town would be better off without, men who stand on the street corners and make remarks about the women, a man who laughs an idiotic laugh every time he says anything, scores of men with the caboose of their trousers worn smooth as glass, men who can tell you about how the war question should be settled, the weather and how to run other people's business, but who have made a dismal failure of their own.—Northport News.

FAMOUS HEADLESS SWORD OF CHINA.

This picture shows China's famous headless sword, which has been an institution ever since the foundation of the Chinese empire. It gives the right to behead any person at sight regardless of rank or dignity. Although the "Shang Fund" sword has been an institution ever since earliest Chinese history, it has been only once bestowed during the present dynasty.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

WE CAN WIN 1900.

Senator Jones, Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, has issued the following statement in reply to many inquiries that have come to the headquarters of the Democratic National Committee:

The claim of the Republican papers that the Senate is already irrevocably against silver and will so stand until 1903 at the earliest, is like many of their extreme claims, in my opinion, not well founded. Upon the passage of what is known as the Teller resolution of Jan. 28, 1898, which declared that the bonds of the Government are payable, "principal and interest in silver dollars, coins of the United States, containing 412½ grains of standard silver," and that "to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in the payment of such bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith, nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditors," there was a majority of fifteen votes in the Senate in its favor. This may be reasonably accepted as a test vote on the silver question. A gold man has since been elected from Oregon to fill a vacancy, which reduces our majority now to fourteen. Of those who voted in favor of that proposition at that time, seven Senators will probably be succeeded on the 4th of March next by Senators opposed to the unlimited coinage of silver, namely: Senators Allen of Nebraska, Mitchell of Wisconsin, Murphy of New York, Roach of North Dakota, Smith of New Jersey, Turpie of Indiana and White of California. This will leave the two sides equal and the deciding vote will be in the hands of the Vice-President. This condition of things hardly warrants the triumphant claims of the gold men that they have captured the Senate and will hold it for many years to come. This year an unusual proportion of bimetallists, who come from close States, have had their terms to expire. In 1900, however, all this will be evened up by a larger proportion of the gold men retiring, who come from close States. What is likely to be the condition of the Senate in 1901 can be easily seen. The terms of thirty Senators expire at that time. Of these thirty, eleven who are now friendly to silver may safely be counted as absolutely certain to be succeeded by silver men. These Senators come from the following States: Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Texas and Virginia. The following States may be expected to elect gold men to succeed gold men at that time: Maine, Massachusetts and Rhode Island. New Hampshire is now represented by a silver man, whose term will expire in 1901. Much will depend in that State upon the personal popularity of the present Senator, Mr. Chandler, but if he should be succeeded by a gold man, Louisiana and Kentucky, now represented by gold men, are certain to send two bimetallists in their stead, leaving the advantage so far with the silver men. In two States—South Dakota and Delaware—where we now have silver Senators, there will be contests, and the most that can be claimed by the gold men is that we are not positively certain to hold these States; while the following States, now represented by gold men, can certainly not be claimed as sure to return a solid gold delegation, namely: Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Jersey, Oregon, West Virginia and Wyoming. From all this it is perfectly safe to assert, without fear of contradiction, that if the bimetallists succeed in electing the President in 1900, they will unquestionably have a clear working majority in the United States Senate.

JAMES K. JONES.

Tribune for the Free Trade.

It is our painful duty to call the attention of the Republican sanhedrin to the fact that the Chicago Tribune is openly advocating free trade again. This fall from grace occurs at intervals of about four years, usually midway between presidential elections, and continues until the Republican national convention is called, when the Tribune restudies the tariff question and gets into line with more or less grace and enthusiasm. This time the Tribune is approaching the flop with the shy and coy demeanor of a tomcat reconnoitering a saucer of cream. It has begun by advocating free trade in coal, under the pretext that we can undersell the Canadian coal miners in their own territory. But this, of course, is merely an entering wedge. The symptoms are unmistakable. Within a few weeks the Tribune will be shouting for free trade all along the line and quoting heterodox authorities like Sumner and Wells to prove that absolute commercial freedom is the only salvation. The sanhedrin will have to look after the Tribune if it would avert this distressing exhibition.—Chicago Chronicle.

Philippines as Rotton Boroughs.

The Philippine Islands once annexed, how long would it be before the Republican party would resolve that all Malays are brethren and entitled to full political rights? Does any sane man believe that the free institutions of this republic can withstand such an inoculation of political disease as this would be? Does any man imagine that the Republican party leaders would shrink from increasing their power by the creation of rotten boroughs in the Philippines? We hope the opponents of annexation will prevent the ratification of the treaty by all known parliamentary methods until some guarantee is given against the untold evils that would result from it.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Republican Confession.

It must be frankly recognized that the situation in the Philippines is unsatisfactory and dangerous. From the military point of view the small force which the United States have in the archipelago is badly divided in the face of an enemy of superior numbers, while the navy is equally scattered. From the political point of view our attitude is halting and timid—the very thing to impress the childlike Filipinos with the belief that they are masters of the situation and can drive off the Americans far easier than they could the Spaniards.—New York Tribune.

No Pinning McKinley Down.

In default of an authoritative declaration of public policy there can be no assurance whatever of the direction in which the country may go, with McKinley at the helm of affairs. He is constitutionally averse to showing his hand; he is past master in the art of keeping things smooth and quiet and he will always do so unless absolutely compelled to declare himself. The Senators who are unwilling to accept the peace treaty unless some assurance is given of the public policy which will be pursued under it cannot afford to rely upon any general promises nor can they hope to bring the administration or its friends to a stand after the treaty has once been ratified.—Baltimore News.

Water as "Solid" Prosperity.

Says Chauncey M. Depew, Senator for the State of Vanderbilt: "This prosperity is solid. There is no doubt of that, and conditions are such that it ought to last. The balance of trade is in our favor for the first time in years, and it ought to continue." Some other "authorities" express concurrences in the opinion of the Vanderbilt Senator that "this prosperity is solid." But others who are less addicted to postprandial eloquence are not inclined to think that the prosperity which is said to have added over $150,000,000 to the wealth of twenty-seven men by a mad up-rush of stock in Wall street is as solid and lasting as the pyramid of Gizeh.

Union Labor and Prison-Made Goods.

There is much force in the objections of the labor unions against prison-made goods, made cheaply because of the cheap labor, coming on the market in competition with free-labor-made goods, but careful investigation shows, we believe, that the effect of this competition is much less than is the general thought. An Ohio prison expert makes the claim that only fifty-two one-hundredths of one per cent. of the total goods manufactured in this country is made in penal institutions, and if this is true, then the competition from prison-made goods is very insignificant.—Indianapolis News.

One of the "New Companies."

The zinc trust reported to have been organized a few days ago is declared by its organizer not to be a "trust," but merely a new zinc company, "into which several concerns now established will be merged." Just so. There are no "trusts" nowadays. They are all "new companies." There is no white lime trust either. Nevertheless the "Western White Lime Association," with a capitalization of $1,500,000, announces that the price of white lime is to be put up from 35 to 45 cents per barrel in the States of Ohio, Indiana and Michigan, controlled by the association.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Perilous Boom in Trusts.

The success of two or three great trusts has stimulated the production of all manner of combination schemes for similar purposes, and they are now coming daily upon the market in squads and companies in the particular interest of promoters, of stock market gamblers and of the owners of combined plants who want to sell out, and not in the interest of the public. The more severely investors let such securities alone the less disastrous will be the inevitable crash proceeding from this reckless trust ballooning.—Springfield, Mass., Republican.

An Absurd Situation.

There is something bordering on the absurd when a great military leader in the presence of the enemy, with complete control of the situation, if undisturbed, is liable to be checked, thwarted, or even superseded by a man or set of men who have no accurate knowledge of the real situation at the front, no comprehension of military affairs, and who may be under the influence of advisers whose only object is to ruin the commanding general, or to make political capital for the next election.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Seeing It Differently Now.

When President Cleveland appointed ex-Congressman Blount of Georgia to investigate and report on the Hawaiian conspiracy Republican papers indignantly proclaimed that the President had exceeded his authority in making the appointment. But President McKinley hasn't taken Republican opinion for his guidance in this matter, for he has appointed more commissioners than any other President we ever had. And the Republican papers do not say a word about exceeding authority.—Utica Observer.

General Eagan's Weak Plea.

Does any sensible citizen believe for a moment that a court-martial, sitting on the case of a private charged with an offense against an officer similar in character to the offense General Eagan is charged with committing, would for an instant consider the plea of "temporary insanity" or "mental aberration," pleaded in defense of General Eagan? Every one knows that under similar circumstances the private would receive the full penalty of military law.—Nashville American.

Begin at the Primaries.

It is more manly to get right down into the arena and work and fight for honest politics and good government than to stand off and whine and grumble because of dishonest politics and bad government. Shove the selfish politicians aside—they are in the minority if reputable Democrats do their duty. Take up your share of party work and do it. Start in with the primaries and go straight up the line.—St. Louis Republic.

Indorsing an Unknown Policy.

The Republican members of the Connecticut House of Representatives have voted to indorse the President's policy over yonder, but not one of them can explain why it is. Even Senator Lodge gave it up in his speech recently, for he admitted that he had no idea what the future would bring forth. It's glorious drifting, anyhow.—Springfield, Mass., Republican.

Facts That Shine Out.

However the facts may be glossed over, the war, brief as it was, disclosed conditions in the military service which are not creditable to the country. Those who did the fighting increased the fame of America, but some of the men in high places did not enhance the national glory.—Des Moines Leader.

Not a Lawyer.

If all newspaper stories are true, lawyers meet with many reverses in their attempts to browbeat feminine witnesses. One of the latest examples comes from the Cleveland Leader.

"Now," said the lawyer who was conducting the cross-examination, "you will please state how and where you first met this man."

"I think," said the lady with the sharp nose, "that it was——"

"Never mind what you think," interrupted the lawyer. "We want facts here. We don't care what you think, and we haven't time to listen to what you think. Now please tell us where and when it was that you first met this man."

The witness made no reply.

"Come, come," urged the lawyer, "I demand an answer to the question I have put."

"The witness will please answer the question," said the court, in impressive tones.

"Can't," said the lady.

"Why not?"

"The court doesn't care to hear what I think, does it?"

"No."

"Then there's no use a-questioning me any further. I am not a lawyer. I can't talk without thinking."

So they called the next witness.

Mule Dentistry.

A Mexican mining company which owns 300 mules keeps a dentist on its staff simply to look after the mules' teeth.

One of Mr. Mule's amiable weaknesses is the habit of bolting his food, which frequently causes dyspepsia or other diseases. This bolting of his food is not caused by a desire to hasten his meal, but because his molars, or back teeth, having more work to perform than his front teeth, wear away in the course of a few years, and become much shorter than the front ones, thus allowing the food to pass into the stomach without being properly masticated. In cases of this kind the incisors, or front teeth, have to be filed down an eighth or a quarter of an inch.

The molars of a mule are three and a half inches in length, while the incisors measure two and a half inches, and, judging from his signs of pain, the nerves are as sensitive as those of human beings. An expert dentist operates on twenty-four mules a day.

The extracting instruments are from two to three feet in length, and the entire case of instruments weighs fully fifty pounds. The teeth of every mine mule are examined and treated, if necessary, once or twice a year.

Cost of Nicaragua Canal.

The estimates for constructing the Nicaragua Canal vary from $115,000,000 to $150,000,000. How different are the estimates of the people as to the value of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It is agreed that this remedy is unsurpassed for indigestion, biliousness, constipation, nervousness and sleeplessness. It is such an agreeable medicine to take.

How the Eskimo Count.

The Eskimo count by their fingers—one, two, three, four, five. About five and up to ten they use the second hand; thus, six is "the first finger on the other hand." Above ten, they employ the toes. Thirteen, for instance, is "three toes upon the one foot," and eighteen, "three toes upon the second foot." Twenty, they describe as "a whole man." They seldom go further than this, but they can do so if necessary; for example, they express twenty-two by saying: "two on the second man;" thirty-seven by two toes on the second man's second foot;" forty is "the whole of a second man." According to Dr. Nansen they cannot, or do not, count beyond one hundred, which is "the whole of the fifth man."

He Saw Too Much.

Mrs. Jaggs—That will do, Mr. Jaggs. You've been drinking again!

What a Former Resident of Cascia County, Idaho, Has to Say Regarding Western Canada.

Mr. T. A. Tolman of Lacombe, Alberta, N. W. T., a former resident of Cascia County, Idaho, who moved to Western Canada in July, 1894, writes as follows:

"I brought here thirty-four head of cattle, fifteen horses, two wagons, two sets of harness and one hundred and fifty dollars in cash. I homesteaded the southeast quarter of section 28, township 40, range 26, west of the fourth meridian, also purchased a quarter section of Canadian Pacific Railway land. I have been farming more or less nearly all my life and I am convinced that you can raise crops 40 per cent cheaper here than where I came from. My capital at present, counting everything, is about five thousand dollars. The yield of my grain all round in 1897 was 60 bushels per acre. This year (1898) yield of wheat per acre 37½ bushels, oats 50 bushels, barley 35 and potatoes 400 per acre. I consider this is a much better country for a man than where I came from, provided he is industrious. You get a free homestead here and Canadian Pacific Railway lands are cheap and the terms easy. I have now made my seventh payment on the land purchased by me and am much pleased with my purchase, as the land has already much more than paid for itself. School law here is decidedly ahead of where I came from, and there are schools wherever there are settlers."

True Greatness In Medicine

Is proved by the health of the people who have taken it. More people have been made well, more cases of disease and sickness have been cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla than by any other medicine in the world. SMALLEST LOT IN NEW YORK.

It Occupies a Curious Niche in a Corner Property.

The smallest piece of real estate in New York is at the northwest corner of 14th street and Irving place. It occupies a curious little niche in the corner property and has a frontage of a few inches on both these important streets. Taxes are regularly paid on it and the high rent which its owner demands for it has been paid regularly for years. The property is so small that a man of ordinary height can readily stand with a foot on each of its boundaries. Despite its diminutive size it has been used for several purposes. A news stand was once located there and attracted customers from both streets. In using the lot even for this purpose, however, it was found necessary to occupy part of the sidewalk in front. The entire estate was taken up with but two or three piles of folded papers. The man who presided over the news stand was obliged to stand on his neighbor's property while he reached over his own to hand a customer a paper. At another time a peanut stand was set up and the entire property was taken up with the roasting apparatus, and if a peanut was knocked off the stand it fell on the next neighbor's grounds.

The smallest estate is now occupied by a substantial little pavilion, covered with an elaborate roof which extends out over its limits. This diminutive estate is supposed to have been due to a mistake of the surveyors years ago. The present owner will not listen to any offers for its sale. It has been rented for years for $50 a month and he is well satisfied with the investment. The most determined effort to buy the estate has been made by the owners of the hotel which occupies the adjoining site, but the owner of the smallest estate declares that his property is not on the market.

MILLIONS TO WED MILLIONS.

Scion of the Vanderbilts Will Marry a California Heiress.

The interesting announcement has been made of the engagement of William K. Vanderbilt and Miss Virginia Fair, the California heiress. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., is the son of William K. Vanderbilt, who is the second son of the late William H. Vanderbilt. Miss Fair, by this alliance, will become the sister-in-law of the Duchess of Marlborough, and will add her own independent fortune to that of her husband, who is the oldest male descendant of

MISS VIRGINIA FAIR.

William Kissam Vanderbilt, and who will be the possessor of most of the millions of the second branch of the family.

Young Vanderbilt is not very good-looking, but he inherits much of the commercial genius and thrift of his grandfather and of the old "commodore," who began the upbuilding of the prodigious material wealth his numerous descendants now enjoy and conserve. Little Willie K. is 21 years old, and will graduate in two years.

Miss Fair is one of the most winsome of the girls in New York society. To her personal charms is added the luster of immense wealth in her own right. She made her debut in New York society five years ago, at the age of 18. The future Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt has black eyes and hair, lively complexion and a plump figure. Although she is under the medium height, she weighs 130 pounds. The precise amount of Miss Fair's fortune it is difficult to state. The great Fair wealth can only be estimated, but Virginia's share is said to be in the neighborhood of $5,000,000.

Strategic Move.

"I remember, I remember——"

the little boy on the country schoolhouse platform began, and then he stuck. The poem had gone completely. The boy he hated most began tittering. The occasion was becoming critical. The little boy, with a grand rally and a flash of inspiration, pulled from his pocket his red, white and blue (and black, more or less) handkerchief, shouted and wound up with "I remember the Maine."—Indianapolis Journal.

Velocity of Sound.

Some interesting experiments on the velocity of sound were recently made by M. Frot, near Bourges. Two sets of experiments gave for the velocity in air at 0 degrees centigrade mean results of 330.6 and 330.9 meters per second. The times were measured automatically by electric chronographs.

TUMOR EXPELLED.

Unqualified Success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs. Elizabeth Wheelock, Magnolia, Iowa, in the following letter describes her recovery from a very critical condition:

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—I have been taking your Vegetable Compound, and am now ready to sound its praises. It has done wonders for me in relieving me of a tumor.

"My health has been poor for three years. Change of life was working upon me. I was very much bloated and was a burden to myself. Was troubled with smothering spells, also palpitation of the heart and that bearing-down feeling, and could not be on my feet much.

"I was growing worse all the time, until I took your medicine.

"After taking three boxes of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Lozenges, the tumor passed from me.

"My health has been better ever since, can now walk quite a distance and am troubled no more with palpitation of the heart or bloating. I recommend your medicine to all sufferers from female troubles."

It is hardly reasonable to suppose that any one can doubt the efficiency of Mrs. Pinkham's methods and medicine in the face of the tremendous volume of testimony.

Naval Nomenclature.

The animal world has been drawn upon to furnish names for various things on shipboard. Such, for example are: "Flemish horse," a short foot rope under the yard arms; "lizard," a short rope with a ring in the end for use in "tripping" one of the lighter yards; "hounds," a part of the mast; "bull rope," a rope used in hauling small spars into the rigging; "cat head," a protuberance from the bow to which the anchor is hauled up; "cat," the tackle used to haul the anchor to the cat head; "fish," another tackle used in securing the anchor; the "leech" is the side of a square sail; "dolphin striker," a short spar perpendicular to and under the bowsprit; "dog's ear," a piece of sail projecting when sails are furled; "snake," to join two ropes by zigzagging a smaller rope between them; a "jackass" is a big stuffed ball used to plug up holes to keep the water out.

Relics of Revolutionary Period.

Ex-Mayor Hewitt of New York city has bought eighteen links of the historical chain that was stretched across the Hudson from West Point to Constitution Island in 1778. Each link weighs 300 pounds and is 3 feet 9 inches long. Mr. Hewitt will display the links on the lawn of his country seat near Greenwood Lake, N. J. Cooper, Hewitt & Co. own the iron mine, near the Sterling mines, which produced the ore that went into the chain. The forge where the chain was made is at Tuxedo. The chain never was passed by the British. Mr. Hewitt bought the links from a Front street, New York, curiosity dealer after negotiations extending four years.

Expense of Living in Japan.

A writer in the Literary Digest says that in Japan a merchant, manufacturer or gentleman farmer of the first class spends on an average $40 a year; of the second class, $25; of the third class, $16. A first class wedding costs $120 and a first class funeral $80.

Language Makers.

Modern medicine possesses a vast technical vocabulary, which is at once rich and precise, and to which the progress of discovery is constantly adding fresh terms. The spread of education and interest in sanitation is more and more incorporating medical terminology into common speech. But besides this and besides the names of familiar names of diseases and remedies, we have numerous words which, originally taken from medicine, have become part and parcel of our daily speech, and are no longer confined to strictly literal uses. For example, there are such words as "crisis," "fever," "symptom," "chronic," and many others. Going further back we have words derived from medical theories now superseded, as "mercurial," "jovial," "martial," and "lunatic," "melancholy," "phlegmatic," "choleric," "humor," with all its derivatives. As medical terminology is almost wholly derived from the classic languages this immense addition is purely foreign.

A German scientist declared that the epistolary phrase "10,000 kisses" was merely a rhetorical flourish, as no one, within a limited time, could accomplish the feat. At the end of the first hour he had scored 2,000, another 1,000 was added in the second, but in the third, at the 3,750th kiss, the operator's lips became paralyzed, and he lost consciousness.

After-Effects of the GRIP

Grip is a treacherous disease. You think it is cured and the slightest cold brings on a relapse.

Its victims are always left in a weakened condition—blood impure and impoverished; nerves shattered. Pneumonia, heart disease and nervous prostration are often the result.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People will drive every trace of the poisonous germs from the system, build up and enrich the blood and strengthen the nerves. A trial will prove this. Read the evidence:

When the grip last visited this section Herman H. Eveler, of 111 W. Main St., Jefferson, Mo., a well-known contractor and builder, was one of the victims, and he has since been troubled with the after-effects of the disease. A year ago his health began to fail, and he was obliged to discontinue work. That he lives to-day is almost a miracle. He says:

"I was troubled with shortness of breath, palpitation of the heart and a general debility. My back also pained me severely.

"I tried one doctor after another and numerous remedies suggested by my friends, but without apparent benefit, and began to give up hope. Then I saw Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People extolled in a St. Louis paper, and after investigation decided to give them a trial.

"After using the first box I felt wonderfully relieved and was satisfied that the pills were putting me on the road to recovery. I bought two more boxes and continued taking them.

"After taking four boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People I am restored to good health. I feel like a new man, and having the will and energy of my former days returned, I am capable of transacting my business with increased ambition.

"Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are a wonderful medicine and any one suffering from the after-effects of the grip will find that these pills are the specific." H. H. EVELER.

OBITUARY

Eliza Snellenbarger was born Jan. 5, 1829, in Columbiana County Ohio, and after a lingering sickness of more than two years with dropsy and heart disease, she departed this life Jan 28, 1899; aged 70 years and 21 days. She was baptized in infancy and after arriving at the proper age made a profession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and united with the Reformed church by the solemn rite of confirmation in Holmes County, Ohio, and after removing to Indiana, she united with the Reformed church at Fairfield. She was married to Jacob Deetz March 1, 1855, in DeKalb County, Ind.

During her sickness she never murmured, but earnestly prayed for grace to sustain her in life and in the hour of death. She leaves sorrowing, a husband, two full brothers, one sister, five half brothers, three half sisters and many friends and relative to mourn her departure. Their loss we trust is her eternal gain. Funeral services were held on Saturday, Jan. 28, at Fairfield, Ind., conducted by Rev. J A. Seitz, Interment in church cemetery.

How To Find Out.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours: a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains your linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passages. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. At druggists fifty cents or one dollar.

You may have a sample bottle and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail, if you send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing be sure and mention that you read this generous offer in The Auburn Courier.

Creating a New Trust.

(Madison Courier, Jan. 30th.)

Senate Bill No. 116 will, if passed unamended, destroy many of the Indiana county papers and impair the efficiency of all. Every county newspaper has a job office and many of them small or large book binderies. They now receive a considerable portion of the county printing and binding and it enables them to be better papers than they can otherwise be and live. Requiring the county papers to bid against the big supply houses of the large cities, virtually creates a new, Trust, thus taking the work away from all the small cities and towns and concentrating it in Indianapolis and Chicago. Every one at all familiar with the subject knows that the big houses present bids that are Chinese puzzles. The smartest business men cannot unravel them. They do not turn out as they seem. They are low on some items, but in the outcome are high in the aggregate. The proposed "reform" will not be reform, but fraud. It will no save the people money, but will increase expense. Every man in General Assembly who votes for Senate Bill No. 119 in the present form will find he has made a mistake, and injured his own county to aggrandize Indianapolis or Chicago. It will throw one or more men out of employment in every good county printing office in Indiana.

HOME FROM CUBA.

An Auburn Business Man's Experience in the Queen of the Antilles.

Mr. McIntyre is not an expansionist, especially since going to Cuba. He says they are not a desirable lot of citizens to take into our Union. The idea that the late insurgents have of liberty is a chance to get back at the Spaniards, for the many acts of injustice the Spaniards have done to the Cubans. Spaniards have robbed the Cubans for hundreds of years, and on the slightest pretexts have confiscated their property and given it to favorites of the Spanish leaders. And now the Cubans wish to confiscate Spanish property, to burn, kill and destroy. The Spaniards themselves would not be desirable citizens. The lower classes of Cubans, are mainly bandits. It would be difficult to make good citizens of them. They do not like to work, and conditions there are such that they do not need to work. Their wants are few, and are easily supplied. For food, tropical fruits are everywhere abundant and cheap. Sweet potatoes etc, are easily raised and in six weeks from planting, will be ready to eat Clothing is hardly necessary. Even now only the lightest materials and the fewest garments are needed. And this remark applies chiefly to grown people. Children, the most of them, go absolutely naked till they are ten or twelve years of age, when they begin to put on a few light garments. Houses are of the cheapest, for out-door life is pleasant the year round. The smoking habit is the most expensive one they have, for they all smoke, women as well as men. But the qualities of cigars and cigarettes they use are very cheap. But the high grades of cigars, such as are sent out to the world for sale among the wealthy are high priced. Mr. McIntyre brought home some of these high priced ones, and has treated a number of his friends to real havanas worth fifty cents each.

Speaking of the late rebellion in the island, Mr. McIntyre was surprised to hear well posted men insist there had been no battles between the Spaniards and the Cubans. The facts are, the Cubans really had no army at the best. they had but the skeleton of an army, composed mainly of officers. When the Spaniards heard that an army of insurgents had gathered at a certain point they sent a force against them. But on reaching the given place, no one was there. The few men who had formed a sort of headquarters there, had vanished into woods and hills. Mr McIntyre and his party, went out of Havana to see a large insurgent camp said to be a few miles out. They found less than fifty men and these said there had been an army, but the men had mostly gone into the city to get work, or out among the few plantations that had survived the ravages of both armies. Soon after our forces had occupied Havana, it was announced that Gomez and his army were to march into the city on a given day, as a sort of triumphal entry. He was to come 15,000 strong. Well he came, and with him less than 200 men of all ranks. In view of this state of things, we can see how absurd it is for Gomez to ask us to give him $57,000,000 with which to pay the soldiers of his army.

He did not omit going into the harbor to see the wreck of the ill-fated Maine. He says it is a sad sight, and he suggests as the sunken hull can never be saved or removed, it would be a good thing to erect a lighthouse on it, and so perpetuate the memory of the gallant ship and her gallant dead, by making it useful to save the lives of others.

They found as we have said that Havana was a beautiful city in many respects. There are fine streets, and many fine buildings, lovely public places or squares which they call a "plaza." But on the other hand there are many back streets and parts of the town that are very undesirable. The American officers in charge of the police and sanitary work of the city, estimate several millions as the cost of putting it into proper condition. Its population is over 300,000.

In view of the tremendously strong defenses of Havana about the harbor on both sides of the entrance, and on the land side, Mr. McIntyre is of the opinion it would have been a costly job to have taken it by force, even if we could have taken it at all. We were wise to conquer a peace by taking Santiago and destroying their fleet. So we got Havana with no more fighting right there, that a few times bombarding it from a pretty safe distance.

All kinds of business is starting up again, but it is mainly as before' in the hands of those who speak only the Spanish. Even our own army does not do much trading in the city, as we furnish from home what the men really need As an example of these conditions, Mr. McIntyre mentions the fact a splendidly equipped theater company went over there and put on a good play in English at one of the best theaters. The receipts were only about eight dollars and they had to give it up. There were enough American soldiers to give them good houses, but they are kept in camp, and in the city were but few who could understand an English play.

The weather was too warm for comfort, being about like our July weather. Many had to buy lighter clothing. Then when he came home, he struck Auburn in zero weather. It was a severe change.

All things considered, Mr. McIntyre does not think Cuba a desirable addition to our territory or population. It would be difficult for them to learn our ways or enjoy what we consider natural freedom. The same objection that is made to the acquisition of the Philippines applies a certain extent to Cuba. The best we can do he thinks is to give them a good, safe start and let them go for themselves.

Tramps vs Citizens

Whose rights shall be respected? The tramp, or our law abiding citizens? The questions are absurd to our enlightened people. But these are questions now confronting us.

Fellow citizens, it is a shame, yes a disgrace to our enlightened community to tolerate a set of dirty, filthy tramps to inhabit our school houses nightly. A place which of all others should be kept free from all foul and contagious germs if we value the health of our children. Our school house have become their rendevous. The cost of fuel used, will equal that of our school.

Our law makers knowing the needs of the people, should frame a law giving our civil officers power to act. Establish stone piles, for the benefit of our roads. No one could object to good roads or free labor upon our public highways as all would be benefited thereby.

Story of a Slave.

To be bound hand and foot for years by the chains of disease is the worst form of slavery. George D. Williams, of Manchester, Mich., tells how such a slave was made free. He says: "My wife has been so helpless for five years that she could not turn over in bed alone. After using two bottles of Electric Bitters, she is wonderfully improved and able to do her own work." This supreme remedy for female diseases quickly cures nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, headache, fainting and dizzy spells. This miracle working medicine is a godsend to weak, sickly, run down people. Every bottle guaranteed. Only 50 cents. Sold by L. B. McCord the Druggist.

ONLY ONE TERM FOR McKINLEY

Ex-Senator Blackburn's Account of His Interview with the President.

During the time they were in the house together Joseph C S. Blackburn of Kentucky and William McKinley of Ohio were great friends personally, though always in radical opposition as to politics. As a consequence the Kentuckian is sure of a warm welcome whenever he calls at the white house. "The last time I was at the executive mansion," said Mr. Blackburn a few days ago, "was in response to a personal invitation from the president to call. Mr. McKinley appeared anxious to obtain my opinion of the political outlook for the future. I told him frankly that in my judgment he could not be re-elected. He seemed surprised. 'Your administration,' I said, 'has fought a brief and successful war, but your troubles have only just begun. The result of the late war issues growing out of it will, in my judgment, swamp both you and your administration. You cannot help it that I can see. You are not responsible. You are simply a victim of circumstances of fate. I do not believe that either of us or, in fact, anyone alive today will live to see an administration succeed itself in office. Public sentiment in this country changes too rapidly. What the public wants today and gets it is certain not to want tomorrow.' What did the president say? Well, he told me that he didn't agree with me, but that he would always be glad to see me at the white house whenever I felt inclined to call. I reminded Mr. McKinley that Polk had not been re-elected, although his administration had fought the Mexican war, which brought a large addition to our territory. Mr. McKinley is a gentleman and an able politician, but he cannot succeed himself. No president can or ever will succeed himself during the lifetime of the present generation."

A Bamboo Suspension Bridge.

A recent British consular report from the far east describes a suspension bridge of 300 feet span, made of bamboo. The cane was split up into fibers and twisted together to form the cables. Considering its span, the material of the structure is quite remarkable. The old tradition that almost anything can be made out of bamboo receives here a good illustration in the field of engineering.

DISEASES THAT KILL

Consumption is catarrh of the lungs. Certain complications make consumption incurable.

Most cases of death from consumption are the direct result of neglected catarrh.

Pe-ru-na works harmoniously with nature to eject the tubercles from the lungs, and works so successfully that if there is a cure for consumption Pe-ru-na is the remedy.

Read this letter from Mrs. H. A. Tyner, of Four Oaks, N. C., about her daughter, Mrs. L. Keene. She says:

Pe-ru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, O.

DEAR SIRS:—"My daughter had every symptom of consumption—suppression of menses, night sweats and great emaciation. She was so low that none of our neighbors thought she could live. In May Mr. C. R. Adams, of this place, who had taken Pe-ru-na, told me if anything would help her Pe-ru-na would. I got a bottle of it and some rock candy and began giving it to her. During the first few days she was so weak she could only take a half teaspoonful at a time, but I gave it to her as often as she could bear it. In less than a week she could walk two hundred yards and back without resting; she kept getting stronger, and in twelve months she seemed to be as well as she ever was in her life. I feel, and so does every one that knew about her sickness, that Pe-ru-na saved her life. My daughter's name is Mrs. L. Keene."

THE BILL PASSES.

Senator Nusbaum's County Commissioner Bill gets a Unanimous Vote.

About the beginning of the session, we published this bill in full as our readers will remember. A letter dated Tuesday, Feb. 7, has been received from him, in which he states, that the bill passed the Senate without a single vote being recorded against it. It was called up in the House Tuesday, and there was not a vote against it. It seem that a number of counties had talked the matter up. It is the bill to restrict the length of special sessions. There is also pending, a bill to put all county commissioners on a salary, the pay being scaled to suit the probable needs of the county. This fixes the compensation of our commissioners at about $250 a year, the county being rated at a population of 30.000. In Noble county' they will get about $250 having about the same population. It is plain, however, that commissioners have more work here than those in Noble. So we presume some difference in the salary will be made, at least it appears to us that the proportion should be about $200 for Noble if ours gets $250.

As to the township government bill, Senator Nusbaum is in doubt as to its working well. For our own part we believe some change should be made, that would insure good township management, but this bill has so much machinery that we are not able to say how it would work. No doubt our representatives, Dr. Nusbaum and Mr. Brown, who are on the ground and studying the features of the bill, will be better able to judge, than we who are at home.

OBITUARY

Elizabeth Wilson Owens, wife of John Owens was born in Holmes Co. Ohio, May 30, 1834, and departed this life at her home in Auburn Sabbath evening Feb. 5, 1899, at the ripe age of 64 years, 6 months and 5 days. She was united in marriage to John Owens in the year 1873. To this union were born no children, but she commenced at once the duties and cares of motherhood, in rearing the three children who were left motherless. Mr. and Mrs. Owens moved to Auburn, Ind., 12 years ago, where they have since lived. Mrs. Owens was a faithful wife and devoted mother: An obliging and useful neighbor, her life was full of kind ministrations to others who were in need. In all, her life was full of good works, and beautiful indeed. She will be greatly missed by those who knew her best. Mrs. Owens leaves to mourn her death a husband, three step children, one full sister, one half sister and four half brothers besides many other friends. The funeral service was conducted from the house Wednesday forenoon at 11 o'clock. Interment took place in Evergreen cemetery. Rev, J. D. Brosy officiating.

The Auburn Hardwood Co.

This is the title of the new company that has bought out Virge DeWitt at the Band Sawmill. The men interested are A. C. Robbins, Charles McClellan and Edward Robbins. Charles McClellan and A. C. Robbins are already experienced in the timber business, having been the main men in the Greenler factory, and now engaged with W. C. Hartman in the Cooperage factory at Roann. Edward Robbins also, has had a good deal of business experiences and for a year or more has been in charge of the books of the Greenler Company. All are men of push with abundant financial resources and will make the mill as great a business center as it was under the Nickey—Gandy firm at least. Logs are coming in rapidly and acres of ground are now covered with them. They will deal in hardwood lumber. and in fact any such timber as is available in this section of the state, will be worked up. Those who have timber to sell will find it to their interest to see the Auburn Hardwood Company.

Are You Constipated?

You may not know it or at least fail to realize it but Constipation is the greatest enemy to mankind. This condition unless corrected will bring on Indigestion and Dyspepsia. This condition places the system in such shape that if you are exposed to any one of the different kind of fevers you are sure to be affected thereby. In this condition a large amount of poisonous matter is retained in the system and you are therefore not in a condition to throw off disease. A cold cannot be eradicated when the system is clogged. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin gives perfect relief for this trouble. Try a 10c bottle just once; you will be convinced. Also in 50c and $1.00 sizes of Davenport.

OBITUARY

Elizabeth Reinœhl, daughter of John and Nancy (Weirich) Hovarter, was born in Wayne county, Ohio, Dec. 25, 1846, and died at her home in DeKalb county, Ind., Feb. 6, 1899, aged 52 years, 1 month and 12 days. At the early age of nine months, she with her parents came to DeKalb county, Ind., where she resided till death. When about 18 years of age she united with the "Church of God," and it is believed, died in the faith. She was united in marriage to Peter Reinœhl Jan. 10, 1867, with whom she shared the joys and cares of life for about 32 years. To this union were born twelve children, eleven of whom remain with the husband to mourn. Besides the husband and children, the deceased leaves seven brothers, one sister and many friends.

A precious one from us is gone,
A voice we loved is stilled,
A place is vacant in our home,
Which never can be filled.

God in His wisdom has recalled,
The boon His love had given,
And though the body moulders here,
The soul is safe in Heaven.

The funeral services were conducted in the Fairfield church by Rev. J. H. Elson assisted by Rev. Campbell, Text, John 14:2. "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so I would not have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." Interment in Fairfield cemetery.

Important Case.

(Hicksville Independent.)

Attorney Geo. D. Simmons of the firm of Griffin & Simmons went to Auburn, Monday, to argue the case involving the construction of the will of Nathan Benninghoff, deceased, who formerly lived near Spencerville, Ind. The will is a very complicated affair and the case involves the question as to whether the estate shall go to the brothers and sisters of Mr. Benninghoff or to the Synod of the Evangelical church, at Cleveland, Ohio. Some time since this firm of attorneys won the case for the heirs, so far as the personal property of the estate is concerned, amounting to about $3,000. And present case is to determine to which of the contestants, the church or the heirs, a valuable farm shall go.

How Is This?

That there has been careless work done in the county offices does not need any more proof. But a new feature has just come to light. Auditor Seller has been putting in a good many hours of study and examination of the various records in his office and among those, he has gone over, is a part of the records of loans and mortgages of the school fund. This has already been referred to in the COURIER, and but recently we advertised for sale a piece of property, that had been mortgaged to this fund and had gone delinquent.

But in looking over the record of these mortgages, some things were found that the auditor cannot account for, or understand, for the records do not show. For example; He finds that A gave a mortgage say $200 in 1870 for some school money. The interest is to be paid every year, and for all we know may have been paid each year. If so there should have been an entry to show this. But in the case supposed, there is no entry to show interest paid, till the last one, when an entry is made of "$16 interest paid in full to date." Now the question is: What was done with the interest for the previous years? Was it paid or not paid? We take it for granted that it was paid but the books ought to show this. The principal is also marked paid up in the same carless way and may be all right and properly accounted for some where but we submit that it is left open to the charge of carelessness or looseness. Every payment of interest should be on record. The man who paid it may have his receipt or his credit in some form, but it should also appear in the county offices; it may appear in some of the treasurer's records. In any event, Mr. Seller is going to look it up carefully and proposes to keep a full and correct showing in the future. The figures given above are merely supposed ones, but are exactly similar in their conditions to the ones actually on the records in several places. There may, possibly, be other records not yet reached that may explain the matter, but that does not do away with the fact that the records in question were loosely kept.

Happy Family.

Charlie Hoff, it will be remembered, lost both of his pet racoons last fall. But a few days later one of them came back, after Charlie had had to pay for a few chickens he had killed and eaten Since he has been in the coop again, peace has reigned in the chicken houses up that way. It is supposed that someone had forced open the cage and taken the coons out and was carrying them off, when this one bit him, and got away. The hide of the other, was no doubt sold to some dealer. They were great pets and so gentle, that they and the family cats slept together and became a playful, and happy family. They remind one of the "Happy Family" in Barnum's show some years ago, where they had foxes raccoons, owls chickens, monkeys, and a dozen other "varmints" in the same cage. But they had their little family jars after all. We remember seeing them once, when the rabbit had a torn ear, and there was blood on several of the others. But it was an attraction that helped to draw crowds to "the greatest show on earth."

Mrs. Dickinson Dead.

Mrs. Rebecca Dickinson, so well known to all our people in dead. This morning, 'Squire Walborn received a dispatch to that effect, and saying she would be brought back here Saturday. The funeral will probably be on Sunday, and interment in Evergreen cemetery by the side of her second husband, Ezra Dickenson. She died at the home of her son, John Sibert in Shelby Co. Ohio, where she had gone last fall to spend the winter with him. Those who saw her when she left and noted the appearance of poor health and weakness feared she would not live to return in the spring. She was a woman of most estimable character and leaves a large circle of friends to mourn for her.

Pretty Strong Juice.

A stranger was sitting in Hoff's grocery last evening warming himself by the hot stove and spitting tobacco juice with more vigor than discrimination. Just as he carelessly launched a good mouthful, he did not stop to look where, the store cat happened to be running by and caught the charge full in her face and eyes. The poison made her frantic. She leaped and screamed, and it was only after her face and eyes had been thoroughly washed and cleaned out that she could be quieted. The man had not intended to do this, but it shows one of the minor evils of a bad habit, and how man, the superior animal indulges in some habits that would kill a cat.

Mr. Grant's Lectures.

The lectures of Mr. Grant at the Mission continue intensely interesting, and are full of information on history and scripture. Last evening he treated the "Eastern question." Those who heard him gained fresh knowledge of that difficult international matter. He connects all these matters with the various prophesies in the Bible, Old and New, and throws much light on both. He is a profound student of all these questions. Mr. Eckhart, with whom he stays, says he spends all his available hours in study, and in finding and proving the connection between the prophesies in the Old and the New Testaments, and the history of the various leading nations of the modern days. He takes a bible in some cases, and cuts it up, using such portions as he finds necessary in a given lecture, pasting them into another book, so they will be convenient and come in the right order. Then with his profound general knowledge he is ready to give one of those lecture-lessons that seem so wonderful. And in order to be able to stand up under this great mental strain, he shapes his life to save time and strength and to keep a reserve of energy to sustain him in any unusual effort. Hence he lives plainly, on simple but nutritious foods prepared in a certain way, by himself, and mainly with a view to its hygienic effects and properties. He troubles no one; saves all his own hours to himself, though a very friendly and social man, when he has a moment to spare. He has impressed Mr. Eckhart as not only a man of fervent religious tendencies, but as a great scholar and a wonderfully gifted man. He works without making a special bargain as to compensation and believes the Lord will not let him want for he never has. He sometimes is well paid, sometimes partly paid and sometimes not at all. But it is all right with him. His wants are few and not expensive. He is serving the Master in the way he believes his duty lies, by serving without money and without price, the people who desire more light and a true knowledge. If he succeeds in these, he is satisfied. He closes his meetings in Auburn Sunday evening, and at once returns to Boston to resume his work at whatever place he is called.

Women Should Know It.

Many women suffer untold agony and misery because the nature of their disease is not correctly understood. They have been led to believe that womb trouble or female weakness of some sort is responsible for the many ills that beset womankind.

Neuralgia, nervousness, headache, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, rheumatism, a dragging pain or dull ache in the back, weakness or bearing-down sensation, profuse or scanty supply of urine with strong odor; frequent desire to pass it with scalding or burning sensation, sediment in it after standing in bottle or common glass for twenty four hours, are signs of kidney and bladder trouble.

The above symptoms are often attributed by the patient herself or by her physician to female weakness or womb trouble. Hence, so many fail to obtain relief, because they are treating, not the disease itself, but a reflection of the primary cause, which is kidney trouble.

In fact, women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble and both need the same treatment.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is the great discovery of the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is easy to get any drug store for fifty cents or dollar.

To prove its wonderful merits you may have a sample bottle and book telling all about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Kindly mention the Auburn COURIER and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. B.

Almost a Relic.

Culbertson & Boland have a number of robes of various kinds hanging out at their hardware store, for sale Among them is a buffalo robe, a thing not often seen now-a-days. It has been many years since a buffalo was killed for its hide there being only a few left. The government carefully guards a little herd in the hills in the west part of the Yellowstone Park. A few are kept in zoological gardens and city parks, as in Lincoln Park Chicago. These inferior specimens are all that remain of millions that once roamed the country, from Ohio and Kentucky to the Rocky mountains. Possibly a part of these great herds could have been saved by such law as the various states now enforce to save game birds, animals and fishes. It is too late now. We have tried to save the seals, but so far are not succeeding.

House Bill No. 93.

A bill for an act to regulate the letting of contracts for the construction of public buildings and and other public works, and paying laborers and material men for work thereon.

INTRODUCED BY HON. C. M. BROWN.

SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, That all person, firms companies or corporations who shall be awarded the contract of constructing any public building, drain, waterworks gravel and turnpike road, or any other structure for the use of the public within the State of Indiana by an officer or officers of any town, city, township or county of this State, shall, before such contract is awarded, place on file with said officer or officers a bond, to be signed by at least two resident freeholders, payable to the town, city, township, or county or State, as the case may be, for a sum equal to the amount of the consideration named in such contract, to the effect that said person, firm, company or corporation to whom said contract shall be awarded shall well and fully pay all laborers that may be employed upon said building, structure or other public works, as well as for all material used therein, and said officer or officers shall require said person or persons, firm or corporation, to file with him or them a voucher for each laborer employed as aforesaid, showing payment in full for such services, also a receipt from all material men showing payment in full for all material used upon or about such building or structure as aforesaid; also, before such payment in full is made to such contractor, the contractor or agent thereof shall file an affidavit with said officer or officers which affidavit shall set out that all laborers and material men have been paid in full.

The Filippinos.

The Filippinos are no fools. They easily got away with the Spaniards when they had half a chance. But at that time they were poorly armed, as very few had rifles, being armed mostly with spears, bows and machetes. They had no cannon, but made a few by winding wire around bamboo splints with a plug of iron for the breech. Then they secured balls, by exposing themselves so as to draw the fire of the Spaniards cannon. and then picked up such shells as did not explode. They then emptied the powder from these shells and used it in the bamboo gun to fire the empty shell back at the Spaniards. Sometimes it killed a few, and about as often, the breech of their gun blew out and killed a few Filippinos. Nothing discouraged them for they hated the Spaniards so. Soon, they fixed a plan to get rifles. They would ambush a party of Spaniards in some place of dense brush, attack them at close quarters with machetes, kill a few, then run into the brush. The dazed Spaniards would hurry away, leaving their dead. The natives would return and secure the rifles and ammunition of their dead enemies. In this way, each rifle cost them several men, but they needed rifles most. Now, they are surprised at the better fighting qualities of the Americans and think they have a much harder job on their hands.

Mrs. Martha Freeman.

Martha Dancer, daughter of John and Elizabeth Dancer, was born in Jefferson County, Ohio, June 5th, 1817, and died Feb. 7th, 1899, aged 81 years 8 months and 2 days. She was married Sept. 14th, 1834, to Edmund Freeman—Mrs. Freeman was a member of the M. E. church nearly all her life, joining when she was only 14 years old and remaining an active member the rest of her long life. To Mr. and Mrs. Freeman were born thirteen children; six of whom survive her, two dying in infancy, the rest living to marry.

This couple came to DeKalb county in 1854 and celebrated their 50th and 60th wedding anniversary at the old home where the deceased leaves a husband who has been blind for 12 years. also children, grandchildren, great grandchildren and many friends to mourn her loss. It should also be added that this is the only pioneer family that has so far remained unbroken.

REBELS DRIVEN OUT.

Caloocan Captured by the Brilliant Charge of Americans.

Manila special: Caloocan was captured by the Americans Friday afternoon at 5:30 after three hours of terrific fighting. The Monadnock and Concord began the attack by throwing shells with great damage. The artillery then opened fire. At 4 o'clock a general advance was begun by Gen. Otis' Brigade, consisting of the Twentieth Kansas, First Montana and the Third Artillery. The insurgents kept up a rattling fire, but our troops never stopped until they reached the enemy's entrenchments. Cheering, the Americans leaped over the entrenchments. The Filipinos fled like sheep. The United States flag was raised over Caloocan at 5:30 p. m.

Brigadier General Otis was in command of the American troops, who fought bravely and with their accustomed vim.

The enemy's loss was very heavy, while our loss was exceedingly light.

A Foolhardy Undertaking.

A trip from San Francisco to Manila across the Pacific, alone in an open sail boat, will be attempted by Capt. Freitsch, navigator from Milwaukee. In 1894 he crossed the Atlantic in 34 days and 3 hours, making 5,000 miles from Sandy Hook to Toereght light alone in the schooner "Nina," only 40 feet on the water line. Freitsch expects to reach Honolulu in 21 days, sailing from San Francisco. From Honolulu to Manila in 42 days. His boat will be 24 feet on the water line, flat bottomed with a heavy center board.

Six People Swept to Death.

Auburn (Cal.) special: The reservoir at Big Dipper Mine, in the Iowa Hill mining district, has broken and carried away the entire mill, blacksmith shop and drying house. Five Chinese and one white man, Joseph Farber, were killed, and their bodies were found several miles down the canyon. The loss of the mine is heavy and will reach upward of $20,000. The Big Dipper ranks as one of the richest gravel mines in California.

Flowers for Graves.

Commodore B. J. Cromwell, commander of the United States Navy Yard at Havana, following the instructions received from Charles H. Allen, Assistant Secretary of the United States Navy, caused a large number of flowers and potted plants to be placed on the graves of the victims of the destruction of the United States battleship Maine. Three days after, every flower had been removed by memento seeking visitors.

Filipinos Burn a Village.

Manila special: The natives, fearing the Americans were about to make an attack on or bombard the town of San Roque set fire to it. It is still burning as this dispatch is sent and, as it is composed in the main of bamboo huts, it will probably be totally destroyed.

Telegraph operators are now worth their weight in gold and the members of the Signal Corps are working day and night.

Steamer Lost.

Nashville special: The steamer P. D. Staggs, which collided with the railroad bridge at Johnsonville, drifted four miles down the river and burned. There were sixty people on board the steamer, all of whom were saved except Second Clerk Robert Scott and six or eight roustabouts. Assistance has been sent and definite news is expected in a short time.

It Cost $100,000.

Investigation into the conduct of the Spanish war will cost Uncle Sam $100,000. Nine commissioners draw $20 per day each for 138 days; their personal expenses were $12,420; railroad fares, $8,000; secretary's salary, $2,000; clerk hire and printing, $35,000; recorder, $900; livery, $500; incidentals, $3,000; cost of witnesses, $10,000.

Cost of the War.

The present Congress will be known to history as the most prodigal since the Republic was formed. It will have appropriated a billion and a half of dollars. The total deficiency in the revenue this year will be $159,000,000. Three hundred and sixty-four millions of the expenditure are chargeable to the Spanish war.

Fatal Explosion.

Frozen water pipes caused a fatal explosion in the kitchen of the female department of the Home of the Friendless, Baltimore, Md. Martha Bolosky, 7 years old, was instantly killed. Florence Reifsnyder, 10 years old, was badly burned and died within a few hours. Mary Welsh, cook, was seriously burned.

New York Blaze.

Fire which burned all Friday morning destroyed $500,000 worth of property. It gutted a whole block on Front street, New York. Factory girls narrowly escaped. Several firemen were injured. Fireman Blair fell from a ladder and will die from injuries. The fire started in Walter & Wells' bagging factory. The Eastern, Hartman and Whitehall, hotels, were burned.

Ravages of the Plague.

Sixteen hundred deaths have occurred from the plague in Bombay this week.

Boiler Explosion.

A terrible explosion occurred at Salesville, Ohio, at a sawmill owned by Jonathan Rose of Cambridge. The boiler was blown to fragments, and four men severely injured, two fatally. The injured are Forest Campbell and Frank Stillions, horribly burned about the face and body, and Cliff Stillions and A. L. Rose, not so seriously injured.

Stabbed in the Neck.

Dan Sullivan gave a dance at London, Ohio. A general fight ensued and Sullivan was stabbed in the neck with a pocket knife. His recovery is considered doubtful.

The Interminable Poison Case.

New York special: New names are being dragged into the poisoning case daily. District Attorney Gardiner will investigate the death of Walter S. Baldwin, who died in October, 1879, after a gay cruise on Albert J. Morgan's yacht. Among the guests were Henry C. Barnett, Roland Molineaux and Blanche Chesebrough, now Molineaux's wife. Ill feeling is said to have been developed on account of the attentions some men on board paid to Miss Chesebrough. Baldwin took ill soon after the cruise was over and died in a few days. Morgan also took ill, but recovered. Both cases were pronounced typhoid fever. Barnett's body will be exhumed.

The Crew Asleep.

A disastrous head-end collision between a passenger train and an extra freight, occurred on the central division of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railroad, near Pollock, La., and two men were instantly killed, two fatally injured, another seriously wounded and several others badly shaken up. The extra freight was south bound, in charge of Conductor Farrar and Engineer Watkins, and had orders to meet the passenger train No. 222 at Patterson's Spur. The crew were evidently asleep, as no stop was made at the meeting point, and the train was running at a rapid rate, when, a few miles beyond the switch, it crashed into the passenger train.

Postal Robbers Caught.

The biggest band of postal robbers apprehended in recent years were taken recently at El Reno, O. T., by Postoffice Inspectors Beeve and Stycc, assisted by deputies. The robbers were ten in number. They covered stat routes from El Reno to Arapahoe, eight miles west, and from Bridgeport to Cloud Chief, seventy-five miles southwest, and supplied more than one hundred offices.

To Accommodate Miles.

An inquiry into the charges against the character of army meats preferred by Gen. Miles will follow close upon the presentation of the report of the commission to investigate the conduct of the war. Three members will constitute the court. The late Eagan court-martial will be represented in the membership, but up to this moment no designations have been made.

Mexican War Veteran Dead.

Capt. T. H. Crawford, aged 78 years, a Mexican veteran, died at his home in Louisville, Ky. His death was indirectly caused by wounds which he received in the battle of Churubusco. In that battle he received five wounds and they gave him much trouble all his life. He was a student at the West Point Academy, and graduated in the same class with Gen. Grant.

Easy on Eagan.

The President has caused to be promulgated the sentence in the case of Gen. Charles P. Eagan. The court-martial sentence was dismissal from the army and the President has commuted this to six years' suspension from duty, which covers the remainder of the time prior to Gen. Eagan's retirement in January, 1905.

McKinley to Rest.

The President will probably take a rest as soon as Congress adjourns. His nervous system is in bad shape and a collapse is feared. He will go to some place where he can exercise and avoid callers.

Cortes Summoned.

Want the Insurgent Leader.

It is stated that Alger, at the President's request, cabled Otis to catch Aguinaldo if possible and hold him a prisoner until further notice.

To Muster Out Volunteers.

The Cabinet has decided that ratification of the treaty constituted actual peace, and volunteers will be mustered out on application.

RATIFY THE TREATY

Opposing Senators Won Over on News from Manila.

PEACE WITH SPANISH

Ballot in Executive Session Results: Yeas 57; Nays 27.

Senators Jones, McLaurin and McEnery at the Final Test Range Themselves for Ratification—One Vote to Spare—Great Crowds Around Senate Awaited Result of the Ballot—President Stays Up at Night Awaiting Manila Dispatches.

The Paris peace pact, ending the war with Spain, was ratified by the United States Senate Monday. The administration forces had but one vote more than the necessary two-thirds majority. The vote was 57 for ratification and 27 against. Senators Jones, McLaurin and McEnery, counted upon by the opposition, voted for ratification. Following is the analysis of the vote:

Republicans in favor	42
Democrats in favor	10
People's party in favor	5
Total	57
Republicans against	5
Democrats against	21
People's party against	1
Total	27

Although known in advance that the vote on the treaty would be in executive session and that visitors could not even loiter in the corridors, great crowds went to the Senate and awaited the result, standing outside in the rotundas and speculating on the outcome. In the crowd were diplomats and high officers of the government and men of every station. The interest was not confined to the capitol alone. At the White House interest and anxiety were shown and the President called in conference some of his most trusted friends. It was apparent to any visitor at the capitol that the day marked an epoch of history making unprecedented in the Senate.

Lights burned all night in the War Department and twinkled from the windows of the Navy Department, where on the May morning the first word came from Dewey of the destruction of the Spanish fleet. There was little or no sleep at the White House apparently, for the clerks and telegraph operators were at their posts all night. Messages were carried to and from the President and the chief executive once more felt the anxiety and strain of war times.

Mr. McKinley did not retire until word came from Gen. Otis in response to urgent cablegrams, telling that quiet had been restored and the American troops controlled the situation at Manila.

Before the Senate convened the leaders on both sides of the peace treaty manifested great anxiety and all seemed to be very much in doubt as to the final result, the ratification or rejection seeming to depend upon several doubtful votes. It was found, however, that Aguinaldo's attack on the United States troops at Manila had strengthened the sentiment in favor of a prompt ratification of the treaty, and the peace compact with Spain was rushed through the Senate by a small majority. Friends of the administration urged that immediate ratification was necessary in order to enable the government to deal with the insurgents with a firm hand, as well as for the moral effect it would have on other countries, and this view was generally accepted.

The advocates of the treaty have argued from the start that our relations toward the islands could not be clearly and legally defined until the Paris convention was approved by two-thirds of the Senate. They further insisted that pending the ratification of the treaty the administration was powerless to make any overtures looking to the pacification of Aguinaldo and his followers. They predicted that the attitude of the opposition would encourage the insurgents to attack the city of Manila and this prediction has been fulfilled.

HORDES OF FILIPINOS SLAIN.

Most Conservative Estimates Show Losses Terribly Heavy.

As a result of the fighting at Manila Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, it is conservatively estimated that the Filipinos lost nearly 5,000, of which 2,000 were slain. They were slaughtered by the American fire, which was both deadly and accurate. In the engagement there were involved 33,000 men, of which number 13,000 were Americans and 10,000 natives. Although the loss to the Filipinos was heavy, there was sustained by the American forces a loss of fifty killed and at least 150 wounded. Of the latter there are many whose injuries are not of a serious nature. Most of the American loss was suffered by the Fourteenth infantry, which was pushing the attacking insurgents back, and in consequence was close to the enemy.

The Filipinos resorted to bushwhacking methods throughout, fighting from behind huts, shrubbery and ledges. Dr. Young, formerly quartermaster in the Third artillery, was wounded, captured and brutally murdered, and his body, when recovered, was found to have been horribly mutilated.

A message was sent to Maj. Gen. Otis announcing the ratification of the peace treaty and instructing him to notify the insurgents of the fact. The receipt of official information had a buoyant effect on the American troops and officers, and also upon Admiral Dewey and his fleet. The effect of the news on the Filipinos, however, had a correspondingly depressing effect. Gen. Otis was also told to follow up his victory vigorously along the lines he thought best.

FLIGHT OF AGONCILLO.

Aguinaldo's Representative in Washington Skips to Canada.

Filipe Agoncillo, the agent of the rebel Aguinaldo, on the eve of the conflict at Manila fled with his secretary from Washington to Montreal. He is under the constant watch of American secret service agents. At the first act showing him to be a spy the Canadian Government will be asked to expel him.

This meddlesome young Filipino, while in Washington, several times laid himself liable to arrest, but a cabinet officer explained that he had not been molested for two reasons. These were that the President considered him too insignificant, and it was deemed unwise to do anything that would seem like interference with the deliberations of the Senate on the peace treaty.

Since arriving in Montreal Agoncillo has said: "If the Americans seek to subjugate the Filipinos it will mean an everlasting war. We fought the Spaniards for hundreds of years for our independence; we will still fight for it to the last man."

BATTLE AT MANILA

Filipino Rebels Attack Americans and Are Routed.

MORE BLOOD IS SHED.

Otis' Losses Are Estimated at 175 Men in Dead and Wounded.

Conflict Lasts Twenty-four Hours, with Little Cessation—Volunteers and Regulars Were Prepared for the Night Attack, and Fairly Slaughtered the Hordes of Natives, Who, Well Armed, Fought with Courage—Dewey's Ships Throw Shells.

The long expected rupture between the Americans and the Filipinos at Manila has come at last. The clash came at 8:40 o'clock Saturday evening, when three daring Filipinos darted past the Nebraska regiment's pickets at Santa Mesa, but retired when challenged. They repeated the experiment without drawing the sentries' fire. But the third time Corporal Greely challenged the Filipinos and then fired, killing one of them and wounding another. Almost immediately afterward the Filipinos' line, from Calvocan to Santa Mesa, commenced a fusillade, which was ineffectual. The Nebraska, Montana and North Dakota outposts replied vigorously and held their ground until reenforcements arrived. The Filipinos in the meantime concentrated at three points, Calvocan, Gagalangin and Santa Mesa.

AGUINALDO.

At about 1 o'clock the Filipinos opened a hot fire from all three places simultaneously. This was supplemented by the fire of two siege guns at Balik-Balik and by advancing their skirmishers at Paco and Pandacan. The Americans responded with a terrific fire, but, owing to the darkness, they were unable to determine its effect.

The Utah light artillery finally succeeded in silencing the native battery. The Third artillery also did good work on the extreme left. The engagement lasted over an hour. The United States cruiser Charleston and the gunboat Concord, stationed off Malabona, opened fire from their secondary batteries on the Filipinos' position at Calvocan and kept it up vigorously. At 2:45 o'clock there was another fusillade along the entire line and the United States sea-going double-turreted monitor Monadnock opened fire on the enemy from off Malate. There was intermittent firing at various points all day long.

American Troops Advance.

With daylight the Americans advanced. The California and Washington regiments made a splendid charge and drove the Filipinos from the villages of Paco and Santa Mesa. The Nebraska regiment also distinguished itself, capturing several prisoners and one howitzer and a very strong position at the reservoir, which is connected with the water works. The Kansas and Dakota regiments compelled the enemy's right flank to retire to Calvocan.

The losses of the Filipinos are known to be considerable. The American losses are estimated at twenty men killed and 125 wounded. The Ygorates, armed with bows and arrows, made a very determined stand in the face of a hot artillery fire and left many men dead on the field.

Though there was no concerted uprising in Manila, several attempts were made in the city during the night to assassinate American officers.

The positions which the Americans held at the beginning of the fight were formerly occupied by the Filipinos. At the siege of Manila the natives drove the Spaniards from these positions and took possession of them, but finally gave them up at the request of Gen. Otis, falling back about a mile, where they established new defenses. Some of these were captured by the Americans.

Gen. Otis had known for some time that the Filipinos were preparing for an attack, and when it came everybody was ready. The natives cut many of the telegraph wires, which for a time caused no little bother to the Americans. Most of the damage of this kind was in the city or in the immediate vicinity. The American officers generally are pleased at the manner in which the volunteers conducted themselves. Their six or seven months' drill and seasoning has made them equal to the best troops in the world. They fought with the same sang froid as the regulars, surprising even the most sanguine of their officers.

For some time the situation at Manila has been considered critical and it has been feared that a conflict with the insurgents was at hand. Gen. Otis, under instructions from the State Department at Washington, has done all possible to reconcile the natives to the American occupation and it was hoped that his efforts would prove successful.

Aguinaldo has been menacing ever since the Spaniards surrendered to Gen. Merritt and Admiral Dewey. In his official pronunciamentos and in interviews he has claimed that the Americans have no other than commercial rights, which he would agree to when the time came, to the islands or any part of them; that the insurgents practically had the Spaniards whipped long before Dewey sailed into the harbor on May 1 last and that his countrymen only owed the Americans a debt of thanks for having accelerated the ending of the conflict, nothing more. He has protested against the acquisition of the islands directly to this Government at Washington and by representatives to the conference at Paris during the discussion of the peace terms with Spain.

Despite all declarations by the American authorities at Manila that their intentions toward the natives were of the most friendly character, the insurgent leaders apparently concentrated the best part of their army on the island of Luzon, and rumor has had it that the Filipino force has gradually been closing in on the capital city, Manila.

The native army surrounding Manila has been estimated at 40,000 men, all well armed and the cream of the soldiers under Aguinaldo. These men, as a rule, are up in modern military tactics. A large part of the rifles with which they are armed were furnished by representatives of the United States when the original campaign against Manila, then under Spanish control, was inaugurated. The Americans also gave the islanders a goodly supply of ammunition, little of which was used in the war with Spain, so it is presumed there is much of it still on hand.

THE HARBOR AT MANILA.

WILL PUSH THE WAR.

President to Pursue a Vigorous Policy in the Philippines.

A Washington correspondent says that President McKinley will pursue a vigorous policy in the Philippines, now that Aguinaldo has thrown down the gauntlet. At a cabinet meeting following the news of the battle it was decided to cable instructions to Gen. Otis to follow up his victory over the insurgents and to crush the power of Aguinaldo in all the Philippines. The President greatly deprecates the action of the insurgents at a time when he had hopes that affairs might find a peaceful solution. He believes, however, that Aguinaldo had sufficient warning in the proclamation to the Filipinos, which said the United States would bring to account those responsible for disturbances in the islands, and who should fail to recognize the authority of the United States.

Otis will be sent to take Iloilo and occupy all the islands possible with the forces at hand. Re-enforcements will also be sent to the islands as speedily as possible. The Oregon, now due at Honolulu, will be ordered to augment Dewey's force in Manila bay. Approximately 6,000 men are on their way to join Gen. Otis, in four separate expeditions, though none is expected to reach Manila for three weeks.

JAMES A. SEXTON DEAD.

Noted Chicagoan Succumbs to Attack of Illness at Washington.

James A. Sexton of Chicago, commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, died Sunday morning at Garfield hospital in Washington. Col. Sexton went to Washington in October to accept a position on the army investigation commission. During the holidays he contracted a severe cold, which soon developed into a severe attack of the grip. While suffering from the latter disease complications set in.

Col. Sexton had been one of Chicago's most conspicuous public men. Born in Chicago in 1844, he entered the army at President Lincoln's first call for troops in April, 1861, being then but little over 17 years old. Within three months he had won a sergeantcy. One year later, when only 18, he was made a lieutenant, and three months later he took the captaincy of Company D, Seventy-second Illinois. His company was one raised by the Young Men's Christian Association. He became regimental commander before he was 21 and led his regiment in the battles of Columbia, Duck river, Spring Hill, Franklin and Nashville and throughout the Nashville campaign, although wounded both at Franklin and Nashville. In the successful assault on Spanish fort, at Mobile, Ala., April 8, 1865, he had his left leg broken below the knee by a piece of shell. He was mustered out that year.

COL. JAMES A. SEXTON.

In 1889 President Harrison made Col. Sexton postmaster of Chicago. He was always an enthusiastic worker in the Grand Army, the Union Veterans' League and the Loyal Legion. In the Grand Army he was commander of the department of Illinois in the 80's and in 1898 was chosen commander-in-chief.

Gov. Theodore Roosevelt of New York will receive the brevet of brigadier general of volunteers for gallant and meritorious conduct in the Santiago campaign.

The controversy in the Senate over the vote upon the various resolutions interpretive of the peace treaty took an acute turn late on Friday. The opposition to a vote first came from the friends of the treaty, who held to the theory that it could be ratified without compromise. Those who apparently were then willing that a vote should be taken that day, held an opposite view and absolutely refused to agree to a time for taking a vote. The contest occurred in the executive session. The next hour and a quarter was spent in a vain endeavor on the one side to get an agreement to a date for a vote upon the resolutions and on the other in a more successful effort to bring the day's session to a close without allowing anything to be accomplished in that direction. For more than five hours the Senate in open session listened to arguments in opposition to expansion and in opposition to the ratification of the treaty of peace. The speakers were Mr. Money (Miss.) and Mr. Daniel (Va.). Mr. Hale (Me.) presented the conference report on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and it was agreed to.

At the opening of Saturday's session Mr. Allen (Pop., Neb.) offered a resolution declaring that the United States, in ratifying the treaty of Paris, does not commit itself to the doctrine that the islands acquired through the war with Spain are to be annexed to or become a part of the United States. Mr. Chilton (Dem., Tex.) addressed the Senate on Mr. Vest's anti-expansion resolution. Senator Wolcott made a strong speech in favor of expansion. The Senate went into executive session without voting on any of the pending resolutions regarding expansion. The time of the Senate behind closed doors was consumed almost entirely by Mr. Morgan. After disposing of a few routine matters the House took up the bill making appropriations for the expenses of the military academy at West Point

The treaty of peace with Spain was ratified by the Senate Monday afternoon, the vote being 57 to 27, only one more than the two-thirds majority required. Monday was suspension day in the House and quite a number of bills were passed, some of them of importance. The census bill prepared by the House committee went through by a vote of 147 to 42. The bill differs in several essential features from the Senate bill, particularly in that it makes the census bureau entirely independent of any existing department. A bill was passed to extend the anti-contract labor laws over the Hawaiian islands, and another bill was passed to refer forty-four war claims for stores and supplies to the Court of Claims.

In the Senate on Tuesday a bill granting a right of way through Indian Territory to the Choctaw, Oklahoma and Gulf Railroad Company was passed. Mr. Spooner of Wisconsin presented the credentials of Senator-elect Quarles. Mr. Tillman of South Carolina, in accordance with notice given, addressed the Senate on the McEnery resolution. Tuesday was the first of two days set aside for the consideration of public building bills. The committee had reported seventy-eight bills for buildings in thirty-five States, authorizing in the aggregate an expenditure of $14,000,000. Little or no opposition developed and bills were favorably acted upon almost as rapidly as they could be read. There was, however, more or less good-natured chaffing throughout the session. As a result forty bills, carrying or authorizing appropriations aggregating $11,364,000, had been laid aside with favorable recommendations before adjournment was reached.

In the Senate on Wednesday the Indian appropriation bill, which has been pending for several weeks, was completed and passed. The legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill was taken up, but after twenty-four pages of it had been disposed of it was laid aside for the day. A few measures of minor importance were passed. The net result of the work during the two days allotted for the consideration of public building bills in the House was the passage of a single bill providing for the erection of a building at Newport News, Va., at a cost of $75,000. Sixty-five bills in all, carrying or authorizing the expenditure of about $12,000,000, were favorably considered in committee of the whole when the committee rose, but because seventeen other bills reported had not been acted upon in committee all efforts to advance the bills favorably acted upon in committee were blocked. Mr. Corliss (Rep.) of Michigan called up the Senate bill to amend the law requiring ballots for members of Congress to be written or printed, so as to permit the use of machines where authorized by the laws of the State. The bill was passed—94 to 44.

Chairman Cannon of the Appropriations Committee of the House, in the course of the general debate on the sundry civil bill on Thursday, sounded a note of warning against extravagant appropriations, and practically served notice that neither the ship subsidy bill nor the Nicaragua canal bill could be passed at this session. The general debate upon the sundry civil bill was not concluded. Before it was taken up quite a number of minor bills were passed by unanimous consent. Throughout its open session the Senate had under consideration the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill. The following bills were passed: Authorizing the Sioux City and Omaha Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Omaha and Winnebago reservation in Thurston County, Neb., and to restore to their original status as to promotion officers of the navy and marine corps who lost numbers by reason of the advancement of other officers for exceptional and meritorious service during the war with Spain.

WORDS.

I cannot tell what I would tel thee,
What I would say, what thou shouldst hear:
Words of the soul that should compel thee,
Words of the heart to draw thee near.

For when thou smilest, thou, who fillest
My life with joy, and I would speak,
'Tis then my lips and tongue are stillest,
Knowing all language is too weak.

Look in my eyes: read there confession:
The truest love has least of art;
Nor needs it words for its expression
When soul speaks soul and heart speaks heart.

A DEATH-DEALING HAND.

Upon the evening of December 3, 1881, as the hand on the Wimbledon station clock was nearing 7, the London train steamed in, and among the passengers who alighted from it was a man wearing a long overcoat, with a rug over his arm, and carrying a small black bag in his hand.

His face was refined and handsome. He was young—only about 30. His forehead was broad, and marked by many lines like that of a man who has been accustomed to hard study. The eyes, beneath delicately pencilled brows, were dark and penetrating, and yet tender in expression. He wore whiskers, and a long, drooping mustache helped to conceal a rather weak, feminine mouth. It was a face calculated to impress one favorably, especially when the eyes were lit up and animated. Now, however, as he made his way along the platform under the gas lamps, his eyes had deep rims round them, and, with the sallow color of the face, told of ill-health and harassment.

The man, indeed was ill. He could not sleep. Could one have turned up his sleeve and examined his arm one would have found there the marks of recent wounds caused by the too frequent use of morphia injections, resorted to in order that he might obtain rest.

Some months back, in 1879, a relation, a brother-in-law of this man had died suddenly, mysteriously, and since that time sleep had almost deserted the large, dark, tender-looking eyes of the handsome traveler.

A very short distance from Wimbledon station was a large building situated in its own grounds. It was a school carried on by a gentleman named Bedbrook. To this house the man took his way, and to the servant who answered the door he announced himself as Dr. Lamson, who had called to see his brother-in-law, one of the pupils, a lad of 18. In a few minutes Dr. Lamson and Mr. Bedbrook were chatting together in the sitting room when the door opened and a lad appeared, bearing in his arms another boy, whose healthy-colored cheeks and laughing eyes seemed in strange contrast to the evident helplessness of his lower paralyzed limbs.

"Hullo, Percy," cried Lamson, as he entered; "bless me, how fat you are growing old boy!"

"Sorry I can't return the compliment," laughed the boy—Percy Malcolm John—looking at his relative's haggard face. His boy friend made him comfortable on a sofa in the room, and Lamson, Bedbrook and Percy remained together alone.

"I have called to see you, Percy," said Lamson, "because I'm going to Florence for a few months, and so shall not be here again very soon. Oh, by the way, Mr. Bedbrook, look here!" Lamson went to the black bag he had brought, opened it, and took out a small box. "Look at these," he went on, opening the box. "These are capsules I saw in America when I was there last. See. They're just little bags made of sugar and dissolving stuff. You put the medicine inside like this"—he walked to the table where there was some white powdered sugar in a basin, and filled the capsule with it—"then you slip the top cap on and swallow the whole thing, so." And at the word he put the capsule in his mouth and swallowed it.

"A capital idea," exclaimed Mr. Bedbrook. "You cannot taste whatever the capsule contains?"

"Not at all. Try one," said Lamson; and he filled and handed one to the schoolmaster.

Mr. Bedbrook took it.

"Here, Percy," exclaimed Lamson, filling another capsule with the sugar. "You're a great pill-taker. Now it's your turn."

The boy took it laughingly and swallowed it, Lamson's dark eyes watching him the while.

"And now I must go," he said. "I've got to catch my train. Good-bye, Percy—good-bye, Mr. Bedbrook. I'm sorry, Mr. Bedbrook," he added, as the schoolmaster accompanied him to the front door and they were in the passage out of the lad's hearing—"I'm sorry, Mr. Bedbrook, but I don't think Percy will last long."

That same night, while the pale-faced, sleepless man was being whirled away over the dismal, night-clad country in the express train to Paris, Percy Malcolm John lay dying of some mysterious and sudden ailment. The best medical aid available was summoned, but all was in vain, and close upon midnight death came to close the unhappy boy's agony.

The doctors who had attended him were not satisfied. They had never before had a case which presented such strange features, and dark hints were spread abroad that death was not due to natural causes, but had been brought about by a murderer's hand. Dr. Lamson's name was mentioned in connection with them, and a detective was sent to Paris to find him.

Five days later a cab drove up to the door of Scotland Yard, a gentleman got out, and then turned to assist a lady to alight. The two entered the building—the headquarters of those whose lives are spent in unraveling the mysteries of crime and following with steps of vengeance the perpetrators of dark deeds.

"I have called," said the gentleman, "in reference to the case of the death of a boy at Wimbledon. I wish to see the person who has the matter in hand."

In a moment or two one of the inspectors was with him.

"My name," the stranger said, "is Lamson—George Henry Lamson. I have been staying in Paris, and I have read in the papers an account of the death of a boy named Percy Malcolm John. My name has been connected."

The inspector appeared troubled, and asked the doctor to wait a moment while he left the room. He returned in a short time.

"Dr. Lamson," he said, "your case has been considered, and I am instructed to charge you with causing the death of Percy Malcolm John!"

Not a muscle stirred in Lamson's pale face, as he heard these words, which told him he would have to answer with his life the terrible charge preferred against him, though the ashen gray features, if possible took a grayer tinge. He elevated his eyebrows as if in surprise.

"Very well," was all he answered.

If John's death was not due to natural causes, of what did he die? The question was a difficult one. Poison? the doctors feared. But what poison? Portions of the body were sent up to London, and there, over the ghastly sealed up jars, secured with many pieces of red tape and red sealing wax, which contained, if murder had been done, the clue to bring it home to its perpetrator, two of the cleverest analysists, Dr. Stevenson and Dr. Dupre, were soon busily employed.

By numberless experiments, by days and nights of careful observation, the analysists came to the conclusion that poison had been used, and that the poison was aconitine. The test of poison was not omitted. Dr. Stevenson put some of the suspected matter on his tongue. At first there was a burning tingling, kind of numbness, and later on the tongue felt as if it had been seared with a red-hot iron. So great was the effect that the doctor's tongue suffered for over three hours.

"It was aconitine," said Dr. Stevenson. "I have between 50 and 80 vegetable poisons in my possession, and I have tasted them all. This is aconitine."

It is a curious fact that in a box belonging to Lamson, the police, on searching, discovered a medical book giving an account of the effects of aconitine. The leaf of the work had been turned down. The sleuth-hounds of the law went to work upon the trail the analysis afforded, and soon had to hand results which promised to confirm the worst suspicions.

He had purchased aconitine of two chemists—once at Ventnor, in the Isle of Wight, and again in London. He had had to give his name before the deadly poison could be handed to him, and the assistant who supplied him remembered his face.

The cause of Percy John's death was clear. Lamson had had poison of the kind in his possession. Had he, that December night when he called to see the poor lad, while talking with him and the schoolmaster in the sitting room, introduced the fatal white powder into the capsule he handed the boy, seen him swallow it, and then gone off on that long night journey to Paris so that, should any suspicion arise, he might by voluntarily returning from abroad, disarm it?

He was poor—terribly poor. Only a short time before he had had to raise money upon his surgical instruments. His practice at Bournemouth had been a failure, and it was known that he was in pressing need. Mrs. Lamson, however, was entitled to some money, which would come to her upon the decease of her brother, and she had readily agreed to her husband's suggestion that she should execute a settlement making over her interest to him.

Upon the death of the first brother, Herbert John, in 1879, the doctor had received over 700 pounds; by the death of Percy John, Lamson would benefit to the extent of something like 1,500 pounds. Had his money been a temptation which had led Lamson to dye his hands in the boy's blood?

Upon March 9, 1882, Lamson stood in the dock of the Old Bailey to answer the terrible charge. People were prepossessed in his favor as they looked at the handsome man in the black frock coat and black kid gloves, with the pale, care-worn face, who calmly, and with a certain dignity, bowed to the judge, Mr. Justice Hawkins, and declared that he was not guilty. The solicitor general, Sir F. Herschell, afterward to become twice lord chancellor, was the leading counsel for the prosecution, and for the defense there appeared, with other barristers, the youthful looking, keen-eyed, and slight mustached man whose reputation was greatest in the kingdom for passionate eloquence and acuteness in the conduct of a criminal defense—Montagu Williams. Mrs. Lamson had stirred every effort and raised every penny she possessed to secure the best legal advice for her husband.

Day by day as the trial went on, as the proceedings ended, as the blood-robed, stern-faced judge rose, as the jury took their way from the box, and the crowd in court slowly filed out discussing the points of the day's evidence, a little fragile woman's figure stole from a seat where it had hidden, listening—who shall tell how anxiously?—to all that passed, and stole toward the dock. Then Lamson leaned over the dock's edge, the white, handsome face smiled at the faithful woman's deadly and gray countenance turned up to him, and stretching out his hand—the hand accused of such an awful deed—the woman took it and pressed it to her lips.

The evidence against him was terrible enough. A queer accident which happened while Lamson was being driven from prison in a cab to the court one day impressed some of the goalers and officials more than any evidence could, with the feeling that Lamson was a doomed man. The cab in which he and his custodians were broke down almost at the door of the court. It was regarded as an omen.

At last the day came which brought the verdict which all, save Lamson himself, had come to accept as inevitable.

"I declare before God that I am innocent," he said with a stern effort to preserve his composure. The next moment he staggered back with the look of a trapped animal in his eyes as he heard the judge's tones pronouncing the sentence of death.

He confessed his awful crime before he died. It was suspected, though it was never proven for certain, that Herbert John, Percy's brother, whose death had banished sleep from Lamson's eyes, had also died by the same deadly hand.

BREAKFAST WITH GOMEZ.

Feasts an American Correspondent Like Marion Treated the Britisher.

One morning the general invited me to breakfast with him, writes Thomas R. Dawley, Jr., in Frank Leslie's. In honor of the occasion I donned a coat which I had been carefully guarding in my pack to use on my return to the Spanish lines, for I was already beginning to be in uniform with the ragged rebels. As I crawled under the General's canvas, he offered me the luxury of a camp stool. He sat in his hammock made of bed-ticking, and complimented me by calling me a veteran accustomed to the hardships attending a military career. I amused the old chieftain by relating some of my escapades, and he in return explained his tactics, of which he seemed very proud. He said that the Spaniards never knew where he was, and when they did know, he was gone.

While we conversed one of the assistentes brought an armful of green twigs and leaves and spread them on the ground at our feet. When I saw him place four plates with knives and forks on the leaves, I concluded that the latter was intended for a tablecloth. A frying-pan containing a stew of meat and beans was placed in the center, and dishes containing sweet potatoes and beefsteak were added with a gourd of honey. Breakfast was announced as ready, and we were joined by the adjutant-general and a young lieutenant who had been with Gomez from the beginning of the insurrection. They seated themselves on the ground and while the General attentively helped me from the fryingpan they helped themselves.

Our conversation ran upon different topics of the day, from the reported landing of a filibustering expedition, to the east of Moroto, a Spanish newspaper correspondent who had recently made his way into the Cuban camp and narrowly escaped being hanged.

The breakfast concluded with the sweet potatoes, which the General passed to me, smearing them with honey as he did so. He explained that this was our dessert. Then we were served with coffee as black as tar. General Gomez drank his portion from a silver mug, and I received a cup made of a cow's horn. We sweetened the coffee with honey, and sipped it as the old General explained to me the workings of the Cuban civil government, the existence of which was such a mooted question in the United States. He assured me that the government did exist, calling upon his adjutant to corroborate his statements. I asked him about the capital, and he said the government didn't need a capital any more than he did. They made the laws, and everyone had to respect and obey them. Even himself, Gomez, was controlled by those laws, and he dared not degrade an officer nor hang a criminal without submitting him to a court-martial according to law.

Queer Money in Abyssinia.

The few travelers who have taken the time and trouble to look into Menelek's queer kingdom of Abyssinia tell strange tales of it. Besides the Marie Theresa, 1,780 dollars, the people of Abyssinia, for small change, use a bar of hard crystalized salt, about ten inches long and two inches and a half broad, and thick, slightly tapering toward the end, five of which go to the dollar at the capital. People are very particular about the standard of fineness of the currency. If it does not ring like metal, or if it is at all chipped, nothing will induce them to take it. Then, it is a token of affection among the natives, when friends meet, to give each other a lick of their respective amolls, and in this way the maternal value of the bar is also decreased. For still smaller change cartridges are used, of which three go to one salt. It does not matter what sort they are. Some sharpers use their cartridges in the ordinary way, and then put in some dust and a dummy bullet to make up the difference, or else they take out the powder and put the bullet in again, so that possibly in the next action the unhappy seller will find that he has only miss-fires in his belt; but this is such a common fraud that no one takes any notice of it, and a bad cartridge seems to serve as readily as a good one.—Philadelphia Press.

Rabbit Kept a Dog Guessing.

I once heard a lady mention the fact that in Colorado they have jackrabbits seventeen feet long. She knew it, for her son had told her so. What she meant was that the rabbit jumped seventeen feet. Guy says they don't have any such rabbits in the fauna of the Adirondacks, but he has seen one that jumped ten feet straight into the air. He had set some twitched-up snares on one occasion, and a rabbit that a dog was chasing happened to get into one. The dog tried to catch the rabbit, but every time he made a dive for it the rabbit jumped, and with the spring of the elastic sappling to which the snare was attached shot up in the air to a surprising height. It kept the dog guessing, for he had never seen a rabbit come so near flying.—Forest and Stream.

Inexhaustible Cement Supply.

It is stated that the deposit of Portland cement discovered near Owen Sound, Ontario, and the manufacture of which was begun in 1889, is proving practically inexhaustible, and the daily capacity of the factory will soon be increased to 300 barrels. The prevailing price is $2.10 per barrel of 350 pounds net. The product is claimed to be fully equal to the English, German or Belgian article, and it is said, will eventually take the place of importations to Canada, at least.—Philadelphia Record.

THE OCEANIC, LARGEST STEAMSHIP IN THE WORLD.

The rapidity with which the size of ocean-going ships has been increased in recent years is one of the most noteworthy mechanical developments of the decade. The launching at Belfast of the new steamer, the Oceanic, marks another stage of the growth in this direction. The Oceanic is a monster beside which most of the world's battleships would seem mere pygmies. She is 704 feet in length, whereas the Great Eastern was only 680 feet long, and when it comes to a question of engines, the Oceanic has 45,000 horse power, where the horse power of the Great Eastern was 17,000. Future innovations in ship building, especially in the way of increasing the size of vessels, must date from the launching of this leviathan of the sea. New records for size have been made and broken constantly within the last fifteen years. The Great Eastern was declared to be a failure for practicable purposes of commerce, and the tendency immediately after its construction was to build small ships. When the modern liners were first built a length of 400 feet was deemed extraordinary. The shipbuilders, however, have gone on undaunted, until seven years ago the Lucania and the Campania were constructed, with a length of 620 feet. It was supposed then that the largest practicable size had been found, but the speedy construction of the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse and the Oceanic has dispelled that illusion.

Should it turn out that the Oceanic, with its immense capacity, can be run at a fairly good rate of speed without too large an expenditure of coal it is not even certain that this immense vessel will be left long without a rival. Her success may tempt builders to plan still greater monsters to carry the world's commerce. The limit of size will not be reached until the greatest capacity consistent with a high speed and a reasonable cost has been secured.

FIGHT OF MINE KINGS.

Senatorship War in Montana and Its Romantic Elements.

Behind the United States Senatorship contest in Montana there is a story of rival ambitions, bitterness and deadly enmity that can find its parallel nowhere in this country. The two multimillionaires arrayed against each other in the fight subordinated all other issues to the desire for victory. The contest resulted from a feud between the two richest men in the State—William A. Clark and Marcus Daly, the "copper kings." They used to be fast friends. Some years ago, when Daly wanted a certain water right that the former owned and which Daly had to have in order to make his Anaconda smelters valuable, Clark forced him to pay an exorbitant price. Daly paid it and told him then that he would get even if it took him all his life. Not long thereafter Clark, who is a Democratic leader, wanted to go to Congress. Daly threw his influence to Tom Carter, the Republican nominee, and defeated Clark. Since then the lines have been drawn strictly and sharply. The two parties in the State are Daly and Clark.

The careers of these two men are interesting. Clark, who is worth $20,000,000, began life as a cow puncher in the early sixties. By the aid of his wife he saved some of his earnings. As soon as their frugal habits and shrewd investments gave him a respectable pile he commenced investing in mines, and before he knew it he was a rich man. Similar investments followed, and in a short space of time he was a millionaire.

W. A. CLARK. MARCUS DALY.

Daly in the early sixties had a reputation as a good mine superintendent, and when the Walker brothers, of Salt Lake, Utah, contemplated purchasing the Alice silver mine at Butte they hit upon him as the proper person to investigate the property. He went to Butte disguised as a common miner in search of work, examined the mine thoroughly, and reported it as a good purchase. He was one of the first to discover indications of the great ribs of copper that have made Butte famous, and with Senator Hearst and J. B. Haggin backing him, bought the Anaconda silver mine and began to sink a shaft straight down through the silver ore and into the granite beneath it in search of copper. He bored through the granite and made a sensational discovery of the richest body of copper ore that has ever been found. After that his opinion was law and everything he wanted from his backers he got. He bought other copper properties and they have since yielded up millions in mineral wealth.

MANUFACTURE OF PERFUMES.

A Leading Industry of Southern France for Many Years.

The memory of man does not reach back to the time when the perfume industry was not a leading one in southern France, but few people understand anything of the details of the business or what a vast number of flowers is required to make a few drops of the most delicate and valuable perfumes. The government, in its advance sheets of consular reports, gives an extract from the Revue de Statistique which presents some curious and interesting facts concerning the perfume industry.

In the department of the Maritime Alps in southern France the quantity of blossoms required annually for the manufacture of perfumes, oils, etc., is: Of roses, 4,409,200 pounds; of orange blossoms, 5,511,500 pounds; of jessamine, 440,920 pounds; of cassia blossoms, 330,690 pounds; of tuberoses, 330,690 pounds, and of violets, 440,920 pounds. These blossoms are sold by the kilogram (2.2046 pounds) and the prices paid are so astonishingly low as to raise a smile of disgust upon the face of an ordinary flower dealer.

The violets and cassia bring 4 francs (77.2 cents) per kilogram; tuberoses 5 francs (96½ cents); jessamine 2½ francs (48.2 cents); roses 65 centimes (12.5 cents); orange blossoms 70 centimes (13.5 cents). The pickers of the flowers can gather, in four hours, 44,092 pounds of roses; 6.66 pounds of jessamine, 13.2 pounds of tuberoses and in an entire day 22,046 pounds of violets or orange blossoms.

The preparation of the perfumes requires a vast number of these blossoms. To produce 2.2046 pounds of essence, 2,204.6 pounds of orange blossoms are demanded, which means, approximately, 1,200,000 separate flowers. For the same quantity of attar of roses about 35,273.6 pounds of roses, or 5,000,000 blossoms, are required. But the aggregate product of the perfume business is large, for the district annually produces 1,102,300 pounds of pomade or oils, the value of which exceeds 15,000,000 francs, or $2,895,000.—Chicago News.

Clark and the Spanish Fleet.

S. Nicholson Kane, who hid his identity on the St. Paul during the war under the name of Samuel N. Kane, entertained a select party in the ward room of the New York Yacht Club with tales from the fleet. He was one of Sigsbee's trusted lieutenants, and was in the cabin of the St. Paul when Capt. Clark of the Oregon was asked to tell what he intended doing when the Temarario and the rest of the supposed torpedo fleet and a cruiser or two attacked him. "Run away as fast as possible," was the reply of the gallant Vermonter; "string out the fleet and tackle the Colon first, the only ship we knew could steam as fast as the Oregon. After sinking the Colon we intended sending the torpedo boats and destroyers to the bottom, one after the other." "Captain, weren't you a little nervous over the prospect?" an officer asked. "No, not nervous, but anxious," said Clark. "We were in the dark as to the enemy's whereabouts and movements, but as to the outcome we never had the slightest doubt."—New York Press.

white dresses, ten hats and thirty sets of underclothes. He is always as clean as a newly-minted silver half-dime, and his little eyes are brighter than any metal that was dug out of the earth. When he goes out every fair morning in all seasons for his ride in his little white push buggy he wears a white Tam o' Shanter hat with four white flaring ostrich tips on the side, tied with great white bows of ribbon, a big ruffle of lace over his head and a white cloak that cost his papa $200 net. Cornelius V. at all times wears a string of pearls about his pink neck. For his best dress, which consists of a miracle of lace and silk construction, there was paid the sum of $175. This marvel of a baby is a big expense. His wardrobe is estimated at a value of $5,000. His sixty costumes cost from $60 to $75 each. His shoes are such as one might imagine to have been worn by an oriental prince, and his chariot in which he is perambulated daily cost $100. He is the infant king of 5th avenue.

MRS. GROVER CLEVELAND.

Beloved in Princeton and Is the Recognized Head of Its Society.

Mrs. Grover Cleveland, the wife of ex-President Cleveland, has been, since the time of her arrival in Princeton, N. J., two years ago, as a resident beloved by rich and poor alike, and as a woman of fashion the acknowledged leader of Princeton society. It has not been a life of endless dinners, cotillons and soirees, but rather one of domesticity, combined with constant association with the people who constitute the polite society of the famous old university town. And Mrs. Cleveland is very popular among the undergraduates. Twice a year she gives a reception to the students whom she knows, and on several occasions has chaperoned parties of fair debutantes who have come into town for the dances, at dinners or teas given at the upper-class clubs. She is invariably placed at the head of the list of patronesses of the hops and senior dances, and on many occasions has graced the affairs at the Casino with her presence.

But aside from the dinners and receptions that she gives and attends with her distinguished husband, it is her home life that she most enjoys. Her four children are at the age when the mother's care is most needed, and the whole wealth of her gracious nature is expended upon devoted attention to the little Clevelands.

Consumption of Rice.

Great Britain takes 350,000,000 pounds of rice a year, or nine pounds to each person. The United States requires but four pounds per capita, Spain, five; Italy, fourteen. But Japan takes no less than 300 pounds per person a year, and the average of India is 200.

A cake walk is like a circus; if you have seen one, you have seen all of them.

STATE LAW MAKERS.

The lower house passed twenty-one bills on Friday. Among the more important of them were bills to establish a State board of pharmacy, to require steam boilers to be inspected, to require the examination and licensing of stationary engineers, to establish county boards of charities, to prevent the importation into the State of dependent children, to prevent the adulteration of candy, to bestow the veto power on mayors of all cities of not less than 35,000 population and to require that all street cars be heated during winter months. After a prolonged debate the bill to authorize the State to pay a bounty on beet sugar was defeated. It has been defeated in both houses. In the Senate the bill by Mr. Hogate to provide for revision of the State constitution was advanced to engrossment.

The committee on rivers and waters of the lower house of the Legislature decided on Monday to report favorably on the bill for an act to assist in the building of a harbor at Wolf Lake. The bill provides for the condemnation of a right of way for a channel 300 feet wide, connecting Wolf Lake with Lake Michigan, and authorizes the assessment of benefits and damages for the building of the channel. The harbor improvement company which brought the bill to the Legislature says Congress will make an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor as soon as the channel is opened. The supporters of the proposition to reduce railroad fare to 2 cents a mile were defeated in the House on Monday by the tabling of a motion to require the committee on railroads to report the 2-cent-fare bill.

Senator Culbert's bill regarding convict labor and its employment was the special order set for Tuesday afternoon in the House, but it was passed without amendment or discussion. Senator Gochenour's bill to authorize counties to acquire title to real estate on which school fund mortgages have to be foreclosed was among those passed. Mr. Sweeney's fisheries bill as it came from the Senate and Senator Newby's bill for the incorporation of life insurance companies, which provides for a legal reserve, were passed. Mr. Nusbaum's bill, which provides that county auditors shall specify for what purpose special meetings of the commissioners shall be called and forbidding the transaction of any other business at the meeting was passed. Senator Osborn's bill amending the election laws, so that if a person offering to vote shall make affidavit that there is no person of his political party residing in the precinct who has been a resident householder and freeholder, then the affidavit or affirmation of any qualified voter shall be accepted by the election board, was passed. Mr. Marshall's bill establishing educational qualifications for county superintendents and increasing the term of office from two to four years was passed. Mr. Canada's bill to prevent county auditors from charging a fee for swearing to claims against the county was passed. The bill by Mr. Louttit to appoint a State entomologist and provide ways and means for preventing the San Jose scale from getting on fruit trees, to inspect nursery stock, etc., was passed after much opposition. Mr. James' bill to authorize county commissioners to pay a reward of $500 for the arrest of a murderer or lyncher, was passed without a negative vote.

The constitution of the State of Indiana will not be revised in 1901. The Senate on Thursday defeated the bill for a constitutional convention to be held in May of that year. Senator Huggs' bill to change the rule of practice in personal injury cases so as to make it conform to that of the United States courts passed the House. It is the result of ten years of agitation by organized labor. Under the new rule the plaintiff in personal injury cases will not have to prove that he was not negligent. The House passed the bill, which originated in that body, exculpating the buyer of votes and providing that the seller be disfranchised for ten years. The two old political parties by enforcing such a law hope to take "floaters" out of the market. The bill prepared by the State commission for a uniform system of bookkeeping in county offices and for inspections under the direction of the State Auditor, which passed the Senate, was killed in the House.

The following are among the new bills introduced:

By Mr. Artman—Concerning the construction of court houses in certain counties.

By Mr. Artman—To prohibit commissioners from giving the right of way over county roads to electric railroads.

By Mr. Barlow—To keep creeks clear of drifts, etc.

By Mr. Dilley—To authorize county auditors to draw on other counties for the amounts assessed against the school funds.

By Mr. Dilley—To amend the law regarding justices of the peace.

By Mr. Caraway—To require electric alarm bells at railway crossings.

By Mr. Willoughby—To maintain day schools for the deaf.

By Mr. Scott of Montgomery—To amend the act concerning real property.

By Mr. Roots—To fix the compensation of State officers.

By Mr. Roots—To provide for a fee and salary commission.

By Mr. Baker of Whitley—To amend the act concerning interest.

By Mr. Leitz—To prohibit combinations.

By Mr. Baker of Martin—To make posting of warning notices effectual.

By Mr. Scott of Montgomery—To amend the dog law.

By Senator Drummond—Allowing suit to be brought against the administrator of an estate on property claimed to have been conveyed to him personally.

By Senator Early—Providing for a uniform township government.

By Senator Early—Concerning the election and qualification of justices of the peace.

By Senator Early—Fixing the fees and salaries of justices of the peace.

By Senator Gwin—Allowing county commissioners to put up guide posts on turnpikes.

By Senator Hawkins—Regulating the State inspection of oil and taking the appointment of the State oil inspector away from the State geologist and giving it to the Governor.

By Senator Hugg—Allowing persons assessed fo rroad improvements to have the benefits of the Barrett law.

By Senator Lambert—Amending the present hotel "dead-beat law" so as to not make it prima facie evidence of intention on the part of a guest to defraud the hotel by removing his baggage.

By Senator Wood—To prevent extortion by the owners of stock yards.

By Senator Nusbaum—To prevent discrimination in rates of charges by express companies.

By Senator O'Connor—Providing that where poor persons require the services of physicians they may select their own physician and the township shall pay the bill.

By Senator Stillwell—Providing that "no person having one-eighth part or more of negro blood shall be permitted to marry any white woman or continue to live with such white woman in this State; nor shall any white man be permitted to marry any negro woman or any woman having one-eighth part or more of negro blood, or continue to live with such woman in this State

Joke on Nusbaum.

Senator Nusbaum got a real roast Saturday night. He had come to his room about two o'clock and took a bath Then, attired in a night robe, he backed up against a grate to get warm before jumping into bed. The fire was low, and to help it burn, he threw some waste paper onto it, and turned his back again. The paper blazed up, caught the night robe, and blazed up. The Senator jumped and yelled for help He tried to tear off the robe, but it was strong. He dashed into the hall and into the bath room, when he managed to get off the robe, but his undershirt was still on and burning. Help came and he was saved and put to bed. But there are burned spots on his back and his back hair was burned off.

The Oddfellows.

As noted last week in the COURIER the Oddfellows have a big meeting here Friday, a county meeting at which all the lodges in the county will take part. It is to conclude with a supper which is furnished by the Rebekahs This will be at the basement rooms of the Presbyterian church, which they have secured for that purpose. The supper will be at 10 p. m., after the work of the order is over, and will no doubt be a fine one, as the ladies are skilled in that line. Altogether it is to be a red letter day for the order in DeKalb.

Editor Sued.

J. C. Vernier the greedy, grasping Vernier, who wants, who is going into court to get a big slice of editor Higley's small change, should read the case against the Pierceton Record. A man named Joliff was suing the Record for $20,000 worth of injured feelings but finally weakened and offered to throw off half. At once, the editor, remembering the masterly ways of the "Immortal J. N." offered to throw off the other half. This generous offer was accepted and the case is now taken off the Kosclusko county docket.

The Bogie Dead.

The "Bogie Man" at Chicago is dead. He was so called because of a strange disease which caused his bones to grow out of shape This was particularly noticeable in his face, especially in the lengthening of his chin which extended down a foot farther than it should. He was a sensitive, well educated man, and to avoid annoying comments, he has for some time lived in an old building. His body was cremated to keep the doctors from getting it.

The Mission Meetings

There will be meetings now every evening at the Chistian Mission. Strangers and the poor always welcome at these services. No collections are taken. Praise and song service at 7 o'clock. LOTS OF FUN.

The G. A. R. and W. R. C. Have Oodles of it at Their Cake Walk.

The G. A. R. hall was last evening, the scene of a great deal of innocent amusement, all highly enjoyed. Besides the usual social features there was the cake walk for numerous cakes furnished by the W. R, C. Here was where much of the fun came in, for almost everybody took part and everybody enjoyed it. There were fourteen fine cakes and twelve of them were given as prizes in the different walks. The lucky couples were:

Miss Nellie Franks and Claude Refner.

Miss Etta Prickett and Charles Elson.

Little Miss Lucille Moody and Master George Willis.

Mrs. Libbie Potter and L. D. Parrett.

Mrs. P. W. Silver and Wm. Elson.

Mrs. E. Burke and Simp Johnson.

Mr. and Mrs. Bud Johnson.

Mrs. Susanna Altenberg and Mrs. A. M. Richards.

Mrs. P. W. Silver and Wesley Walters.

Charles Elson got another cake and Dall Gibson got one, but we could not get the names of the ladies who shared with them.

The officers of the day were Joe Rainer, who "hit the gong" when they were to stop, while Clerk Long and A. W. Bates were judges.

Besides the enjoyment, there was a good amount of cash taken in making it a financial success.

Dr. Teal Dead

Hon. Norman Teal died at his home in Kendallville last Saturday, at the age of over 70. He was a veteran of the rebellion in which he served as a surgeon. Originally a republican, he finally disagreed with his party and in 1890, was sent by the democrats to the legislature as joint representative for Elkhart, Noble and DeKalb. He was a man of ability, honored and respected.

Iloilo Taken

Saturday Gen. Miller landed his troops at Iloilo, after bombarding the Filippinos in their part of the town. The natives hurried out and after setting the town on fire, but the Americans were on hand in time to stop it. This is the second large city in the Filippines and is 350 miles from Manila on the island of Panay, which is about one eighth the size of Indiana.

ST. JOE.

George Hamm and Wash Woodcox had a dose of the grip last week but are all right now.

Miss Lillie Hamm come down from Garrett last Thursday to see her parents a few days.

It is said that the ice on the river is the heaviest it has been for fifteen years.

The cry of fire was heard Saturday morning about 5 o'clock. The woodhouse of H. Hathaway was on fire but was put out without much damages. A case of too many hot ashes.

Mrs. Joe Metcalf is very sick with asthma and grip. There is very little hopes of her recovery.

Art Woodcox went to Peru last Saturday, his best girl lives there.

Frank Filley was at Angola on Saturday of last week.

Rev. Dunlap of the Lutheran church commenced a series of meetings at the Lutheran church last Sunday evening. He is being assisted by Rev. Erick of Spencerville and Rev. Seberts of Gettysburg, Penn.

Talk about your wheat harvest, ice harvest, but if the last ten days hasn't been a wood harvest, then we don't want to see a wood harvest.

A freight train pulled into St. Joe this morning (Monday) that has been since Friday morning coming from North Baltimore, a little less than a hundred miles, the train being a double header at that. Neither engine would make steam enough to move the train, owing to the cold weather.

The ministers of St. Joe have called down upon their ministerial heads quite a lengthy article in the St. Joe News, from some of the ladies belonging to the different churches in regard to what they (the ladies) call innocent amusements, but what the ministers call questionable. The ladies leave no doubt in the minds of their readers what they mean and quote a whole lot of scripture in order to prove what they assert. But our attention was particularly called to the article by the heading of another article immediately below the one by the ladies', viz "Volcanic Eruptions are grand, but they rob life of joy."

The cold weather of the past 10 days calls to memory of some very cold weather of former years, for instance when men's boots would be froze to the cabin floors, and when milking the cows, milk would freeze before it got to the pail, and we have heard of one man who lost all his chickens by having their bills all frozen fast in the water that was given them to drink. Whew!

FROM PUGET SOUND.

EDITOR COURIER:—There is perhaps in no section of our country so large a territory in which the animal life remains unmolested by the presence of the white man, as the region lying between the Sound and the ocean, and south of the straits of Fuca. This vast region is still in a state of nature where the primeval forest has scarcely been scared by the ax of civilized man, where the fierce grizzly bear is still king of beasts, and the stealthy panther seemingly devises ways and means to surprise the fleet deer as he comes down from the mountain pasture to slake his thirst in the brook. The common black bear is here in great numbers, and may be met with in the most unlooked for places, frequently in the farmer's hog pen or barn yard. But his greatest delight is to stand by a small brook and with his sharp claws, dextrously sling the salmon to the shore as they go up the river to spawn. During the salmon season, which lasts from September to December, the flesh of the bear is not fit for food. It has a strong fishy flavor But during the season of berries, which lasts from June to September, the flesh of the black bear is excellent During the winter the bear hibernates in some secure retreat far from the haunts of man.

During all seasons of the year the festive wildcats hold high carnival with the fowls, both wild and domesticated. During the day, right in broad light of the sun he boldly enters the chicken yard and therefrom always selects the largest and fattest hen to be had. The panther also loves to occasionally vary his diet, by picking up a fat and tender fowl. Last October while my uncle and I were piling lumber in our yard a panther came within six rods of us, and coolly picked up a fine Plymouth Rock hen. The next day he took another, within two rods of our house. We yelled at him but he paid no attention to our presence, but calmly walked off with his prize into the thick underbrush where no man can follow.

Deer are very plentiful in this vicinity. More than one dozen were shot within one mile of our place in the past six months. Elks in vast bands still roam the unknown wilds of the interior mountains. They occasionally approach the borders of civilization and are taken by the hunters. One specimen which my brother helped to pack out weighed eighteen hundred pounds, exclusive of the horn, which measured six feet from tip to tip. Their flesh is an improved quality of beef.

Wolves were formerly plenty, but the deep snow in the mountains eighteen years ago and the unusual cold deprived them of their usual means of subsistence, and they all succumbed to the inevitable so that the dismal howl of the wolf is heard no more in the land.

Rabbits of two varieties, ground hogs coons and skunks carry on their festivities on the beach, when the tide is out and some of the clams are left exposed. Fish in great numbers and variety swarm the bays, rivers and lakes. These, with the seals and clams form the main resource of lingering tribes of red man who still inhabit these shores. I have seen no rats and but few mice or other vermin. Bugs and insect pests are almost unknown. There is no wormy fruit within ten miles of the salt waters. Would it not delight the eye of a native of DeKalb to see an orchard of one thousand apple trees bending low with with red cheeked Baldwins and not a worm in the whole lot. But our fruit trees still have pests. It is the crow and the blue jay that make sad havock with ripe apples and cherries. Crows do not migrate from here but are with us throughout the whole year and are much tamer than his eastern cousin—often roosting on the house roofs. We have also a wild chicken called grouse and great numbers of quails, duck and wild geese besides innumerable small birds of song which space forbids me to describe. With kind regards for the readers of the COURIER. I remain yours truly,

JOSEPH A. SHADE.

Badly Burned.

This morring, Mrs. Manion of Garrett was taking the hot ashes and coals out of her stove, when some oily waste she was a going to use to kindle with, caught fire and communicatad to her clothing, and she was badly burned. Her husband, Mart Manion, is engineer in the Grrrett waterworks. The latest this afternoon, is that she is evidently dying. The blaze and smoke of the accident alarmed the fire department and they blew the siren whistle that was heard in Auburn. There was no fire, however.

AFTER 11 YEARS.

A Valuable Instrument Regained After a Long Search.

In 1888, Dr. S. U. Tarney of this city lent a violin to a gentleman living in the south part of Auburn. A few months after, this man died. S. U. Tarney made inquiry of the wife of the deceased for the violin. She said it had been there, but she had lost trace of it, since her husband died.

Mr. Tarney knowing something of the character of a young man that was boarding with her at the time the violin disappeared, kept a lookout at home and abroad, inspecting every violin he got an eye upon, for he would know it by certain cracks in the top and by the name of "Stradivarius Anno Domino 1736," pasted in the bottom, and also by the mellow, rich melodious tone. A short time ago a violin came to his notice, that struck him as his lost treasure. But it had been somewhat changed. The paper in the bottom had been torn out all but a small portion. And a coat of dark varnish or stain put on it to disfigure it. Notwithstanding all of this disfiguration, Mr. Tarney knew the violin the moment he got it into his hand and had drawn the bow across it. Knowing the value of it, he proposed a trade with the young man owning it, who came by it in an honest way, and the offer was accepted.

Now Mr. Tarney is a much pleased man, as the violin is a genuine Stradivarius make and very valuable. It was brought from Germany about twenty-five years ago, by Dr. Roscoff, and the violin is 166 years old.

A strange feature of the affair is that with all its travels and wanderings, this rare old violin should come back to the house of the rightful owner and there he recognized it and secured it.

A Bit of Old Manila

The question which many an American has been considering of late is, what are the business opportunites—the industrial opportunities in the Phillippines? One of the features of Harper's Weekly for the past month has been its special correspondence, in which is given the fullest and most satisfactory information on these subjects. Everyone who is interested in this question will find in these letters just what he needs to know.

A Bit of old Manila. After a drawing in Harper's Weekly. Copyright, 1898, by Harper & Brothers.

What are the openings in the Philippines? In the first place, a richer land or group of islands, as regards area and population, variety of agricultural, mineral, and forest resources undeveloped, cannot be pointed out on the map of the world. Every authority on the Far East affirms this opinion. There are not only gold and silver, but iron and coal; not only vast forests of ship and house-building woods, but rarest qualities for furnishing finishing, and ornamenting; not only great areas given up to the cultivation of sugar, hemp, tobacco, and coffee, but wider reaches of virgin soil untouched and waiting the pioneer who is supported by an honest government. There are one or two railways; there should be a score. There are a few steamer lines, but there should be a system of launches and steamers by which every one of these garden spots could be reached and developed. The natives will make no trouble, provided they once know that they are not to be oppressed and tax ridden. For the year 1894 the combined value of imports and exports was $30,000,000. If the United States eventually governs the Philippines that amount will go up until it passes the $200,000,000 mark. In the order of importance the chief exports were sugar, hemp, tobacoo, and coffee. The Weekly also gives full information in regard to cost of living and other essential matters.

Eight Dollar Wood.

Ralph Thomas reports a wood famine in Fort Wayne when he was there yesterday. As the city is largely dependent on gas for its heat, the recent cold spell reduced the flow so they had to work to keep from freezing. Then they began to look for wood and found there was but little in the city. It went up in price and then the people in the country began hauling in yesterday. He said he saw them get as high as $8 for a single cord of 18 inch wood of good quality. Other grades sold accordingly. On Market Street stood lines of teams with wood, some with a half, some with three quarters of a cord, some good, some bad, but all got a good price.

Cured Bronchial Trouble.

CHAS. E. DAVIS, 1704 W. Congress St. writes, I have suffered for years with bronchial trouble and have tried many kinds of medicines without relief until I began taking Foley's Honey and Tar, which cured me. It saved me doctor bills this winter. 25 cents.

Club Notes.

The L. L. C. held their usual meeting last Saturday, with Mrs. Swineford. there was a good attendance. The subject for the day was Chicago Leader, Miss Hague. But owing to cold weather and the grip, Miss Hague was not able to be present. So her work, "History and Advantages of Chicago," was necessarily postponed. Mrs. Ralston had "Hospitals and Training Schools," but failed to secure the necessary information in time to prepare her paper, and will give it in the future. Mrs. Barns' paper "The Daily News Sanitarium" was given as to how the sick babies are cared for at this noble institution, and seemed greatly to interest the members. This worthy institution is situated on the lake front in Lincoln Park, and is free to the sick babies of the poor, especially those of the tenement houses of Chicago. The expenses of this noble charity is met by a fund raised by the Chicago Daily News, and is called the "Fresh Air Fund." It is the only institution of the kind in the United States and has done immense amount of good in its twelve years of existence During the season of 1897, 89 days, 13,499 sick babies were treated, fed and clothed, while 13,694 mothers and 38,555 children were helped, making a total of 65,748. What a grand record for one institution organized to do good.

Some back work was brought up by Miss McTighe, the subject being "A Trip from New Orleans to Louisville" This was an account of a real trip by Miss McTighe about two years ago. She gave many interesting items about New Orleans, Baton Rouge, Natches, Vicksburg, Memphis and Louisville, closing with an account of being aground on a sand bar in the Ohio river for forty-eight hours. A good deal of business was transacted and a committee appointed to bring before the club plans for the celebration of the seventeenth anniversary of the club. The committee appointed was, Mrs. Tillie McCord, Mrs. Hortense Robbins and Mrs. Holmes. Current news and criticisms followed and the club adjourned to meet with Mrs. J. E. Rose next Saturday.

The Wednesday Reading Club met with Mrs. Jennie Weaver last week, but owing to the intensely cold weather but few were in attendance and not much work done farther than to talk up plans for the coming Art Loan and Bazar for the benefit of the Band The club will meet with Mrs. Aber Wednesday, and a full attendance is desired

The Up-to-Date Club met with Miss Georgia Zimmerman last Friday evening. The usual good time was enjoyed by all. Music, games and fun were the order of the exercises for the evening. Refreshments served, consisted of ice cream, cake, peanuts, candy and cocoa. The club will meet next Friday evening with Nona McBride.

The Jolly Eight met with Helen Vann last Saturday afternoon, and it goes without saying that they had a "jolly" time. Little Miss Helen is an ardent lover of fun and a good time might of course be expected with her as hostess. Light refreshments were served and they adjourned to meet with Allie Mitchell next Saturday afternoon.

The Culture Club met with Mrs. Lizzie Raut Saturday afternoon. In the absence of the regularly appointed leader Mrs. Moody, Mrs. Moss took charge of the lesson, which was German Literature. Mrs. Roby gave a fine reading, Outre-Mere by Longfellow. This was received by the club with a good deal of interest. The paper by Mrs. Caruth was not given, owing to her absence. The closing exercise was a discussion on the events of the late war with Spain, Mrs. Mabel Brown the newly elected member was present for the first time. Arrangements were completed for the Valentine Party to be given tomorrow by the club to invited guests. This will be held at the home of Mrs. C. C. Shaffer. The club adjourned to meet next Saturday with Mrs. Etta Ryan.

So he had to help out a number of the factories. He has several car loads ordered but they have been delayed. He has word that one car will be here today.

—Indianapolis and other cities that use gas have had trouble to get enough of the tricky fluid to keep them warm this subzero weather. One of the 12 inch mains coming from the gas fields to the city of Indianapolis got drawn apart a few miles south of Elwood, caused by the pipes shrinking from the severe cold. At the point where the joint came apart the lines derw from each other three feet, and a "sleeve" had to be put on. OBITUARY.

Isaac Miller Jackman was born in Stark Co., O., June 18th, 1821. Died near Waterloo, Ind., Feb. 19th, 1899, aged 77 years, 7 months and 21 days.

While an infant, his parents moved to Carroll, Ohio, where he resided with them until the year. 1847; when he came to Indiana to see the land which he had purchased; remaining during the summer and returned home during the winter. The next summer he also spent clearing away the forest and making a home; returning to Carroll Co. late in the fall and on Jan. 28th, 1850 he was joined in marriage to Miss Jane Whitla. April 30th of that year he started with his young wife, and after a tedious Journey, on the 8th of June they arrived at their new home in the wilderness of Indiana on the farm where he has lived to the day of his death. Their experiences were fraught with many incidents which are strangely primitive to the present generation. Mrs. Jackman found, and occupied her house without a floor; cooking her meals for the first summer at a stump side fire. However they enjoyed it, being filled with young life, ambition and hope. There is but one of the settlers remaining upon the home farm, who was their neighbor at that time—John Pierson. Five children, Mrs. Mary Kiplinger, J. W., I. M., Amos, and John, who with the faithful wife survive him. Six grandchildren, five of whom survive are the family blessings which came to gratify his life. He was a tender, faithful husband, a kindly considerate father, a generous and helpful neighbor, and a man of untiring industry and prudent economy. The children scarcely remember the time when the house has not been the refuge of some homeless, needy one. While he never made a religious profession, he was a close student and a believer in the Holy Scriptures, unshaken in his faith in the Resurrection of the body and the Doctrines of Faith. A stickler for the strictest and nicest honor, he came from an earnest old Methodist stock, while the wife was rocked and reared in the lap of the Presbyterian church. His death seemed sudden, however it has been known for several years that his condition was such that the end might come at any time. Cottage services were conducted at the old home. Sunday at 10:30 a. m. Feb. 12, by W. O. Butler and were largely attended by the old neighbors who followed the remains to the burial in the Waterloo cemetery.

A MOST WONDERFUL CURE.

Dear Sir:—I have received great benefit from your White Wine of Tar Syrup I had a cough and the doctors gave up all hopes of my recovery and pronounced it consumption; I thought that it was death for me. THE PEOPLE OF SAMOA

BEAUTIES OF LIFE IN THE KINGDOM ON THE SEA.

The Inhabitants Are Happy, Love Fun, Are Hospitable to Strangers, Never Worry, and Are Splendid Fighters When Forced to It.

The recent difficulty in the Samoan Islands has turned public attention to that quarter of the Pacific, and we begin to wonder what kind of people live there. First of all, as everybody knows, there are foreigners, that is English, German, French and Americans, but the chief interest centers in the native Samoans.

In color the Samoans are the lightest, in physique the most perfect and imposing as well as the most graceful of the Pacific Islanders. In disposition they are the most gentle, and in manners the most attractive, while mentally and morally they are much the superior of their neighbors. Their color varies through shades ranging from a dark brown to a light copper, and occasionally to a shade of olive, which is exceedingly pretty. Their hair is straight, coarse and black, although one daily meets a number of bleached red-heads, artificially produced by the application of coral lime, which is used to stiffen the hair so that it will more easily stand erect—a style greatly admired. The hair is generally worn short, combed upward toward the crown, and receives frequent and liberal applications of cocoanut oil. Varieties of adornment prevail according to the fancy of the individual; these usually express themselves in the use of flowers and leaves, which are twined into wreaths and garlands and worn with becoming effect.

Hospitality is a part of Samoan religion, politeness one of their chief characteristics, and a dishonest act is the exception. Food and shelter are vouchsafed to every one entering their homes or villages, and the stranger has but to consult his own wishes when he is ready to depart.

The Samoans are a joyous, fun-loving people, and under the slightest pretext for an excuse they indulge their buoyant natures in singing and dancing.

While the Samoans are not a warlike people, they are good fighters when forced to fight. The distinguishing feature of their warfare is that after they have slain their antagonists they cut off their heads and bring them home as trophies of their victory. They do this on much the same principle as the American Indian in days gone by prided himself in the number of scalps he could string to his belt, or as the American of to-day brings home a captured flag. They have an inborn hatred of foreigners, and only make friends with them when they think they can profit by doing so or when they fear the superior power of the foreigner. They have had almost continual civil war for the past twenty-five or thirty years. For many years the reigning dynasty has been that of the Malietoas.

STREET SCENE IN APIA.

Malieton Laupepa was the greatest king in Samoa history. He was deposed several times, and as often was reinstated on the throne. The present king is Maleton Tanus, but he is having great difficulty, owing to the treachery and treason of Mataafa, a firebrand who represents an old rebellious faction that for many years was headed by a rebel chief, Tamasese, and who has been urged on and assisted by the Germans, who hope that once they have him on the throne they will be able to do anything they please with him. The Germans have always been opposed to Malietoas because the latter have had the sympathy and support of the English and American people and governments.

MRS. CORDELIA BOTKIN.

San Francisco Woman Convicted of a Diabolical Crime.

Mrs. Cordelia Botkin, the San Francisco poisoner, who has been convicted by a jury which fixed her punishment at imprisonment for life, is a remarkably pretty and attractive woman. At her trial for the murder of Mrs. John P. Dunning, of Dover, Del., and of Mrs. Dunning's sister, Mrs. Deane, it was proved that Mrs. Botkin bought arsenic and candy just before the box of poisoned bonbons was sent through the mails to Mrs. Dunning. The evidence was most conclusive and left the defense not a foot to stand upon. The motive for the crime was the infatuation of Mrs. Botkin for Dunning and her intense jealousy of Mrs. Dunning, whom she had never seen. The pretty San Franciscan met Dunning in the coast metropolis, and these two were wont to "have a good time generally." Mrs. Botkin was one of the gayest women in the gay town, and the testimony as to her pranks with her friends was not especially edifying. Toward the latter end of July she conceived her diabolic plan of destroying her lover's wife, but she overreached her ends. The real fight for Mrs. Botkin's liberty, was made upon the question of jurisdiction. The prosecution was conducted under the provisions of section 27 of the California code providing for the punishment of crimes committed in whole or in part in that State. The defense contended that, as the outcome of the crime really took place in Delaware, Mrs. Botkin was only liable to the law of that State.

MRS. CORDELIA BOTKIN.

Figures on the Colored Vote.

By the figures of the last census the colored vote of the country—that is, the males above the age of 21 years—numbered 1,740,455. Of these the following States had the largest proportions: Georgia, 179,028 voters; Mississippi, 150,469; Alabama, 140,763; South Carolina, 132,949, and Louisiana, 119,815.

A Great Scottish Industry.

The Scottish herring fishery is now the greatest in the world, employing 12,000 boats and 100,000 people.

The office seldom seeks the man, but the officer very often does.

THEY LOST NO TIME.

Announcement of an Engagement Was an Important News Item.

In a Milwaukee newspaper office the telephone rang loud and long the other night, or rather, in the early hours of the morning. It was the "dog watch," most of the workers having gone home, and but one member of the staff was on guard and on the alert for anything from a murder to a fire. It was about 3 a. m. when the "dog watch" was called to the telephone to answer an imperative summons.

"Hello!" said a voice. "Is it too late to get something into to-morrow's paper?"

"Not if it's important," was the reply.

"Oh, it is," was the assuring response.

The reporter rushed for a pad of paper and a pencil, screwed his ear to the receiver again and said:

"All right. Fire away there."

The voice was heard again, this time tremulous with emotion.

"The engagement of Miss —— to Mr. —— is announced."

The wrathful explosion at the newspaper end of the line was picturesque and prolonged. After a choice assortment of profanity in an aside the query went back: "Why didn't you send in such stuff earlier in the day?"

"But I couldn't," said the voice apologetically. "You see, it just happened."

ONLY WOMAN ENGINEER.

A Cleveland Girl Who Enjoys a Unique Distinction.

Miss Florence Caldwell, of Cleveland, Ohio, has gained the distinction of being the only woman civil engineer in America. Miss Caldwell is an exceptionally well educated girl. She attended Adelbert College, graduated from the Cleveland School of Art, won high degrees at the Ohio Wesleyan College and finally entered the School of Mines of the State of Colorado at Golden. She was the only female student in that institution, and after four years graduated with a certificate of civil engineer. No other woman in America holds such a paper. Miss Caldwell is a daughter of Judge Caldwell, a prominent Ohio jurist.

IN A BREAD BASKET.

How Two Lovers Outwitted a Parent in the Days of Elizabeth.

The story runs that Lord Compton fell in love with the only child of Sir John Spencer, one of the most opulent of London's merchant princes, proverbially known at the time as "rich Spencer." Sir John by no means approved of the advances of the young courtier, and positively refused to consent to the marriage; the course of true love, however, never running smooth, Lord Compton devised a plan to outwit Sir John and carry off his lady love.

A bribe to the baker enabled him to disguise himself and deliver the loaves one morning. As soon as the basket was empty the lady got in, and Lord Compton was boldly carrying his precious load down stairs when he was met by Sir John, who, luckily not recognizing him, gave him a sixpence as a reward for being so early, observing that that was the way to thrive.

On discovering the truth Sir John was so angry that he disinherited his daughter, and the quarrel was only made up through the intervention of Queen Elizabeth, who invited him to stand sponsor with her for a child, whom he promised to adopt—to find it was his own grandson.—Pall Mall Magazine.

The manner in which New York papers talk about people is as interesting and candid as private gossip in the West.

CAMPAIGN AND OTHER BUTTONS

Waning Fad Out of Which an Iowa Woman Made a Small Fortune.

"I became interested in campaign buttons a few years ago," said a Chicagoan who is constantly on the lookout for novelties which will sell, "and was fortunate enough to catch the craze just at the right time. We had quite a large plant and were able to turn out 100,000 buttons a day. The device was printed on disks of specially prepared celluloid, which were then slightly softened and pressed on metal rings with a stud fastening. That part was done by a machine which was invented by a woman in Iowa. She made about $15,000 out of her patent. The first buttons were nearly all political, but the fad soon extended to other varieties, and at one time we made over 300 different sets, each set having, sometimes, as many as forty separate designs. Making the drawings alone kept a corps of ten men busy. They were originally printed in black, but after a while the demand for novelty forced us to put in color presses and some of the work was really artistic. Eventually we used photography also, and printed from the negatives direct to the celluloid. The process was a secret one, and we had to pay a pretty stiff royalty.

"There was a great difference in the quality of the buttons. Some of them sold for half a cent apiece wholesale, and some brought as high as a quarter. The latter were the large photographic buttons with German silver mounts. Of course a few are still sold, but not a hundredth part as many as were formerly called for. We thought that the war would create a demand for buttons bearing portraits of the celebrities, but we were badly left. We got out several series with pictures of Dewey, Hobson, Sampson, Schley and all the rest of them, but somehow they didn't catch on, and a set with pictures of the ships also got the cold shoulder. One order that we recently filled was for 100,000 handsome Roosevelt buttons, which went to New York and were bought by partisans of the rough rider. A phase of the fad that shows some vitality is the personal button—embellished with one's own portrait or that of one's sweetheart. A great many of these are made to order. We sell to the dealers, and they dispose of their wares to the hawkers. Nearly all the buttons in the market are peddled on the curb."—Chicago Chronicle.

HIS TRIBE OWNED CHICAGO.

Simon's Father Sold the City's Site for Three Cents an Acre.

Simon Pokagon, chief of the Pottawatomie tribe of Indians, who died recently at Benton Harbor, Mich., had led a prosaic life. He had many of the characteristics of his race, but they were the fine ones, and, in addition, he had some of the best qualities of the white people. He was honest to a degree, and he was a bright, intelligent talker. Although his education was just what he had picked up here and there, he was really a cultivated man. He spent much of his time reading, and had quite a collection of books and curios. He could write well, too, and produced at least one poem which possessed merit.

Simon was 70 years old. The topic upon which he delighted to talk was the sale by his father of the site of Chicago. The land on which the second city of the Union now stands was owned by the Pottawatomies, and Pokegaw, Simon's father, sold it to the government for 3 cents an acre.

WATERLOO DANCER STILL ALIVE

Lady Carew, Belle of the Brussels Ball, Completes Her Hundreth Year.

There is still living at Woodsdown House, County Waterford, Ireland, a remarkable woman, the Dowager Lady Carew, whose career takes us back to one of the most historic and dramatic periods in the world's history. Lady Carew was one of "the fair women" who danced with "brave men" at the ball given in Brussels on the eve of the battle of Waterloo, where the star of Napoleon went down in gloom and that of Wellington ascended. The event was graphically described by Lord Byron in his "Childe Harold's Pilgrimage."

Lady Carew recently celebrated her 100th birthday, and is said to be one of the two survivors of the historic ball. She is still well preserved for a woman of her age and her mind is still unclouded. She was a Miss Cliffe, daughter of Major Anthony Cliffe, of New Ross, Ireland, when she danced in Brussels on that historic night. The following year 1816—she married Lord Carew, whom she has long survived.

The Population of the World.

The periodical estimates of the world's population, made by Professors Wagner and Supan, of Germany, are always widely accepted as on the whole the most careful computations relating to this difficult question. No one can tell, of course, how far the best estimates may vary from the truth, and it would not be surprising if the figures given by Wagner and Supan in 1891, who then put the world's population at 1,490,000,000, were fifty to a hundred millions out of the way. These careful statisticians, however, are always able to assign good reasons for their conclusions, and at least no other estimates are entitled to higher credence. In his latest text-book of geography, Dr. Supan estimates the present population of the earth at fifteen hundred millions, or an increase of twenty millions in the past seven years. There is no doubt that population is rapidly increasing almost everywhere on the inhabited globe, and particularly within the domain of civilization, where labor-saving machinery and improved methods of working the soil have vastly increased the means of subsistence.

JOURNALIST AND DIPLOMAT.

Brilliant Career of J. Russell Young, Who Died Recently.

By the death of J. Russell Young, librarian in Congress, at his home in Washington, the nation lost a most capable and devoted servant, and journalism one of its most distinguished and successful men. Mr. Young was appointed librarian of Congress in

J. RUSSELL YOUNG.

July, 1897, and since his appointment worked almost day and night in his enthusiasm to bring the library up to his standard of perfection.

His career is a varied and highly interesting one. Mr. Young was born a little more than fifty-nine years ago in Chester County, Pennsylvania, and, after having with much difficulty and great effort and sacrifice, obtained a high school education, he began active life as a copy holder in the office of the Philadelphia Press, and soon graduated to the news editor's desk. At the outbreak of the civil war he was sent to the front as the war correspondent of the Press. He was successful, and at the close of the war became chief editor of the Press, a position which he resigned, going to London and Paris as the New York Herald's foreign correspondent. He gained national fame by his letters to the Herald while traveling around the world with Grant. Returning to America in 1879, he did editorial work for three years on the Herald, and in 1882 was appointed minister to China by President Arthur. He has left an exceedingly well written manuscript of the life of Grant.

IN HONOR OF RUSSIAN HEROES.

Monument Erected to Soldiers Who Fell Fighting the Turks.

A monument over the grave of the Russian soldiers who fell in the war against Turkey was unveiled near Constantinople the other day by the Grand Duke Nicholas of Russia.

The monument stands in a square of about six acres, surrounded by a crenelated wall, with a tower at each corner. It is built of gray rough-dressed granite, with embellishments of white French stone. Over the main entrance is a painting of Christ, and on the other side is a picture of Vladimir, and on the other one of Alexander Newsky. The base of the building is a charnel house, in which the bones of the soldiers have been deposited. Above is the chapel, which is surmounted by a campanile and over that is a spire. The work of building the monument was begun in 1883, under the supervision of Col. Peshkoff, who designed the monument.

Why Jenner Wore a Guinea.

Sir William Jenner, the Queen's physician, wore at his watch chain a guinea piece which bore a pleasant little history. One day he found among his patients in his consulting room a humble carpenter. On remarking to the man that his disease had, through neglect of treatment, made great progress, he received the following reply:

"I have been waiting to see you for three years, sir." "Why, my man?" queried the physician. "Couldn't you afford to come sooner?" "Oh, yes," answered the carpenter; "but I could not get a gold guinea piece anywhere; and I heard you'd take nothing else."

Sir William wears that guinea on his chain, but though he completely cured the patient within eight months, he never took another fee from the poor fellow who had tried so hard to find that guinea, and had waited so patiently to consult him.

Killed in a Wreck at Lafayette—Little Girl Takes Morphine and Dies—Ill Health Causes a Suicide—Asphyxiated by Natural Gas.

A train on the Lake Erie and Western Railroad dashed into the rear end of a Big Four line freight train on a bridge at Lafayette. The caboose of the latter train was telescoped and set on fire by the overturned stove. B. F. Seigfried, cattleman of Atlantic, Iowa, was badly scalded by escaping steam and, with his clothes on fire, jumped from the car and fell on the ice in the river far below. He was later found dead. Thomas Gegan, cattle shipper of Chicago, in employ of Nelson Morris, was terribly burned.

Police Officer Kills Himself.

Captain James Pierce of the Terre Haute police force committed suicide by shooting himself in the head at the Park Hotel, Pensacola, Fla. He left home ten days before in the hope of obtaining relief from chronic stomach trouble which had caused him much physical misery for more than a year. At the time of leaving, it is now recalled, he was in a despondent condition and wept when he bade farewell to his friends.

Child Commits Suicide.

Ella Le Grande, 13 years old, an orphan who made her home with R. J. Stone and wife at Velpen, committed suicide by swallowing a quantity of morphine. He let the lifeless body fall to the floor and placed the pistol against his own head and pulled the trigger. The ball inflicted a flesh wound and glanced off, doing little damage. Keplinger escaped, but was captured at the home of John Mattox, about two miles from the scene of the shooting.

CAUSE OF MANY WRECKS.

Quarts Sand of Lake Superior Treacherous to Compasses of Mariners.

How a ship's compass could lead her master astray has been one of the mysteries of Lake Superior for years, but it is probably explained now by one of the vesselmen in the only way that seems consistent. One of his own boats suffered at a time when he knew his compasses were right. His ship was heading for Duluth, and for safety was two points south of her course, which should have taken her to the entry at Superior, seven miles south from the harbor entrance to Duluth. Without warning the vessel grated on a beach and stopped. An investigation showed her to be on a sandbank at the mouth of Knife River, twenty miles east, from Duluth. She was heading directly up the river, almost due north, but the compass still held two points south of the course for Duluth. The boat had, by the charts, turned almost a right angle. Within 125 feet of either side rock reefs ran out into the lake, on which she would have cut herself to pieces. To the southerly side, where a trifling less deviation would have taken the vessel, lay an island of rock that would have driven her bow back to her engines and bunched her up into a ball. As it was a tug pulled her off and a survey showed not a dollar of damage. Indeed, nothing is publicly known of the fortunate accident till this writing. Many such a casualty has occurred from time to time and the river on which this boat brought up has been the scene of two or three groundings every season for years. Some of them have resulted luckily, others have been total losses. The only explanation for these groundings and deviations is that a great bed of magnetic iron sand lies in the bed of the stream, covered by the washings of quarts sand from the rocks of the lake. The same explanation probably accounts for disasters at other points on the north shore. Indeed, in a gathering of vessel captains in an agent's office in Duluth, they discussed the remarkable aberrations of compasses.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Deepest Lake in the World.

The deepest lake in the world, so far as known, is Lake Baikal, in Siberia. While 9,000 square miles in area, or nearly as large as Lake Erie, it is 4,000 feet to 4,500 feet deep, so that it contains nearly as much water as Lake Superior. Its surface is 1,350 feet above sea level, and its bottom nearly 2,900 feet below it.

ARRESTED FOR SPENDING MONEY.

The Hoarded Coin of an Old Negro Lands Him in Jail as a Counterfeiter.

It seems hard for a man to hoard up his money for nearly half a century and then when the time comes for spending it to be arrested on a criminal charge in connection therewith. That is exactly what has happened in the case of an old negro man in Georgia, according to his story in the Sun. Recently the people of Marion county, Georgia, noticed th appearance in the community of some bright, shining silver half dollars. The coins looked suspiciously new, and the fact that they bore dates of the earlier years of the century added to the mystery concerning them. Nobody could say that the coins were not genuine products of the United States Mint, and yet the circumstances were such that the banks refused to take them. Investigation showed that the man responsible for the circulation of this glittering coin was one Marion Minter, an old negro about eighty years old, who lived in the country, and who was ignorant and apparently unsophisticated. Minter admitted readily that he had circulated the money which was causing all the trouble, but declared that it was good. The circumstances were such, however, that he was arrested by a deputy marshal of the United States Revenue Service and was taken to Columbus, Ga., on the charge of having in his possession and passing counterfeit money. At the preliminary investigation of his case before United States Commissioner Williams, Minter was bound over to the regular term of the Federal Court. Meantime, the coins have been sent to Washington where they will be tested thoroughly.

Minter was born in Texas, where he spent the first eighteen years of his life. When a young boy his father gave him some money. He was ambitious, and determined to make more money to save up for old age. He picked cotton and did odd jobs and altogether accumulated the sum of $220—a small-sized fortune for the average darky. Every time his new savings amounted to as much as fifty cents he would swap off the change for a bright half dollar. He took only coin that had never been much in use, and thus his accumulation became a curiosity. When he came to this part of the country he brought his money with him, strapped around his waist in a girdle. He went to Marion county where he spent several years at different places. He buried his money at each place of residence, digging up his treasure every time he made a move. He has been in his last home for several years.

The first time Minter buried his treasure in an earthen jar. The next time he kept it in a paint keg, and on the last occasion he hid it away in a fruit jar. The money was kept for old age and poverty. This year the times were hard and old man Minter decided that his treasure would have to be used at last. He dug up the money, which, off and on, had been buried for thirty years, and began spending it, only to be arrested on a charge of passing counterfeit money.

The money is dated from 1801 to 1834. In fineness, weight, style and technical details, the half dollars seemed to be all right. If they are genuine there is a premium on them. An expert in the Secret Service, Mr. E. P. McAdams, of Atlanta, who made a careful examination of the coin, could not say that they were not genuine. It was the theory of the officers that the old negro, who is ignorant, who cannot read, and who can only tell a coin by its size, was made the dupe of a gang of counterfeiters, who hoped in that way to palm off their spurious money on the community.

Meantime, Minter is in jail. He is poor and cannot give the required bond. The Federal authorities hardly felt warranted in turning him loose until the question of the genuineness of the coin is settled officially by the Treasury Department. Minter has 340 half dollars left, and he is awaiting the decision of the experts with great anxiety.

Carried Off by an Eagle.

"Did you ever see an eagle carry off a baby to the skies?" said a Broome County drummer, who is in New York for the sights. "There's a farmer named Vandewater living near Cascade Valley, in the County I come from. Last summer he caught a big eagle in a trap. The bird grew tame and became a household pet. A few mornings ago Mrs. Vandewater went to a neighbor's to borrow some salt, leaving her small children with the eagle. When she returned the eagle was sitting on a shed with the baby in its talons.

"A hunter came along with a gun. Before he could shoot, the eagle flew away with the baby. The child was heavy, and it was impossible for the bird to rise for more than twenty feet above the ground. It appeared an easy mark, but the man was afraid to shoot on account of the child.

"After chasing the eagle and its prey for a quarter of a mile, the hunter shot at the bird and broke one of its wings. The eagle beat the air furiously with its remaining wing for a full minute and then began to fall.

"Mrs. Vandewater rushed for her crying child, and soon had it in her arms. The eagle continued to fight, but it was soon killed with the butt of the rifle. It measured seven feet from tip to tip. The child was not hurt much, but when it grows up it can prove that I'm a truthful man occasionally, even if I am a drummer.—New York Press.

Indian Discovered a Silver Mine.

The famous silver mines of Zacatecas, Mexico, from which half a billion dollars have been taken in the last 250 years, were discovered by an Indian who was in pursuit of an antelope. He was climbing the steep slope of a hill, and seized a bush to help himself up. The plant gave way and he started to fall backward, but by a desperate effort saved himself, and falling forward, cut his nose against a projecting ledge. Stopping to stanch the flow of blood, he looked at the stone which had done the damage and to his astonishment perceived it was almost pure silver. The story may be apocryphal, but a tale which is told at Guaymas, Mexico, is tolerably well authenticated. Accoroding to this narrative the low-grade but very prosperous mines of the Antilles was found by a rabbit. An Indian was hunting rabbits and his dog chased one to a hole in a rocky hillside. The Indian hesitated whether to dig out the rabbit or go in pursuit of another. Determining finally that one rabbit in a hole was worth half a dozen on a rocky hillside, he got a spade and went to work. Before he had turned over half a dozen spadefuls of earth he had forgotten all about the rabbit, for he had made the discovery that he was handling almost solid silver. The rabbit escaped; at least it is supposed that it did, for it enters no more into the story, but its memory is preserved in the name of the mine, which being translated into English signifies the Rabbit's den. It would have been well for the Indian if he had escaped when the rabbit did, for, according to the story, the poor fellow was murdered by his Spanish employer, who desired to keep the secret of the mine.—New York Sun.

Relic Mines of Wisconsin.

Quite a number of the boys of Appleton, Wis. are putting in their spare time gathering Indian relics. There is good money in them and also lots of hard work. The relics most sought for are copper spears and arrows, pottery, axes, and almost anything that has become very scarce. Nearly everything that is copper commmands a high price, all the way from $5 to $50. The firms for which the collections are bought up are New York companies, which furnish the boys a limited amount of funds with which to establish themselves. In order to get possession of the relics the boys have to make long trips in the country and make inquiries at the different farmhouses. It is not a difficult matter to find the relics, but it is almost impossible to buy them. The moment the owner has a suspicion they are worth anything, that moment he refuses to part with them under any consideration. The boys frequently locate a dozen or more relics a day, but often return empty-handed. Some very fine specimens are in possession of farmers in different parts of the county, who have ploughed them up in yars gone by. Some of them were beat out of them during the World's Fair by swindlers who loaned them for the exhibition, leaving as security a sum of money less than a fourth of their value. They have never shown up since, and it looks as if they never will.—Appleton (Wis.) Crescent.

The Invention of the Telephone.

In a recent lecture Professor Alexander Graham Bell is reported to have explained how he came to invent the telephone as follows:

"My father invented a symbol by which deaf mutes could converse, and finally I invented an apparatus by which the vibrations of speech could be seen and it turned out to be a telephone. It occurred to me to make a machine that would enable one to hear vibrations. I went to an artist and he advised me to take the human ear as my model. He supplied me with a dead man's ear, and with this ear I experimented and upon applying the apparatus I found that the dead man's ear wrote down the vibrations.

"I arrived at the conclusion that if I could make iron vibrate on a dead man's ear, I could make an instrument more delicate that would cause those vibrations to be heard and understood. I thought if I placed a delicate piece of steel over an electric magnet I could get a vibration, and thus the telephone was completed.

"The telephone arose from my attempts to teach the deaf to speak. It arose from my knowledge, not of electricity, but as a teacher of the deaf. Had I been an electrician I would not have attempted it."

Irish Race of Mackerel.

The paramount conclusion of the inquiry of Mrs. Garstrang into the life history of the mackerel is thus expressed: "The mackerel which frequent British water are not exactly alike in all localities, but possess certain average peculiarities which distinguish one local race from another. These peculiarities are greatest between the races of localities which are geographically remote, and least between those which occupy areas that are geographically contiguous. Between the mackerel of the North Sea and English Channel there are no differences at all; but the Irish race is distinctly divisible into two stocks, one of which is restricted to the west coast, the other to the south.

"A considerable amount of mixture takes place between the southern Irish stock and the fish which frequent the mouth of the English Channel. The western Irish stock represents more closely than any other race the primitive type of mackerel, from which all, whether British or American, have been derived." It is pointed out that the establishment of geographical or local races of the mackerel involves the rejection of the theory of long migrations.—Nature.

The Reluctant Witness.

Counsel—"I insist on an answer to my question. You have not told me all the conversation. I want to know everything that passed between you and Mr. Jones on the occasion to which you refer."

Reluctant witness—"I've told you everything of any consequence."

"You have told me that you said to him: 'Jones, this case will get into court some day.' Now, I want to know what he said in reply."

"Well, he said: 'Brown, there isn't anything in this business that I'm ashamed of, and if any snoopin', little yee-hawin', four-by-six, gimlet-eyed lawyer, with half a pound of brains and sixteen pounds of jaw, ever wants to know what I've been talking to you about, you can tell him the whole story.'"—New York Herald.

She Ought to Know.

A charming instance of logical topsy turvydom was related by R. A. Barnett in his lecture at the College of Preceptors' winter meeting. A friend of his was once remonstrating with a laborer's wife for attempting to feed an eight months' old baby with some form of herring. "Do you think I don't know how to bring up children?" replied the indignant mother; "why, I've buried ten."—London Chronicle.

What George Wanted.

"Miss Quillcut," said the young man earnestly. "I have been calling on you steadily for the last three months, and it is perhaps fitting that now I should approach you on a subject that has been engrossing my attention for some time. I may say," he continued, as the fair young creature drew closer to him, prepared to nestle in the strong arms that were all his, "I may say that I believe the time has come for me to speak. Do you remember, Miss Clara, one evening two months ago, as we were sitting side by side, the door was suddenly thrown open and your elder brother entered and whispered something in my ear?"

"I do," she replied, "but, George, dear, what has that to do with the subject in hand?"

"Only this," he hissed through his set teeth, "that I want to get back that dress shirt he borrowed."—Tit-Bits.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Chicago Furniture House Has Furnished Nearly a Million Homes.

To be the largest furniture house in the world is a distinction which the John M. Smyth Company, 150 to 166 West Madison street, Chicago, enjoys. An idea of the magnitude of the establishment may be gained from the fact that the building contains seven and one-half acres of floor space and that during its third of a century of business it has furnished nearly three-quarters of a million homes, or more than the entire population of some States. One of the business principles of the firm is if goods are not as represented they may be returned and the money will be refunded. The firm issues a large, beautifully illustrated catalogue of household goods which are retailed at wholesale prices. It will be sent free on application.

Chinese Impersonator Is Surprised.

Fon Chang Mai, the great Chinese female impersonator, now in New York, went behind the scenes and into the greenroom during a visit to the Casino theater, and with all the strange things he saw he was most surprised to learn that the chorus girls were really women and not female impersonators like himself, as he had imagined.

A CONGRESSMAN

Cured of Catarrh of Long Standing.

Ex-Congressman A. T. Goodwyn.

Ex-Congressman A. T. Goodwyn, from Alabama, writes the following letter:

The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio:

Gentlemen—I have now used two bottles of Pe-ru-na, and am a well man to-day. I could feel the good effects of your medicine before I had used it a week, after suffering with catarrh for over a year. Respectfully,

A. T. GOODWYN.

Catarrh in its various forms is rapidly becoming a national curse. An undoubted remedy has been discovered by Dr. Hartman. This remedy has been thoroughly tested during the past forty years. Prominent men have come to know of its virtues and are making public utterances on the subject. To save the country we must save the people. To save the people we must protect them from disease. The disease that is at once the most prevalent and stubborn of cure is catarrh. Public men of all parties recognize in Pe-ru-na a national catarrh remedy of unequaled merit. Send to Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio, for a free book on catarrh.

Tight-Laced New Guinea Swells.

In New Guinea tight lacing is in vogue among the fashionable young men, who wear a belt about eight inches wide made of stiff bark. In some cases this is so tight that the upper part of the abdomen hangs over in a heavy fold. Among the same people a girl announces her betrothal by appearing shining with an ointment of red ochre and oil, which covers her head, shoulders and bosom.

Don't Have to Wait.

We don't have to wait for cold, soreness and stiffness will come on from excessive exercise, but it will go immediately after using St. Jacobs Oil to soften and strengthen the strained muscles.

Couldn't Afford It.

"Have you ever prosecuted that dishonest clerk you had?" asked the great lawyer's friend.

"No," replied the great lawyer. "I talked it over with myself once, and found that my fees would be larger than I would care to pay to have the work done. It wouldn't look right to employ any one else, and I can't afford to employ myself."—Chicago Evening Post.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used, except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

Sold by Druggists, price 75c per bottle.

Thick Armor on Warships.

The thickness of armor on modern warships is truly astonishing. The side armor of a first-class battleship usually varies from 16½ inches thick at the top of the belt to 9½ inches at the bottom. The gun turrets are often protected by armor from 15 to 17 inches thick.

Salzer warrants this! Potatoes $1.20 a Bbl.

The largest sundial in the universe is Hayou Horoo, a large promontory extending 3,000 feet above the Aegean Sea. In the course of each day the sun throws the shadow of this mountain on one after another of a circle of islands, which act as hour marks as surely as the figures on an ordinary dial.

W. F. McCreary, Government Immigration Commissioner, Winnipeg:

Dear Sir—I like the country very much so far. Have seen a great number of farmers from the States, and every one seen so far says they have done well and like it here far better than where they came from, and all claim it to be the best country for a poor man that they were ever in, and with good crops this season I predict a great rush. There are some nice claims to be had yet, but will not last long.

I do not find it any colder than in Iowa and am feeling much better than when I left there March 1. I think this a great country for those who are suffering with throat and lung troubles. I have seen men that had as high as 51½ bushels wheat per acre and near 100 bushels oats, but they weigh from 45 to 51 pounds per bushel, but the general run is 25 to 50 wheat, 50 to 75 oats, and stock looking fine; some cattle running out were nearly in market flesh.

I expect to return to the States late this fall for stock, etc. Will write you when I want to go. Thanking you all for past favors, I remain, most respectfully yours, (Signed) DR. D. E. STREVELL.

COMFORTING WORDS TO WOMEN.

The Surgical Chair and its Tortures May be Avoided by Women Who Heed Mrs. Pinkham's Advice.

Woman's modesty is natural; it is charming.

To many women a full statement of their troubles to a male physician is almost impossible. The whole truth may be told to Mrs. Pinkham because she is a woman, and her advice is freely offered to all women sufferers.

Mrs. O. E. Ladd, of 19th and N Sts., Galveston, Texas, whose letter is printed below, was completely discouraged when she first wrote to Mrs. Pinkham. Here is what she says:

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—I wrote to you some time ago, telling you of my ills, but now I write to thank you for the good your remedies have done me. I have used two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, three packages of Sanative Wash, and one box of Liver Pills, and to-day I call myself a well woman. I suffered with backache, constant headache, whites, sick stomach, no appetite, could not sleep, and was very nervous. At time of menstruation was in terrible pain. Your medicine is worth its weight in gold. I never can say enough in praise of it. I have recommended it to many friends. If only all suffering women would try it, there would be more happy homes and healthy women. I thank you for the change your medicine has made in me.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Mrs. Pinkham's advice, have saved thousands of women from hospital operations.

The lives of women are hard; whether at home with a ceaseless round of domestic duties or working at some regular employment, their daily tasks make constant war on health. If all women understood themselves fully and knew how exactly and soothingly Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound acts on the female organs, there would be less suffering.

The Legislature.

The following shows some of the work for the past few days:

Caraway's bill to disfranchise from ten to 20 years any man who sells his vote or refrains from voting for money, failed to pass for want of constitutional majority. There were 49 ayes and 39 nays.

A resolution by Eichhorn, seconded by Brown, was adopted. It requires the doorkeeper and the clerk to furnish a complete list of the employes of the house.

King's bill to allow the Wabash county commissioners to condemn land lying next to a memorial hall passed by a vote of 60 to 24. Much opposition arose. The majority of the committee reported against the bill, some days ago, but King won most of the opponents over. Baker, of Whitley, said he didn't want to vote for a bill that allows county commissioners to take a man's land away from him.

A bill to prevent taking a case of under $50 from a justice court to a circuit court was defeated. One member voted for the bill because the constituents sent him word he would lose his job if he did not.

A bill has been introduced to legalize the practice of hiring a stenographer in court, which it seems has not heretofore been legal.

Having about concluded to give the widow of Gov. Morton a pension, now they are talking for Mrs. Ira J. Chase. Next it will be Mrs. Hovey, then Mrs. Gray, and so on. Fortunately Mrs. Mathews is rich.

A bill was advanced to engrossment in the house providing for a tax on gifts and inheritances.

The Roby race track troubles are over. The grounds have been sold to a big syndicate to erect an immense bicycle factory

A bill providing that county commissioners shall furnish blank forms for persons having claims against a county, and that the auditor shall receive no pay for swearing any persons to such claim was advanced to engrossment.

A new bill requires the prosecuting attorney to defend divorce cases where no attorney appears for the defendant, and allows him a fee of $15 for each appearance.

A Narrow Escape.

Thankful words written by Mrs. Ada E. Hart, of Groton, S. D. "Was taken with a bad cold which settled on my lungs; cough set in and finally terminated in Consumption. Four doctors gave me up, saying I could live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Savior, determined if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent ones above. My husband was advised to get Dr King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs, and Colds. I gave it a trial, took in all eight bottles. It has cured me, and I thank God, I am saved and now a well and healthy woman." Trial bottles free at H. B. McCord's Drug Store. Regular size 50 and $1.00. Guaranteed or price refunded.

The Treatment of "LaGrippe" or Epidemic Influenza

By J. A. HOFHEIMER, M. D.

Late Attending Surgeon Harlem Hospital Dispensary, Member New York County Medical Association, Member Harlem Medical Associaton, New York City.

"La Grippe" is an infectious disease whose specific germ is a bacillus possessing the power of segmentation or subdivision, thus multiplying with great rapidity when a favorable medium is attacked. It is taken into the body through the nose and mouth. Its action causes inflammation of the air passages (nose, throat, and lungs), similar to acute catarrhal conditions.

But further it causes constitutional disturbances which manifest themselves by neuralgias, muscular pains (myalgias), fever and chills, and congestion of various internal organs; leaving the patient debilitated, with weak heart, neurasthenia and frequently with diseased lungs and kidneys. These latter conditions are often aggravated by remedies injudiciously taken during the course of the disease, and fatal terminations are sometimes traceable to the use of drugs which are calculated to further depress the already depleted system.

Bearing in mind the leading symptoms and tendency of this disease, it is wise to avoid any drug which will weaken the heart's action or depress the patient's vitality in any way. Most drugs given to relieve pain are depressing in their after effects. Most drugs used to weaken fever are weakening to the heart's action. Many people take on themselves the risk of dosing with phenacetine, antipyrin, antifibrin, etc. These drugs should only be used under competent medical advice, for cases of dangerous syncope have followed upon the careless partaking of these remedies.

Among the drugs practically harmless and at the same time efficacious can be mentioned quinine. This drug in small doses strengthens the heart's action and reduces the fever, besides acting as an internal antiseptic. As quinine in small doses alone will not relieve the pains or headache, nor entirely reduce the fever. I have been in the habit of combining with it Phenalgin as follows:

Quinine three (3) grains in capsules, Phenalgin five or ten (5 or 10) grains in powders at one dose, to be taken every three hours. This formula has proven very successful in aborting what might have been a severe attack of "La Grippe," and rapidly curing milder cases.

In common with many of the profession, it had been my habit prior to my acquaintance with the stimulant non depressant character of Phenalgin, to prescribe alcoholic stimulants when giving the other coaltar products, to overcome their depressing effects. But the free use of alcohol is always followed by great depression and reaction. The contrary is true of the coal tar product Phenalgin. The action of this drug is soothing and its anodyne effect is usually followed by refreshing sleep.

Convalescence from "La Grippe" is hastened by care ul attention to nutriment and aided by judicious tonics of the chalybeate variety.

An efficacious method of local treatment of "La Grippe" and at the same time often a most valuable preventive is to spray the nose and throat several times daily with one of the many antiseptic solutions in the market, of which the principal ingredients are boric acid, eucalyptol and other essential oils.

It should be remembered that this disease attacks with greatest severity those whose vital forces are made weaker by indiscretions and excessive nerve strain. Therefore the rules of health should be carefull observed, especially those referable to sleep and proper diet.

In giving these hints for treatment, it is not desired to assume "La Grippe" is a disease easily overcome without close personal attention by the physician, but there are very many cases which otherwise would become severe and serious, that could be checked by promptly following the course herein outlined.

A French Cuban.

The Chicago Record gives us a new idea as follows:

Mr. Robert Skinner, the United States consul at Marseilles, sends me a copy of Le Siecle, a French newspaper, which contains an extract from a letter written by a Frenchman in Cuba concerning the new American government there. It reads: "When you receive this letter we shall be under the 'stars and stripes,' and I think that 'this hat' has come to stay, as our new allies and protectors, the Americans say. I think that it will all turn out as in Tunis for France, and as in Egypt for England. In any case I am no longer a proud Castillian, because I shall follow the destinies of my country these promise to be happy. We are going to enjoy liberty 'a la Americaine.' It has already commenced. Our catholic church is declared by Mr. McKinley to be independent of the state. It now looks up to the people only, who has named a Frenchman as apostolic delegate—Mgr. Deschapelles bishop of New Orleans. Americans give us a customs tariff 62 per cent lower than the one under which we operated before the war, and in spite of it the custom house at Santiago has produced 25 percent more than the amount received during any corresponding period which goes to show that the days of stealing are over. The Americans have abolished the passports for the interior. This was an exhorbitant tax. My own passport (cedula personal) cost me 100 piastres, that is to say 500 Francs, per year ($96 50). They have also done away with stamped paper, another exhorbitant tax upon the smallest transactions. Taxes upon sales of real estate have likewise been abolished, and property increases and transactions are easy, while the Spanish regime crushed us by impositions. If this continues, and above all if we succeed in introducing our sugars free into the United States, Cuba will become richer than the Klondike.

Preparing to Build Another Maine.

The construction of the ways in which the new battle-ship Maine will be built has begun at the Cramps' shipyard. The timbers which will be used in the foundation were originally cut in the live oak forests of Delaware fifty years ago and were shipped to Boston to be used in the construction of wooden vessels.

Spain's Greatest Need.

Mr. R. P. Olivia, of Barcelona, Spain, spends his winters at Aiken, S. C. Weak nerves had caused severe pains in the back of his head. On using Electric Bitters, America's greatest Blood and Nerve remedy, all pains soon left him He says this grand medicine is what his country needs. All America knows that it cures liver and kidney trouble, purifies the blood, tones up the stomach, strengthens the nerves, puts vim, vigor and new life into every muscle, nerve and organ of the body. If weak, tired or ailing you need it. Every bottle guaranteed, only 50 cents. Sold by H. B. McCord the Druggist.

An Elegant Residence

Probably one of the finest residences in Auburn will be erected the coming season. It will be that of trustee A. W. Madden at his farm home just east of Cedar Creek on the north side of 7th street. The present residence will be remored to give place for the new one which will be elegent and convenient in all its appointments. The walls will be of blue limestone cut in proper form and size by Mr. Madden himself at his marble works here and this feature will be one entirely new in northern Indiana. The building will be two stories with seven rooms in the ground plan. The design for the building was drawn by J. M E. Riedel one of the skilled architects of Fort Wayne, who provided not only for the external effect, and interior convenience but for all the modern accessories of comfort and luxury. We congratulate Mr. Madden on this step. He has a fine site, and such a building will fittingly crown it.

They Just Laughed.

A volunteer, who was a great man in his own eyes, was by some influence appointed captain. He could hardly speak of anything but his new dignity. Meeting a friend one day, he accosted him thus: "Well, Jim, I suppose you know I have been appointed captain?" "Yes," said Jim, "I heard so." "Well, what do your folks say about it?" asked the captain. "They don't say nothin'," replied truthful James; "they just laugh."

That Throbbing Headache

Would quickly leave you, if you used Dr. King's New Life Pills. Thousands of sufferers have proved their matchless merit for Sick and Nervous Headaches. They make pure blood and strong nerves and build up your health. Easy to take Try them. Only 25 cents. Money back if not cured. Sold by H. B. McCord the druggist.

Patriarch of the Senate.

Ten United States senators have passed the three-score-and-ten mark, and Senator Pettus of Alabama, who is 78, is the patriarch of that body, now that Senator Morrill is dead. Two Democratic senators are evidently uncertain as to their ages and decline to state when they were born. The late Senator Harris of Tennessee was sensitive about his age, and always had it omitted from the congressional directory.

—With the mercury 24 below, we think of the utterly naked children in Cuba and the Phillippines and our own soldiers, suffering with heat though wearing only suits of light duck cloth, and then we realize what a great country Uncle Sam is caring for just now.

—The commissioners have been at work two or three days this week, chiefly hearing reports of trustees. Talking with Mr. Shultz, we find he is improving and though still bothered by the results of the stroke of paralysis, he is in a fair way to recover his health.

—One trustee, Mr. Eddy of Troy, faced the cold wind of yesterday, to come nearly twenty miles to settle with the commissioners. We venture to say, that by the time he got home along in the night, he had doubts as to the wisdom of the law providing for these monthly settlements.

—Lackey's thermometer has established a rule of its own. For several days it has been showing signs of eccentricity by keeping up above zero when others insisted it was below. This morning at 8 o'clock it showed 6 above, while the rest showed 22 below. Now everbody wants to buy that thermometer, so as to have weather back above zero.

—An old-time friend of the editor called this morning, C. V. Inks, of Ligonier, the veteran marble dealer. We are very sorry we were not in the office. He was going through town and took the Lake Shore early train north We think this weather reminded him of the cold New Years of our early acquaintance. We hope, however, he will come again and stay longer.

The man, Custer from Butler, now in jail, while charged with stealing a horse, denies it. He took one of Liveryman Decker's horses some time ago, and sold it, Decker afterwards got the horse back, but Custer claims it was his horse, and he had a right to sell.

One of the men arrested at the school house in Richland was set free yesterday. He is the one who was claimed by the boy, as his father.

The boy was held a day or two longer, to see what should be done with him. He received several letters from his mother, and sisters at Atlanta, Ga., yesterday asking him to come home. But he appears to be a tough and don't seem to care.

Nut butter is the product of peanuts, and is used as a substitute for cream. It can be manufactured and sold for 15 cents a pound, which is enough to make several quarts of cream.

—Griggsby's Rough Riders that hurried to the front when the war began, but was later mustered out, is likely to be called into service again and sent to Manila. If they can still yell the way they could when we saw them go through Lafayette last summer, they will make the Filippinos think an earthquake has come.

—We publish a long article on the prevailing disease, grip, in today's COURIER, because we believe it is of value. It is not a paid advertisement nor a dead beat notice, but is sent out by a reliable medical institute at their own expense, and from which they cannot derive a cent. The medicines named as valuable in this disease are such as can be had at any drugstore So it looks as if this is a real effort to do good. It will do no harm to read it carefully, and if it proves valuable it should be carefully preserved.

—The forenoon fast train going west yesterday was seven hours late We suppose it had to wait at Detroit for the train from Canada, which has to be ferried across. That train may have been delayed by heavy snows in Canada, and then by a further delay in working the big ferry boat that has to bring the train across the Detroit river in the heavy ice, which in a cold time like this forms part way across the river and must be broken in order to cross. When the new bridge is put up across the river this part of the delay will be avoided.

EASYGOING PEOPLE

Those who disregard early indications of disease.

The progress of catarrh is frequently gradual. Chronic catarrh secures possession without the knowledge of its victim.

It has become so common to say, "Everybody has a little catarrh" that many easy going people pay slight attention to it. Yet no class of disease is so difficult to shake off.

Many people well advanced in years find themselves in the toils of catarrh. Mr. and Mrs. Collum, of Giddings, Tex., found help in Pe-ru-na. Mr. Collum's letter follows:

Pe-ru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, O.

DEAR SIRS:—"I think your Pe-ru-na is the best medicine I ever tried for catarrh. I have tried all the catarrh medicines that I could hear of and none of them did any good until I tried yours. I and my wife have both used the Pe-ru-na and Man-a-lin, and we are about well. I am 70 years old and my wife is 66. When we commenced to take your medicines we were not able to see after our work, but now she can tend to her work and I see after my farm. You can use this publicly if you want to."—A. P. Collum, Giddings, Tex.

HIS OWN COFFIN MADE.

Dr. James Ford Dies at Wabash, Ind.—Stays Abed Two Months, Although Not Sick

[Anderson Herald.]

Two months ago Dr. James Ford, the oldest resident of Wabash, Ind., and for many years a successful medical practitioner, took to bed under conviction that he must die.

He was free from all disease, but declined to leave his bed when urged by relatives. He gradually became weaker, and the other day died of inanition.

Two years ago he went to a furniture factory announced he wanted his coffin made. He was in fine health and his remark was received in jest. He insisted, however, that he desired to be buried in a casket which suited him He was measured, and gave minute directions to the men assigned to the work. He selected some good oak, asked to be notified when the coffin was completed, and departed.

He subsequently complimented the work, paid the bill, and had the coffin placed in a corner of the wareroom to await the summons which came the other day and his body now reposes therein.

A Dry Haul.

It was a good joke, and no doubt Mike laughs at it himself. Clerk Long has been bothered all through this cold weather to get water from his cistern. Even when the pump was not frozen, it would pull up only a little water, then breathe hard a sigh or two, and give up. Mike became certain that it was frozen down below, or up above, or to one side or somewhere, and determined to try heroic treatment. So, he warmed up a barrel or so more or less of well water, got it hot and went to pouring down that pump. The pouring down was a success, but the pumping up remained a dismal failure. But he kept it up. Persistence is one of Mike's strong points. More hot water was sent down, and more strokes of the pump followed, ending each time with the sepulchral breathing and gurgling. Then Mike got in earnest and ripped the cover off the cistern and looked down in to see what evil genius was down there fooling with that pump. He gave one long, earnest, look, then gathered up his tools and went sadly away. The cistern was dry.

Locates in Auburn

Attorney C. E. Baxter, brother of Dr. Baxter, has been here for several weeks to decide on locating either at Indianapolis or Auburn. He has decided to remain here, and has located in the north room of Geo. Lanning's office, and will begin the practice of law at once. He will give especial attention to the practice of criminal law. Mr. Baxter comes here with good reputation as an attorney, having been prosecutor of his district, the Third, composed of Harrison and Crawford counties for two years and had several years of general practice. He has already made a good impression on our people and we predict he will get his share of the work to do His office will be in a prominent place, easy of access, being over Lackey's store, and he has already a large acquaintance over the county, for the short time he has been here.

Are You Constipated?

You may not know it or at least fail to realize it but Constipation is the greatest enemy to mankind. This condition unless corrected will bring on Indigestion and Dyspepsia. This condition places the system in such shape that if you are exposed to any one of the different kind of fevers you are sure to be affected thereby. In this condition a large amount of poisonous matter is retained in the system and you are therefore not in a condition to throw off disease. A cold cannot be eradicated when the system is clogged. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin gives perfect relief for this trouble. Try a 10c bottle just once; you will be convinced. Also in 50c and $1.00 sizes of Davenport.

It is Doubtful.

The two cent fare bill is still sticking in the legislature, as members are in doubt both as to the justice or the propriety of this kind of legislation. It is always a donbt, whether it is wise to attempt to regulate business matters, especially as to price by law. No one would favor regulating the price of wheat or lumber, or coal, by a law. And as far as we have known, no law of tais kind has produced good results.

Germany's Crown Prince.

The crown prince of the German empire, Friedrich Wilhelm, is sixteen years old. He is much attached to his fifteen-year-old brother, Eitel Friedrich. He is an expert on the bicycle and rowing, and his health is much better than it was in his childhood. The younger brother has always been robust, and he is the merrier of the two, always full of animal spirits and pranks, while the crown prince is serious.

Public Statement From A Public Man

Hon. W. H. Ohley, Ex-Secretary of State of West Virginia, writes an open letter.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Mar. 9, 1898.

To whom it may concern:

"I most heartily recommend Pe-ru-na as of great benefit in cases of catarrh. It is especially beneficial wherever the mucous membranes are affected. As a tonic it certainly has no superior."

W. H. OHLEY, Ex-Secretary of State.

Hon. W. H. OHLEY.

Pe-ru-na has cured thousands of obstinate cases of catarrh, and is perhaps the only efficient remedy in existence for catarrhal diseases; but there are countless multitudes of people who are still struggling with catarrh and need help. To such as these the unqualified recommendation of Pe-ru-na by Ex-Secretary Ohley is directed. Pe-ru-na is scientific and purely vegetable. All druggists sell it.

Woman Suffrage in South Australia Has Come to Stay.

J. A. Cockburn, agent general for South Australia, was recently in England. At a public meeting he was asked to give an account of the operation of woman suffrage in South Australia, as since 1894 women there have had full suffrage privileges. In reply he said: "As until a few weeks ago I was a member of a parliament elected by the votes of both men and women, I will give you my pennyweight of experience on the subject. Formerly the women of South Australia were, in common with criminals, lunatics and minors, debarred from the exercise of the franchise. Now they are placed on an absolute equality with their brothers, husbands and sons, and have exercised the franchise during the last four years with the approval of the entire community. They have voted at general elections for both houses of parliament, and have just taken an equal share in deciding one of the most important of political issues—the question of Australian federation. The fact that women are entitled to vote is now viewed with general satisfaction, and no one would advocate a return to the old system. The opposition—for opposition of some kind there always is to every reform—has completely disappeared. What is the result of the emancipation of women? The influence of women has, we have found, quietly pervaded the realms of politics. All the real forces of nature are gentle in their operation. The change that has taken place is a very great one—it is nothing less than doubling the power of franchise—yet this peaceful revolution has been effected without the slightest disturbance."

Our present-day athletic girl has pushed the slow, sauntering walk women affected twenty years ago quite into the wall. Notice how we step out briskly, with free, easy motion. The much more sensible shoes in vogue now have much to do with it, too.

THE ODDFELLOWS.

The Brothers of the Mystic Tie, Meet and Have a Fine Time.

The Oddfellows got "even" with the world and all it holds, last evening, at their big county meeting. They put in the early part of the evening at the the hall, training candidates to ride the goat, bestowing two degrees. After the banquet, those who were not to full to bend over the little goat, went back to the hall and gave three more degrees. In the space of time between this degree work came the banquet. The evening's program had evidently been patterned after Dewey's. First, "two hours of business; then two hours for breakfast; then two hours for business." The Dewey plan is becoming popular. It goes without saying, that the supper was an important item, for all the O. F's we have known, have had lively and reliable appetites. At supper, 99 sat down to the tables which were loaded with an abundance of good things prepared by the Rebekahs, all of whom are experts in getting up good meals. The supper filled a long-felt want of the brethren and were highly pleased with everything connected with it. And they think the Presbyterian basement rooms are just fine, for such purposes. The banquet was held at about 10 in the evening, and in spite of the hard work the O, F's had done, and their splendid appetites, there was an abundance of all good things left over.

There were good delegations from St. Joe, Butler, Waterloo, Garrett and Hudson, about 140 in all. The visitors were well pleased and so were the Rebekah ladies, and the people of Auburn, say, "Come again."

The Legislature.

There is a bill to prevent a coroner from holding an inquest until two affidavits have been filed requesting it. It passed the House, but failed in the senate. A substitute was afterwards taken up and may pass.

A bill to give the powers of a constable to farmers, so they might arrest hunters, has so far failed.

Once more the two Houses are going to investigate the debt the Vandalia road is believed to owe the school fund. This subject is liable to come up every term for some years. We presume, there was some money that should have been collected of this road right along, but it has been neglected and forgotten so long, it may never be collected.

A bill to do away with the three days of grace has failed. Also one to have the state buy up the toll road from the railway station to the Soldier's, Orphan's Home at Knightstown.

A bill to increase the pay of the steward in charge of the Soldiers' Home at Falayette from $600 to $900 may pass.

A queer bill is being prepared, and one which, doubtless would not apply to DeKalb county. And yet no one knows. It is to prevent county auditors from accepting interest on a school fund loan. It should be paid to the county treasurer. Sometimes auditors accept the money to accomodate friends and give a farmer a slip of paper as a receipt. Later the farmer is required to pay the interest again if the auditor forgets to fix it up with the treasurer, and forgets that he accepted the money.

The report of John Q. Thomas. James A. Mount and Oran Perry, the commission appointed by the last session to procure plans and estimates for a statue of Gen. Pleasant A. Hackleman, reported that a figure eight feet high could be procured for $4,000; ten feet high, $5.000; equestrian figure, 14 feet high, $18,000; equestrian figure, 18 feet high, 25,000.

When the county reform bill came up in the senate, Senator Nusbaum spoke and voted against it. Senator Hubbell of Elkhart voted for it, he said, not because he thought the bill wise, but because his party wished him o do it. To the people, this will look like a poor reason, if the law should prove a bad one.

THE FORESTRY BILL.

In order to encourage the saving of a portion of our timber wood lands, or to raise new supplies, the legislature is trying to pass the following law:

Any land owner of Indiana may select a portion of his holdings, as a permanent forest reservation, which shall be assessed for taxation at $1 an acre. Not more than one eighth the area of any farm and not less than one acre, may be so selected. If this selection is of original forest and contains 170 trees an acre, it may become immediately subject to the provisions of the act Or 170 forest trees may be planted per acre, and after three years, if properly cared for, they will become subject to the enactment. If there be 100 trees per acre, original forest, others may be planted to make the required number.

Pasturing in the reservations is prohibited, as the browsing by stock, eating of seeds and young plants by animals, and tramping, prevent the reproduction of the forests. When any trees are cut, others shall be planted, or young trees permitted to grow to take the place of such as are destroyed. Not more than one-fifth of the trees may be cut in any one year.

Almost all the native forest trees—but not fruit trees—are considered forests in the meaning of the act.

The Mill Starts.

The mill of the Hardwood Lumber Company started up this morning, and as they have a big lot of logs on hand, there will be lively business there for some time, and probably all the year round. Perry Muhn will be general foreman which is a guaranty that the work will go on all right. He was with the Nickey Company a long time when they had this mill. the band sawmill, and finally went with them to Princeton. But since the Greenler factory started up, he has been employed by them, being foreman. So his new place is just what he is fitted for. Milo Husselman is in charge of the books, of the establishment and being a skilled man at that work, it will be seen that business is in working shape at the new establishment. With abundant capital at its back, controlled by men of business experience and ability, and skilled men in charge. the establishment starts up today with bright prospects. And another good thing, it is a going to make a market for timber still on sale.

Easy On Eagan

Quartermaster-General Eagan who was court martialed for his foul abuse of Gen. Miles, was sentenced to be dismissed. But the president changed the sentence to suspension from the duties of his office for six years. This left him his full pay $5500 a year, but not a stroke of work to do. The six years, also just covers the time when he will be retired on account of age. So it will be seen it is a punishment whatever. His offense was a grave one, and very destructive of good order and discipline in the army and should have been severely punished. As it is, he will be less worked and better paid than Dewey, and many other worthy heroes.

No Right To Ugliness.

The woman who is lovely in face, form and temper will always have friends, but one who would be attractive must keep her health. If she is weak, sickly and all run down, she will be nervous and irritable. If she has constipation or kidney trouble, her impure blood will cause pimples, skin eruptions and wretched complexion. Electric Bitters is the best medicine in the world to regulate the stomach, liver and kidneys and to purify the blood. It gives strong nreves, bright eyes, smooth velvety skin, rich complexion. It will make a good-looking, charming, woman of a run-down invalid. Only 50 cents at H. B. McCord's Drug Store.

A Singing Well.

Near Wiederman's, Texas, is an abandoned well, about sixty feet deep, and overgrown with vegetation, which, a correspondent of Popular Science says, is famous in the neighborhood for its musical powers. In fine weather, particularly with a westerly wind, it gives forth a sound like that of an Aeolian harp, swelling and dying away by turns. When a heavy northerly wind is blowing the water rises within a few feet of the top, and strange noises, which some persons think resemble moans, issue from the old well. An attempt made to fill up the well a few years ago failed, apparently because of the existence of a subterranean cavity which swallowed up the dirt as fast as it was dumped in.

THEY BEAT THE GOBULINS.

For the Revenue Man Will Get You, ef You Don't Look Out

Monday, a detective for the United States Revenue department appeared in town. It is needless to say he had not sent word ahead for the brass band to meet him at the Junction and march them up town with a big bear skin hatted fellow swinging a fine silver headed cane at the head of the procession. He came in a very modest and quiet way, and before many except the COURIER staff knew what was going on. he had his wires all laid for the business that was to follow yesterday, the end came.

It appears that those who handle beer, etc, and sell it about town to furnish the saloons, etc, have no right under the new revenue law, to sell to parties in other towns. This particular detective, having by virtue of his office, the right to look over express and freight books, etc, soon found that Mr. Gabriel had been shipping beer to Pleasant Lake and other towns. So he had him come in and settle the account with Uncle Sam. Gabriel was probably innocent of any intentional wrong, believing as we presume, that he could as under the old law sell to other towns if he chose. When he saw how it was, he came in promptly and paid up like a man. He contributed $60 to support Gen. Otis and Admiral Dewey's forces in the Philippines. About this time' the veterans of the G. A. R. and W. R. C. found out that they should have taken out a license for their entertainment Monday evening. However, we think their matter was allowed to go. But the lady Maccabees took out a license for their cake walk by contributing $4.17 to support our army in Porto Rico. And now all is serene until we hear from some other unlucky one. But it does begin to look as if "expansion" is liable to cut off or make expensive, many of our cheaper enjoyments, for the Revenue Man will catch you, if you don't watch out.

Gibraltar's Big Guns.

It has been assumed by a large number of people, especially in England, that Gibraltar has always commanded the straits which bears its name. That belief was erroneous until recently. The straits are twelve and a half miles wide, and the best guns mounted at Gibraltar heretofore could not possibly cover that distance. A few weeks ago, however, two of the newest 9.2 inch wire guns, 36 feet in length, and firing a projectile of 380 pounds weight, were mounted on European Point. These guns have a range of fifteen miles, and are most formidable weapons.—New Orleans Picayune.

EVENTS OF INTEREST

THAT OCCURRED DURING THE PAST WEEK.

Tersely Told Telegraph Tales in Brief Paragraphs—Many Casualties—A Few Crimes—Some Fires—Political and Religious News.

France and England May War.

The Toulon correspondent of the London Daily Mail, remarking upon the extraordinary activity at the arsenal there and generally in the French naval works, says:

"It is believed that Mr. Lockroy, Minister of Marine, expects war with Great Britain within two years, and it is notorious that a war with France is being preached in official circles in England.

"Troops are being poured into Tunis, Cassica and Algeria, and war material is being dispatched to all the colonies. French officers openly boast that they will sweep the British fleet out of the Mediterranean."

President Faure Dead.

Felix Faure, President of the Republic of France, died at 10 o'clock Thursday night, after an illness of three hours of apoplexy.

It has been known for some time that President Faure's heart was weak, but the first intimation that he was sick was given at half past six in the afternoon, when a message was dispatched by the family to the Premier, M. Dupuy, announcing that he was ill. M. Dupuy immediately repaired to the Elysee. All medical effort proved futile, and the President died at the stroke of ten.

Chance for Victor Napoleon.

Paris special: The feeling of grief over President Faure's death is mingled with the wonder if another death—that of the republic—will follow. Prince Victor Napoleon is suddenly presented with a great opportunity, such as came to his uncle, Louis Napoleon, in 1862, that of becoming Emperor through the presidency. But the army would have to assist. Premier Dupuy is considered the strongest Republican. His election would postpone a crisis. Many other candidates are named, but it is absolutely impossible to predict the result.

Lawton to Command.

Brigadier General Miller will be relieved from command of the troops in Iloilo before his retirement next month, and Major General Lawton will, in all probability, be assigned to succeed him. Gen. Lawton will reach Manila about the 1st of March, and will therefore arrive in ample time to be sent to Iloilo to relieve Gen. Miller, who will be ordered home. By the time of Gen. Lawton's arrival it is expected that Gen. Miller will have sent a force to occupy Cebu, though this is a matter which rests entirely in the hands of Gen. Otis

Died at Boston Banquet.

F. E. Taft, a resident of Whitinsville, Mass., died of heart disease while in attendance at the Home Market Club banquet, at Boston, to President McKinley. The distressing event occurred during the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner," and the assembly was standing. Mr. Taft fell and assistance was at once given him, but medical treatment failed to revive him. He was a well-known manufacturer, and formerly resided at Newburyport. He was 50 years of age, married, but had no children.

Filipinos Want Inside of American Lines.

Manila special: Ex-Consul of the United States O. F. Williams is in receipt of an application from a member of the insurgent Congress at Malolas for a pass through the American lines for a family of twelve persons, who are desirous of taking refuge in Manila.

This is regarded as significant, as showing the most intelligent rebels regard their families as safe only within American territory.

Big Fire in Akron.

A fire destroyed the immense plants and office buildings of the Thomas Building and Lumber Company, Akron Ohio. The loss will amount to $100,000 or more, largely insured. The entire business portion of the city was threatened for a time. Sparks and burning embers were carried for several miles. Several small fires were started but quickly extinguished. Millions of feet of lumber were destroyed.

Firemen Injured.

Eight firemen were injured by falling walls in the Baltimore Barrel Company's building which was on fire. B. Pistel and Louis Barrsterman may die. Small financial loss.

Strange Express Package.

The Adams Express Company at Baldwin, Ohio, opened a box that had lain in the office unclaimed for eleven months. It contained a human body.

To Be Court Martialed.

It is announced at Madrid that all commanders of Spanish war vessels destroyed at Manila and Santiago are to be court-martialed.

Spain to Release Filipinos.

It has been decided at a Spanish Cabinet Council to liberate the Filipinos who had been deported to the Caroline and Ladrone Islands in order to influence the Filipinos to release the Spaniards they hold prisoners.

Killed by Gas Explosion.

By an explosion of natural gas in the home of Charles A. Pumfer, Marion, Ind., both Pumfer and his wife were fatally injured. The house, a five-room cottage, was totally destroyed.

Another Great Fire in Chicago.

More than $1,000,000 was lost in a fire which destroyed the seven-story brick warehouse at 12 to 24 West Water street, Chicago, owned by E. B. Butler of Butler Bros., and occupied by the Traders' Storage Company and the Merchants and Manufacturers' Company.

One Man Killed and Five Injured.

One man was killed and five seriously injured in a powder explosion at Mosgrove, Pa. The victims were members of a construction gang and were blasting rocks near Mosagrave. It is supposed that a spark from a pipe ignited a keg of powder.

FAVORABLE EFFECTS TO FOLLOW.

Indicated by Improved Distribution at Retail of Heavy Winter Goods.

The following report is made by Bradstreet's: "That some favorable effects are likely to follow the atmospheric changes of the week is evidenced by reports of improved distribution at retail of heavy winter goods, while the effect on spring trade appears to be chiefly regarded as one of retardation rather than of positive injury. In leading staples the strength of prices is still a feature, all the gains made in January being sustained, if not further improved. Some reflection of the cold wave is found in the advance in wheat, showing an inclination to concede some damage to the winter wheat crop, in view of claims that snow protection is lacking in many sections. The strength of cotton, while to some extent based on smaller receipts and a reduction of the usual 'winter' crop, appears mainly due to the cheerful tone of the cotton goods market and the strength of demand and price manifested by those staples both at home and abroad. Wheat, including flour, shipments for the week aggregate 5,870,500 bushels, against 6,585,418 bushels last week. Corn exports for the week aggregate 3,865,622 bushels, against 3,697,731 bushels last week."

NEW USE FOR CORNSTALKS.

Pith Better than Cotton for Manufacture of Smokeless Powder.

At the big powder works of the Duponts at Carney's Point, N. J., interesting experiments in smokeless powder are being made by experts in the employ of the government. One of the difficulties that has attended the manufacture so far is that the powder is not wholly smokeless and that is apparently loses strength through storage. The experiments, it is said, led to the discovery that cotton could not be ground fine enough to bring about the best results and that the powdered pith of cornstalks gave somewhat better results. This fact is only partly authenticated. If it should prove of lasting value, a new source of revenue is opened up for farmers, since thousands of acres of cornstalks annually go to waste in the field, although much is being used in the manufacture of cellulose.

MAY BE MISSING CREW.

Story of Prisoners in Siberia Recalls Disappearance of a Schooner.

A late report to the effect that a number of American prisoners, whose names are unknown, are confined in a certain Siberian prison, undergoing penal punishment, has aroused a hope that among these men may be found the crew of the lost sailing schooner E. E. Webster, which was last heard from in Bering Sea waters in April, 1896. It has been thought that the Webster either drifted into Asiatic waters or was purposely sailed across the straits by her captain. I. Liebes, of San Francisco, the owner of the Webster, however, says that there is little or no doubt that the vessel went down during a severe storm, and that all on board were lost.

Killed After Valiant Struggle.

Jacob Gerbrandt, night fireman at the Hunt Stamping works, on Hickox street, near Euclid avenue, Cleveland, was found dead in the boiler room of the plant, having been stabbed through the heart. The case is shrouded in mystery. The motive for the crime was, evidently, not burglary, for Gerbrandt's money and watch were found on his body. Appearances indicated that the murdered man made a valiant struggle for life. The only clew found was a woman's knit fascinator, which was lying near the body. The theory is advanced by the police that Gerbrandt may have been holding a clandestine meeting with the woman and that a lover or husband witnessed the meeting and killed Gerbrandt. The murdered man was 40 years old and had a wife and three children.

News of Andree's Fate.

A gold mine owner named Monastyrschin has received a letter saying that a tribe of Turgusos, inhabiting the Timur peninsula, North Siberia, recently informed the Russian police chief of the district that between Komo and Pit, in the province of Yeniseisk, they found a cabin constructed of cloth and cordage, apparently belonging to a balloon. Close by were the bodies of three men, the head of one badly crushed. Around them were a number of instruments, the use of which was not understood by the Turgusos. It is believed that the bodies are those of the aeronaut, Herr Andree, and his companions.

Cleveland Block Burned Out.

The Kelly block, on Superior street, Cleveland, was destroyed by fire. It was occupied entirely by the Globe clothing store, owned by Simon Fox & Co. The stock of the Globe store was fivalued at $50,000. The damage to the Kelly block amounts to $20,000. The Crittende nblock adjacent was damaged to the extent of $10,000, while the block west of the Globe store suffered to the extent of $5,000. Nusbaum & Strauss, clothiers, lose $15,000. Samuel Barker & Sons, printers and stationers in the Crittenden block, lose $10,000. Total losses are $150,000.

Killed in a Cleveland Saloon.

John Visocke, a Slav, was shot and almost instantly killed in a saloon and dance hall at the cohner of Hill and Cross streets, Cleveland, by the saloonkeeper, John Skintyck. The killing was the result of a quarrel over a liquor bill, which it is alleged Visocke owed the saloonkeeper. Skintyck disappeared from the place before the arival of the police, but was captured.

Big Paper Mills for Maine.

The Great Northern Paper Company, with a capital stock of $4,000,000, all of which has been subscribed by leading capitalists in New York and Boston, will begin immediately the construction of mills on the Penobscot river, in Maine, with a capacity of 250 tons of news paper a day. They have purchased about 26,000 acres of timber lands, situated along the Penobscot river.

McClurg's Book Store Burns.

Four Persons Found Dead.

A policeman who went to a small house in the rear of a shoe factory at Marlboro, Mass., to investigate a fire found the house full of smoke and in a room off the kitchen four persons lying on a mattress which had been placed on the floor, all dead, and in the kitchen three other persons in a state of insensibility. The policeman, on entering the house, found a woman sitting beside a table. She did not speak. The officer threw open the windows to clear the smoke. Then he perceived an elderly man lying on a lounge and a young man sitting in a chair beside the stove. The old man was aroused, but, as he could not talk intelligently, the officer went into the next room. On the floor, covering a mattress, were four persons, and the officer found as he stooped over them that they were all dead. All were partially undressed. In the kitchen was a small wood stove in which a fire was burning, but there was little wood in it. The unconscious persons were taken to the police station and physicians summoned, who gave treatment to save the lives of the unfortunates.

HALF A MILLION IN ASHES.

Flames Destroy Two Large Establishments at Cincinnati.

A fire causing a loss of $500,000 started mysteriously in the upper stories of the hat manufacturing establishment of Kahn, Fellheimer & Co., at Cincinnati, and before the engines could get to work the fire had communicated to the clothing house of H. A. Seinheimer & Co. Next to that stood the corner building, occupied by Sanford, Varner & Storrs, containing a valuable stock of clothing and material. The first-named buildings were entirely burned out, but the firemen succeeded in saving the corner building at the expense of practically ruining the contents. The entire fire department was called out, and a perfect deluge of water was thrown. Nevertheless the fire found its way into the rear of buildings fronting on Race street, occupied by S. L. Weller & Co., Louis Wald & Co. and Reins & Meins, all clothiers, and causing considerable loss, although it was checked before the buildings were destroyed.

PLOT TO KILL THE MIKADO.

Assassin Said to Have Been Employed by the Chinese Government.

A remarkable story reached Port Townsend by —the steamship Olympia regarding a conspiracy formed in Pekin for the purpose of willing the Emperor of Japan. According to this information an assassin was employed for that purpose and dispatched to Japan. He was under the employ of the Chinese Government. A report of the plot reached Japan and the Emperor's palace is strongly guarded and all strangers are placed under surveillance.

Combine of Paper Bag Manufacturers.

A paper bag trust has been floated, with a capital stock of over $25,000,000. One of the firms involved is the Western Paper Bag Company of Batavia, Ill., which operates a big paper mill at Kaukauna. The trust is organized to allow the joint use of patents owned by one of the interested companies. The combine will embrace 85 per cent of the paper bag manufacturers of the country.

Seven Burned to Death.

Silas Jones and his six children were burned to death on the Richardson and May plantation at Corner Stone, Ark. The house and its contents were destroyed and none of its inmates escaped. It is thought the house caught fire after its occupants went to sleep. Mr. Jones' wife was away from home for the night and owing to that fact escaped.

Report in the President's Hands.

After a good deal of debate in the Senate on Saturday, the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill was passed. A bill to amend an act entitled, "An act to reimburse the Governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the volunteer army of the United States in the existing war with Spain" was passed. The House passed several bridge bills and other measures of minor importance

At no time during the session of the Senate on Monday was a quorum present, a majority of the members being snowbound at their homes. A sharp debate over the unanimous consent agreement reached Saturday afternoon to vote on the McEnery resolution was precipitated early in the session. The agricultural appropriation bill was called up, considered and passed with only a few unimportant amendments. A bill removing the disabilities of certain persons engaged in the civil war was passed. The raging blizzard caused practically a suspension of business at the House. At 12:05 Clerk McDowell called the House to order. There were about sixty members on the floor. On motion of Mr. Grosvenor (Rep., O.) Mr. Payne of New York was elected Speaker pro tem. amid an outburst of applause. In executive session the sundry civil bill was again taken up. After having completed fifty-nine pages of the bill the committee rose, and the House adjourned.

The unanimous consent agreement reached by the Senate on Saturday to vote Tuesday afternoon on the resolution of Mr. McEnery (Dem., La.) declaring the policy of this Government in the Philippines was not vacated. In accordance with that agreement the vote was taken on the resolution, and it was adopted—26 to 22. The Nicaragua canal bill was offered in the House as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill by Mr. Hepburn of Iowa, chairman of the committee that reported it, and the leaders on the respective sides are engaged in a desperate struggle which involves the fate of the measure at this session of Congress. The debate lasted two hours and was not concluded.

The House on Wednesday settled the fate of the Nicaragua canal bill in this Congress by refusing to override the decision of the chair, occupied by Mr. Hopkins, in committee of the whole, when the chair held that the canal bill offered as an amendment by Mr. Hepburn was out of order. The reading of the sundry civil bill was continued. The appropriation for the deep waterways commission was increased from $60,000 to $90,000 on motion of the Appropriations Committee. After completing ten additional pages of the bill the committee rose and the House adjourned. A bill extending the "cordial appreciation" of Congress to Miss Helen Miller Gould for her patriotic services during the recent war and providing that the President should present to her a gold medal was passed by the Senate. A bill was passed providing for the admission to the naval academy as a cadet of Oscar W. Deignan, one of the Merrimac heroes. Senators Cullom, Sewell and Teller were named as conferees on the legislative appropriation bill.

The army reorganization bill was reported to the Senate on Thursday. The naval personnel bill was taken up and read, but no effort made to proceed further with its consideration. Soon after the Senate convened a House joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to pay certain laborers, workmen and mechanics at United States navy yards and naval stations 50 per cent additional for work performed in excess of eight hours per diem was called up and adopted. Mr. Hale having gotten the personnel bill before the Senate did not press and Mr. Gallinger (N. H.) called up the bill enabling soldiers who served in the Spanish war who had previously been pensioners again to obtain their pensions and had it reconsidered. The proviso of the bill that applicants for pensions should file their claims within a year was stricken out and the bill was then passed. Consideration was begun of the postoffice appropriation bill. Practically the only obstacle encountered by the bill was the committee amendment providing for special mail facilities on the trunk lines from New York and Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans and from Kansas City, Mo., to Newton, Kan. In the House the proposition to include the item of $20,000,000 to be paid Spain for the cession of the Philippines, in the sundry civil bill shared the same fate as did the Nicaragua canal bill "rider" the day before. The ruling of the chair was preceded by an extended debate. After the sundry civil bill had been completed and reported to the House Mr. Hepburn (Iowa), the champion of the Nicaragua canal bill, moved to recommit it, with instructions to report it back with the canal bill incorporated in it. The motion was promptly declared out of order by the Speaker, whereupon Mr. Hepburn appealed and Mr. Payne (New York) moved to lay the appeal on the table. Upon the latter motion the vote was taken, and the result was 97 yeas to 67 nays.

STATE LAW MAKERS.

By a vote of 63 to 7 the House on Monday passed what is known as the "Wolf Lake harbor bill." The measure grants the right of way through a neck of land between Wolf lake and Lake Michigan for a waterway, and it is designed to make Wolf lake a harbor for the city of Hammond. The bill does not appropriate any money for the enterprise, but the work is to be done through an appropriation by the general government, supplemented by funds raised among the people of Hammond.

The bill to create county councils in every county in the State passed the Senate on Wednesday. The bills for reforms in county and township government are now all in the House. Both branches suspended the constitutional rule and passed a bill creating a commission to make plans for taking part in the exposition to be held at Toledo in 1902. A special committee in the House reported in favor of allowing the claim against the State of $5,000 held by Mrs. Edwin May of Chicago. The claim is thirty-nine years old and has been before every Legislature for twenty years.

The bill which provides that the county commissioners shall furnish a place for holding the sessions of the Superior Court in Lake and Laporte counties at Hammond and Michigan City respectively, and which was opposed because it was believed to be the first step in an effort to move the seats of county government to those cities, was passed by the Senate Thursday afternoon. The Senate also passed the bill to fix the salaries of Circuit and Superior judges in counties of not over 45,000 population or $25,000,000 property valuation. In such counties the salaries are to be fixed at $25 for each 1,000 population. The new law will affect the salaries of the judges in the second, eighth, eleventh, thirteenth, fourteenth, sixteenth, thirtieth, thirty-fourth and sixtieth judicial circuits. The anti-lynching bill, prepared by Senator Drummond and providing that the sheriff shall forfeit his office in the event that he suffers a prisoner to be taken from his custody and lynched, was killed, and with it died the prospect of legislation along this line at the present session. The House met in the evening to discuss the bill providing for 2-cent railroad passenger fare. The railroad committee reported against the bill, and after a two hours' discussion the report was adopted by a vote of 49 to 24, and the bill was killed.

The following are among the new bills introduced:

By Senator Corr—To permit county assessors to be eligible to re-election.

By Senator Cregor—Requiring all State penal, educational and benevolent institutians to turn into the State treasury all moneys earned by them.

NAVY YARD IS SWEPT.

Fire Loss of More than $1,000,000 at Brooklyn.

Fire destroyed the great machine shops in the Brooklyn navy yard Wednesday night, causing a loss to the Government of between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000. The shops were the largest of the kind in the country, 1,000 men having been employed in them during the rush work in the war with Spain. Their destruction will cripple the repair work of the department until they can be replaced. Sailors commented on the fact that the fire occurred on the anniversary of the blowing up of the Maine in Havana harbor. All the plans of the Maine were lost in the fire, so that nothing is left to represent her except the model in the possession of the naval constructor.

There was practically no opposition to the flames after they had started. The deep snow and a lack of water prevented the naval forces and the fire department from working effectively. It is supposed that defective insulation of an electric light wire started the flames, as they were first seen in a part of the building where there was no furnace.

The main building is four stories in height, and has two great towers. On the first and second floors were many valuable machines and tools. The third floor was used as a pattern shop, where duplicates of machinery and the more delicate parts of a warship were manufactured and finished. On the fourth floor the patterns themselves were stored. There were the patterns for the engines of the Chicago, the Raleigh, the Cincinnati, the Maine and many other vessels of war. The long "L" was used as a boiler house and for the setting up of engines. The frame building was used by the master mechanic and for the storage of many valuable sets of private tools owned by the experts. There will be an investigation of the fire by a court of inquiry.

BLOW FOR THE CANAL.

Chances of Nicaraguan Measure at This Session Are Slim.

The national House Wednesday apparently settled the fate of the Nicaragua canal bill in this Congress by refusing to override the decision of the chair in committee of the whole, when the chair held that the canal bill offered as an amendment by Mr. Hepburn was out of order. The friends of the Nicaragua bill were very confident that they would triumph, but after four hours of debate the chair was sustained, 127 to 109. The debate throughout the day was exceedingly spirited, and in the end a majority of the members refused to override the House rules. No record is made of the vote in committee of the whole. Party lines were not adhered to, the division in favor and in opposition to sustaining the chair's decision being about equal on both sides of the political aisles.

Chairman Hepburn's effort to have the House adopt the bill as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill failed, a correspondent asserts, not because the majority of the House did not favor the Nicaraguan canal, but because a majority of the members preferred to have the bill defeated rather than to adopt the expedient of overriding one of the oldest and most valuable rules of the House.

Advocates of violating the rule undertook to justify their proposed action on the ground that the Speaker would not allow the Nicaraguan canal bill to come up in any way in which it could be disposed of under the rules in an orderly manner. This argument did not influence enough men to override the very clear statement of the rule made by Representative Hopkins of Illinois, who was in the chair as chairman of the committee of the whole House.

FOREIGN TRADE IN JANUARY.

Department Makes Comparisons with First Month in 1898.

The total exports of merchandise for January, 1899, were $115,515,954, as compared with $108,426,674 in January, 1898, and the imports $58,472,315, against $50,827,714 in 1898, making an excess of exports over imports for January, 1899, of $57,043,630, compared with an excess of exports in January, 1898, of $57,598,960. For the seven months ended Jan. 31, 1899, the exports were $749,472,465, against $718,367,407 in the same period ended Jan. 31, 1898, and the imports $367,175,925, against $340,616,530 for the seven months of the previous year, the excess of exports over imports for the seven months ended Jan. 31, 1899, thus being $382,296,540, against $377,750,877 the corresponding seven months the year before.

The gold exports in January, 1899, were $2,330,503, and the imports $6,066,080, making an excess of imports of $3,735,577, against an imports excess in January, 1898, of $3,834,751. For the seven months ended Jan. 31, 1899, the excess of silver exports was $14,435,705, against an excess for the same period ended Jan. 31, 1898, of $14,238,859.

Candidates for congressional honors have reason to envy the easy race which Thomas Spight had in obtaining a seat among the lawmakers of the nation. Mr. Spight, the Democratic candidate in the Second district of Mississippi, which contains such important counties as Tate, Tippah, Panola, Tallahatchie and De Soto, had two opponents at the recent election, a Populist and a Republican, and the result was not what would be called on the racetrack a close finish. Mr. Spight had nearly 3,000 votes; his Populist opponent had 107, his Republican opponent had 58.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Pitched Head Foremost Into a Fiery Furnace—College Singers Dangerously Beaten—Froze to Death Under a Hedge.

As a north-bound Grand Rapids and Indiana passenger train was going into the Pennsylvania yards at Fort Wayne it collided with a rear end of a light freight engine. The freight crew jumped. Both engines were wrecked. Passenger Engineer Frank Perry was terribly bruised, but no bones were broken. Fireman Geo. Crabill had the firebox open at the time and was pitched into it. While his clothes were a sheet of flame he climbed back over the coal, took the cover off the engine tank and dived into the water. Although badly burned about the arms, he will live.

Body Found Frozen.

J. M. Hinkle was found frozen to death in a hedge by the roadside a mile east of Bloomington. He had been missing for three days, but nothing serious was thought of his absence. He lived on a farm in the neighborhood in which he was found and it is supposed that he was on his way home when he fell into the hedge.

BLAIR, THE REGULAR.

(An Incident of the Battle of San Juan.)

Blair, the regular, wounded lay,
On the slope of San Juan hill;
Near by were two of the volunteers,
Bleeding and faint and still;
And farther up, in a palm tree hid,
A Spaniard with deadly gun
Took cruel aim at the men below,
Dropping them one by one.

One volunteer, with a feeble hand,
Fought with the plaguing flies;
It told the fact of lingering life
To the Spaniard's watchful eyes.
He raised his gun to his shoulder then,
And a bullet sang afar;
It hit the hat of the wounded man,
Who lay on the left of Blair.

Another! The boy on the right hand winced,
And uttered a moan of pain;
Another! Blair looked at his reddened blouse
And muttered, "I'm hit again,
But there's one more load in my old gun,"—
His brow grew black with a frown,
"And I vow I'll shoot that Spanish brute,
Who fires on men that are down."

Weak were his hands as he raised his gun,
But steady his eye and aim;
Soon, round the trunk of the shielding palm,
The head of the Spaniard came;
Then up from the slope the Springfield spoke
And answered the Mauser well;
Blair, the regular, grimly smiled
As the Spaniard shrieked and fell.

The volunteer who lay on the left
Moaned "Water!" again and again.
Said Blair, "By making a double-quick,
I may capture a full canteen."
So, firmly shutting his whitening lips,
He crept where the Spaniard lay,
Secured the prize and crawled slowly back;—
Ah, painful and long seemed the way.

"You first," said both of the volunteers,
As he held out the full canteen;
They saw his blood-stained blouse and they knew
Right well what its cost had been;
Blair could but whisper to answer them,
One hand on his bleeding side,
"You fellows have homes somewhere," said he,
"I'm a regular." Then he died.

Sidney of England, make room! Make room
In thy niche of courtly fame,
While side by side with thine own we write
Another nobleman's name!
Blair, the regular! Homeless no more
Since thy death's heroic day;
Thy name and the fame of thy gallant deed
Are homed in our hearts for aye.

A Ride for Life and Death.

By Minna Disborough.

This happened 20 years and more ago, when the Barker gang of bushrangers was still the terror of New South Wales.

At Gilla-Gulla station, on Muriwera Bay, lived John Keightly and his wife, both young, lately married, and having but one child, a boy of six months, named Lionel. They were ardently in love with each other, and thought their son the finest creature ever seen. The station was a large one, but it lay remote; the nearest homestead was over ten miles distant. The Keightly's bungalow was a pretty place, with a wide veranda all round it.

Keightly was a magnificent fellow, six feet three in height, broad-shouldered and active. His wife was also tall, and a beautiful woman. But at the time I write of she was slender, weighing not over 130 pounds. Of course she was a capital rider. She was dark, with great brown eyes and delicate features. The baby was a lovely little chap, with light curling hair.

One day, in the height of the shearing season, Keightly was sitting in the dining room, and spread out on the table before him, in heaps of gold and silver, were the salaries of his men; and a bag of money stood beside him on the floor. He was busy counting, when a shadow fell across the table, and looking up, he saw two masked men, with revolvers, pointed at him. They spoke tersely and to the point, "Your money or your life!"

Keightly knew that they meant what they said. He put down his pen, and put up his hands. A conversation ensued. The bushrangers were affable, but they informed Keightly that they must have not only the money then before them, but also all that he had on deposit at the bank, 100 miles away. To this Keightly objected, tho he was looking down the barrels of those revolvers all the while; a stormy discussion followed, which was interrupted by the entrance of Mrs. Keightly. She had the baby Lionel in her arms.

She kept her head, and questioned the two men quietly. The proposition which they made could hardly be surpassed for cool audacity. She must ride to the bank, draw out the money, and return, within twenty-four hours. They meanwhile would remain in the bungalow and "take care' of Keightly. Two others of the gang (who were on guard outside) would act as her escort on the journey. If she were back within the stipulated time, all would be well; if not, so much the worse for her husband!

In short, it was submit or die. What did she care for money in comparison with her husband and child? On the other hand, had she the stamnia and the courage to attempt that terrible ride under the circumstances? She must take Lionel with her, for she had no one to look after him at the bungalow. She thought it over—and consented!

She had a horse of her own, "Spanker," a huge bay animal, capable of making the tremendous journey if anything in the shape of horseflesh could. He was brought out and saddled; a bundle containing provisions for her and the baby was fastened to the pommel; she wrapped Lionel in a gray blanket and slung him across her breast, said a final "God bless you" to the man she loved more than all the world, and rode off, her two escorts beside her. They rode in silence, and during that whole journey out, of a hundred miles, not a word was exchanged between the three. In less than twelve hours they were at their destination.

They all dismounted. She walked into the bank, the men lounging close at hand, not "letting on" that they were in any way connected with her, but ready to shoot if she should show any signs of betraying them. She presented her husband's check, and received the money, two thousand pounds in gold—all the money they had in the world. "You looked queer round the mouth and eyes," the bank cashier remarked to her afterward; "but as you said nothing, of course I thought it was all right."

She remounted, and still accompanied by her guards, she turned Spanker's head toward home. If only she got back in time! They rode and rode; the fatigue and want of sleep told upon her terribly, but the thought of the deadly peril of her husband kept her up. When about half the distance had been covered, Lionel began to cry. In the effort to quiet him, she dropped the reins on Spanker's neck; he took the bit between his teeth and ran away. The men, fancying she was trying to escape, gave chase, frightening Spanker still more; he ran headlong at a five-railed fence, not seeing a ditch on the other side of it; he fell, broke his knees, and flung Mrs. Keightly and the baby over his head; but they fell in the water and was not hurt in the least.

The men rode up, realizng that it was an accident; but what was to be done? Neither of their horses had ever had a woman's saddle on him. There was no time to be lost; an hour might mean death. Mrs. Keightly kilted up her riding skirt, jumped astride the horse of one of the men, with Lionel fastened to her breast as before, the men taking turns in riding the other horse or running beside him. But progress was necessarily slow under these conditions, and the woman was in an agony all the time. With the best that they could do, they were an hour behind time when they came in sight of Gilla-Gulla. As her eyes fell on the house—it was after dusk—she saw that the windows were dark, and the place seemed deserted. Even Carlo, her favorite sheep dog, was not there to greet her. What had happened? What could have happened—except the one terrible thing! She was shaking all over with a ghastly fear as she threw herself from her horse and staggered into the bungalow, expecting to find the dead body of her husband lying there.

She entered the dining room. It was dark, but "Carrie!" cried out the voice of the man she loved, and his shadowy figure sprang forward, and she was hugged close in his great arms. Yes, he was alive and unharmed, and all was well. For as to the loss of their money, neither of them thought of that! They had each other, and Lionel.

The reason the dog had been kept out of the way and the house not lighted up had been because the bushrangers, with an eye to all possible contingencies, had foreseen that Mrs. Keightly might have succeeded in having her escort arrested at the township, and be coming back with an escort of a very different kind, who would give them short shrift. By keeping the bungalow dark they were enabled to see her before she saw, them, and dispose themselves accordingly. But all having gone according to their wishes, they made themselves very agreeable, and the whole four invited themselves to dinner at the bungalow; and when they departed, near midnight, they bade the Keightlys farewell as if they were dear friends. RESCUED BY A DOG.

When He Brought His Little Friend Home He Disappeared.

Two years ago Thomas L. Whitney lived on what is known as the Pitcher farm at Triangle, Broome county, New York. He owned a handsome Newfoundland dog that was the pride and pet of his two-year-old daughter. Dog and child were inseparable, and when Mr. Whitney moved to Binghamton the little one's heart was broken because she could not bring her Duke. As the family were to occupy the fourth story of a block in that city it was decided to leave the dog with a family named Pellet, who were to occupy the place at Triangle. For a month or two the dog stayed, though evidently mourning the loss of his little companion; then he disappeared. Once or twice hunters thought they caught a glimpse of him in an extensive wood tract near the farm, but he never was seen about by any of the neighbors, and it was supposed he had gone to the woods to die of a broken heart.

Recently Mrs. Whitney and the little girl went to the farm to spend a few days. There had been a fall of snow, and the little one asked permission to go to the barn and see the calves. This was granted, and when she did not return her mother became worried. It began snowing hard when the mother started out to look for the child. Her footsteps were traced toward the woods, and then they were lost in the falling snow. For hours the farm hands hunted over the place and through the woods. Dusk came on rapidly and the mother was frantic when there was a scratching and a whine at the rear door. Opening it they found Duke with his little chilled burden that he had partly dragged and partly carried from the woods.

In the excitement her rescuer was forgotten, and when remembered he had gone, and has not since been seen.

In most large hotels in New York city stale bread is kept separate from the swill, as it has a definite market value. Where it is not used in the kitchen as a substitute for cracker dust, it is stored away in barrels to be disposed of at the rate of thirty-five cents a barrel.

COURT GOES TO JAIL.

A MISSOURI COUNTY REBELLION DEFIES SUPPRESSION.

Judges Serve Terms in Prison for Contempt of United States Court Order—Strange Story that Has Been Making History for Twenty Years.

Nowhere in history is there an exact parallel to the story of the farmers of St. Clair County, Missouri, who steadily refuse to obey a rule of the law, and who find in their midst men who are willing to go to jail, men who serve their whole terms of office in jail—set after set of them volunteering to suffer for the common weal. For twenty-five years the United States court has declared St. Clair County indebted to certain bondholders for principal and interest and interest upon the interest, besides the court costs, in a sum now aggregating $1,300,000, and has ordered that the money be paid. For twenty-five years the people of St. Clair County have answered the United States court that they did not owe this money, either wholly or in part, and that no power on earth could compel them to pay it. The court has borne upon them all its gigantic strength. It has punished and pleaded; delivered upon them all its mandates, its dictums, its decrees and its wrath. And in twenty years it has moved them not one particle. To its every command, its every threat, its every application, the people of St. Clair County have answered: "We will not," and the history of their never-yielding response is the story of a fight without parallel in America; a story of steadfastness, stubbornness and unterrified, grim-jawed persistence that is not eclipsed by either the Puritans and other non-conformists in their refusal to yield to church power in England, which imprisoned them, beheaded and burnt them; by the Quaker or the Diobourski adherents to the refusal to bear arms, or by the steadfastness of the Chouans of France, who concealed taxable goods and spirited away assessors.

The case is a page from the history of railroad exploitation in the West in the early '70s. St. Clair County is a part of the Osage country not rich in minerals or with exceptionally good lands. It is a plain country district peopled by men and women who have lived there all their lives and who have the determination of the British and Scottish ancestors. But the county had no railroad to haul its produce to market, and the offer of one was hailed with pleasure thirty years ago. The nearest line to St. Clair was at Sedalia, sixty miles away.

So when the advance agents of the Tebo and Neosho Railway went to Osceola and proposed to build a branch of the road from Kansas City to Helena, Ark., the people were anxious to accept. Some sixty counties in western Missouri discussed the proposition for a bond issue. St. Clair accepted and agreed to take $250,000 of stock to be paid for in county bonds. There has always been some question if the petition for the bond issue had a majority of votes, but they were so recorded and the issue decided upon. This was in 1870. They were conditioned on the running of the road through the county on the best practicable line. Fifty thousand dollars was to be delivered when five miles of road had been constructed, $100,000 more when the road crossed the Osage River and that stream was bridged, and the remainder when the road was graded through the whole county.

This was satisfactory to the people, but it is asserted that later the county court stripped the county of all protecting conditions and agreed to deliver bonds when contracts had been let for masonry work. On Nov. 2, 1870, the bonds were signed and delivered. That was the last of the railroad. It has never been built and nobody asserts it was ever to be. But the holders of the bonds sold most of them and the judgment is based on the innocent third party holder law.

The people refused to pay the first tax levied to pay interest and learned of the issue of the bonds. Then they repudiated the whole thing and sat down satified no court would hold against them. But in 1873 suit was brought for $80,000 of the bonds and decided against the county. Then Judge Dillon issued a mandamus on the county court commanding the judges to levy the necessary tax. The judges learning of the coming of the marshal with this order took to the woods, and it was a long time before the officer was able to serve his papers.

When he did serve them the order was ignored. The judges were opposed to the tax, and even if they favored it knew the temper of their people too well to take chances. Then an order of arrest for contempt of court was issued and the judges hauled to Kansas City for hearing. Judges Asabel Heath, Thomas J. Younger, John Breeden, John P. Love and Thomas Henley were the first men to suffer voluntary imprisonment rather than pay what they believed to be an unjust debt.

When the fight began the people fought the court because of their wrath at the fraud put upon them. Now they keep it up because they could not pay if they would. The amount has grown by accretion of interest compounded from $250,000 to over $1,300,000. The assessed valuation of the entire county is only $4,000,000, so it will be seen that to issue the levy necessary to take up this debt would confiscate every acre of land in St. Clair. The people are willing to compromise and pay the face of the bonds, but as this offer is rejected they keep up the battle.

After a few courts had been locked up in a body candidates for the office became volunteers willing to go to jail to prevent a tax levy. For nearly thirty years the war has continued, and is not ended yet. Every time Judge Philips opens court he finds a group of three patient typical southwestern Missouri farmers in court waiting for commitment to jail. He offers them advice and admonition. They reply with the stated offer of compromise, and of course are turned down. Then the Judge winds it all up by wearily ordering his marshal to lock them up. But the bonds have not been paid, nor any of the interest. The Federal authorities are puzzled, and the people of St. Clair determined. How it will end, if it ever does get out of court, is a question for chancery to wrangle with.

There are 25,000 or 30,000 persons in St. Clair County. These, save 1,500 at Osceola, as many at Appleton City, and half as many at Lowrey, are farmers and farmers' folk. They are a type of people who have had much to do with the settlement and development of the United States. They represent, as it is represented in Missouri and the south Alleghanian hills of east Tennessee and Kentucky, as in no other parts of the Union, the simon-pure Anglo-Saxon stock in the new world. Their ancestors came over in the Mayflower and others of the first of the emigrant craft. They are an admixture of the Briton and the Scot, and all their ancestral characteristics of never-bending determination and unyielding stubbornness are apparent in this unique fight of the people of St. Clair County.

Said one leading resident: "Afore we'll give up they'll have to build a jail around the whole county, and lock us up, women, children and all. I guess this thing looks pretty funny to people on the outside, but there's nothing funny about it to a man with a home and a farm in St. Clair County, and a lot of money sharks waitin' to gobble it the first time there's nobody comes forward to go to jail."

Marriage in Melbourne.

A man can be married in Melbourne cheaper than in any other part of the world. Ministers advertise in the papers against each other. One offers to bind together loving couples for 10s 6d, another for 7s 6d, and so on down to 2s 6d. In some cases wedding breakfasts and rings are thrown in.—Tit-Bits.

MAP SHOWING EXTENT OF HURRICANE SERVICE.

Anticipating the demands of the service the Government has established suitable headquarters for the West Indian storm-warning system, under the direction of the weather bureau, and has directed that the equipment be entirely remodeled and brought up to date. The first step in the new plans was the removal of the central office from Kingston to Havana. During the last six months the Government has been gaining valuable experience in the operation of the system in the West Indies, Central and South America and the the Mexican gulf coast, and as a result it has developed a comprehensive plan of daily weather reports from that important region. Stations have been established at the principal points, and daily observations will be reported.

The most important points included in the system, as at present organized, are Havana, Santiago, Kingston, Colon, Santo Domingo, San Juan, St. Thomas, St. Kitts, Dominica, Martinique, Barbados, Trinidad, Curacoa, Vera Cruz, Coatzacoalcos, Tampico, Merida, Nassau, Guadaloupe. The accompanying map is a reproduction of one prepared by Willis L. Moore, chief of the weather bureau, showing the location of the points of observation and the cable connections already established.

UNCLE DICK OGLESBY.

Farmer, Miner, Lawyer, General, Senator and Governor.

No man in Illinois enjoys to greater extent the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens than Richard J. Oglesby, General, ex-Governor and former United States Senator. He has also been a woodsman, teamster, farmer, California miner, lawyer and traveler.

Uncle Dick Oglesby, as he is familiarly called, was born in Kentucky in 1824 and was left an orphan at the age of 8. He moved to Illinois about that time. He served in the Mexican war and in the war for the Union, resigning from the army in 1864 to become Governor of Illinois. He served as Governor until 1869 and from 1873 to 1879 was United States Senator. For almost half a century he has been a power in the Republican politics of his adopted State.

Speaking of his earlier career Uncle Dick says: "I tried farming one summer and cleared just $6.50. It struck me then that I was not cut out for a farmer, and I decided to study law. I went down to Springfield to read with Judge Robbins, and, of course, I tackled Blackstone the first thing. I had never read a book through in my life then, and the big words nearly floored me. Judge Robbins suggested that I read English history along with my law books, and asked me what I could remember of my history. 'I have never read any, Judge,' I said.

"'What, no English history?' 'No.'

"'No American history? 'No.'

"'Well, what have you read?' asked the Judge as he looked at me severely. 'Nothing, Judge; never read a book through in my life.'

"'Why, Dick, how in the devil do you expect to become a lawyer?' asked Judge Robbins then.

"I told him," says the ex-Governor, "that I knew several lawyers who never read anything, never had read anything, didn't know anything, and hadn't any sense, either, and I guessed I could be a lawyer if they could.

"Then I buckled down and read Blackstone and several other law books, and presented myself before Judge Breeze for examination. We had a jug of cider and a bushel of apples to treat the judges and we all went through."

Explaining why he became an abolitionist while born in Kentucky he said: "Uncle Tim was the principal cause of it. Uncle Tim was the only slave in the family, and had descended from my grandfather to my father. In order to divide up the very little property that my father left us when he died, Uncle Tim had to be sold at auction. I shall never forget how he looked as he stood on the box ready for sale. He was a powerful man, with a manly bearing, a fine face, and a skin as black as ebony. He had always been fond of us children, and I thought almost as much of him as I did of my father. The tears streamed down his face and he begged my father's brother to buy him, but this could not be done.

"Uncle Tim," I said as I went up to him, "I'm going to work and earn the money to buy you and set you free." His face lighted up with pride and pleasure, and then settled back into a look of despair.

"'Tank yo,' Marse Dick,' he said. 'But yo's a pore orphan an' won't nebber be rich 'nuff to buy Uncle Tim.' He was sold and brought $400, being past his best working days. In 1849 I went to California, and, after a hard pull of it, I got together several thousand dollars. I sent the money at once to my brother, and Uncle Tim was purchased and freed."

BELOVED MR. PICKWICK.

Andrew Lang Pays the Dear Soul a Just Tribute.

If Mr. Pickwick is not a gentleman (of course, not in the heraldic sense), who is? asks Andrew Lang in the Fortnightly Review. Who was ever more courteous and considerate (despite Mrs. Bardell and the lady in yellow curl papers), more blameless in his relations with women? Who more gaily put himself in peril to rescue virtue in distress? Who was more fiery on the point of honor, even if his attitude of self-defense was unscientific? In whom do we mark a hand more open, a heart more tender or more eager to forgive?

Indeed, Mr. Pickwick seems "scarce other than my own ideal knight," though "a knight sin amor," like the good Earl Marischal. His foibles are amiable; his scutcheon is white as the pennon of Brian Tunstal. He did not shun the bowl; nor did Socrates, who, to be sure, like Dr. Johnson, had the stronger head. These excesses of the Pickwickians are to be taken in a Pickwickian sense; they are as symbolical as Materlinck, and infinitely more entertaining.

As to the method or plot, Pickwick has none, and needs none. It is not a novel, but something far better. It is Pickwick, the breviary of kindly men. "Delightful book!" as Thackeray cries when Dugald Dalgetty's name comes into his mind. "To think of it is to want to jump up and take it down from the shelf." It opens to us a world literally crowded with human beings, of whom the least important even are permanent creations, friends whom we do not forget.

POINTS FOR PODUNK'S HOTEL.

How to Build an Extravagant Menu Out of Commonplace Materials.

He winked familiarly at the landlord as he paid his bill, and in a confidential tone remarked:

"I don't mind telling you that I am thinking of going into the hotel business myself for a change. Yes, sir, that's so! I've bought the biggest place for sale in Podunk, and mebbe you wouldn't mind telling me a few things about keeping a hotel—seein' you're right in the business. There's the menu, now; some little points on that might work. We don't know everything down in Podunk."

The landlord rubbed the bald spot on his brow and thought a moment.

"There's chicken croquettes," he said; "chicken comes high this time of year."

"I see."

"Not one in a thousand can tell the difference between veal and chicken."

"Geewhillikens! There's a pointer to start with."

"Fried chicken costs money. Fried rabbit tastes like it, and the difference goes into your pocket."

"Golly, I'm gettin' rich already."

"Quail on toast reads fine on the menu. You don't suppose we folks in the city pamper our guests on real quail? Baby owls taste so much like quail you can't tell one from t'other. And out your way owls must be thick as pumpkins. Then there's beef. Of course you've heard of the hippophagous theory?"

"T-h-e—the w-h-a-t?"

"Click! click! Yes, old racers. You can buy them by the bunch of a hundred for a song."

The man from Podunk turned pale. "I guess I've got all the points I can remember at once, and if you ever come our way give me a call. Good-day. Fried rabbit? Owls on toast! H-i-pp-op. I reckon I'll call the line there. Great business, this hotel-keeping, anyhow."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Two Kinds of People.

No; the two kinds of people on earth I mean,
Are the people who lift and the people who lean.

Wherever you go, you will find the world's masses
Are always divided in just these two classes.

And oddly enough, you will find, too, I ween,
There is only one lifter to twenty who lean.

In which class are you? Are you easing the load
Of overtaxed lifters who toil down the road?

Or are you a leaner, who lets others bear
Your portion of labor and worry and care?
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

"No; we've had the same cook seven years."

"Naw; they ain't got nothin' we want."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

HOW PIANISTS ARE MADE.

Paderewski Had to Unlearn Faults He Acquired Early.

"Six is the age at which would-be pianists should begin serious work," says the great teacher Leschetizky, the Viennese master of music, from whom Paderewski learned to perfect his art. When Paderewski went to Leschetizky, some ten years ago, it was as a concert performer who had already achieved success in Russia and mastered an extensive repertory. Leschetizky heard him play for awhile and then said:

"You have some very bad faults, but you have talent. You have played too many things and nothing well enough. Your wrist is hard and stiff. If you come to me you must forget for six months that you have a repertory; you must play nothing but exercises for technique, six hours a day for exercises, and nothing else."

The verdict was a serious one and Paderewski gave it a serious consideration, ending by determining to become the renowned Leschetizky's pupil. All day long for six months this finished concert performer worked away at the mechanics of piano playing, at exercises specially devised for him by Leschetizky, and some devised by himself with reference to peculiarities of his own hands. Every evening he was given a lesson at the professor's house as a mark of special favor, for with ordinary pupils all lessons ended at 5 in the afternoon, and one lesson in two weeks was the best that even the most proficient might attain.

One hour, two hours, three hours, these nightly sessions lasted, for Leschetizky gives no heed to time, once his serious interest is aroused. These two men were together constantly; they took long walks; they played hard-fought games of billiards, both being adepts at the game; they talked incessantly, for Leschetizky has a fluent tongue, and what the older man knew of the art of making music he gave freely to the younger man.

It is worthy of record that this store of musical knowledge, transmitted thus from man to man, was a sort of sacred heritage handed down from the great Beethoven, for Leschetizky's master was Czerny, and Czerny often declared that all he knew about music he got from Beethoven in a few weeks of priceless intercourse with that greatest of all musicians.

Leschetizky accorded this extreme favor to Paderewski because it pleased him to do so and for no other reason. The young Pole had no special influence and very little money, but he had conspicuous talent and an untiring resolution to do the work put before him.

"He would have succeeded in anything," remarked Leschetizky, "in painting, in literature, in business, had he made up his mind to undertake it."—London Mail.

CRAFTS AND TRADES

In the Thirteenth Century—The Manufacture of Leather.

The manufacture of leather seems to have been important, showing that leather jerkins and breeches were commonly worn, says Notes and Queries. We have nineteen skynners, forty barkars, six saddlers, three cordeweners, 167 souters (shoemakers) and eight glovers. The surname feuster is a trade name denoting a maker of pack saddles.

The commonest trades are tylour and smyth, since one lived in almost every village. The taylours number 407, of whom 140 are called by the Latin name of cissor. In addition to 261 smyths, several are specialized. There are two arusmyths, three lokesmyths, three goldsmyths, five ferours (shoeing smiths) and six marshalls (farriers).

The wryght wrought both in wood and metal. The number catalogued is 186, of whom eighty-one are called by the Latin name faber (French favre); one of the few cases in which the Latin translation of a trade name has become a common surname. The wryghts' trade, like that of the smyths, was specialized. The arkwryght made the great arks or chests in which the clothes or meal were stored, and we find a ploughwryght, a wheelwryght, two shippewryghts, eleven cartwryghts and two glasenwryghts (glaziers), who were probably concerned with the windows of churches. Glass windows in houses were rare, as is still the case in Sicily or Egypt.

The bakesters are few (fifteen), suggesting that families baked their own bread. There are twenty-six butchers (fleshewer, bocher or carnifex), whence Labouchere, while the surname potter shows that this trade was in existence. The fysshers (forty-three) were opulent, being taxed twelve times as much as laborers.

SPENCERS THICK AS BERRIES.

The Keeper Had Heard That Story Many Times Before.

A half-yearly meeting of the directors who manage the Northampton private asylum had just broken up, and Lord Spencer, a member of that body, desiring to reach Althorp Park somewhat more quickly than customarily, determined to return home by a route which intersects the grounds of the asylum, and which is rarely used save as a summer parade for the unfortunate lunatics, says Wit and Wisdom. Arrived at the gate which separates the asylum from the outer world, Lord Spencer, much to his anoyance and disgust, found it securely locked. A keeper, however, happening to come in sight just at that moment, Lord Spencer lost no time in explaining to him the nature of his wishes.

The man surlily replied that his orders were to the effect that no one should pass through that gate except due notice were given to him by the authorities, and that, being a married man with a wife and a large family, he failed to understand what special advantage was to be gained by transgressing the rules and thus placing his situation in jeopardy. Observing that the fellow was growing obdurate, Lord Spencer thought it was best to reveal his name and rank, imagining that a knowledge of the same would recall the man to his senses. Nothing of the sort happened, however.

The stolid features of the keeper simply relaxed into a broad grin, and as he turned to depart he gently explained that Lord Spencers in that particular locality were as plentiful as blackberries in the autumn time. Explanations and expostulations were useless, the discomfited earl being forced to return the way he had come.

AUBURN WEEKLY COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY....FEBRUARY 23, 1899.

Keep 'Em In.

The Dawn seems surprised to find the COURIER in favor of keeping legislative officers in as long as they do well. but grows quite sharp over the idea of keeping Dr. Nusbaum in as senator, Permit us to say, Dr. Nusbaum was not in our mind at that time, although we know of no reason why anyone should call us to account if he had been. It is not likely he will want to run again, for he could not be elected in a district made up of DeKalb and Steuben. But we speak of the office in general. It is well known that the editor of this paper, has always been an earnest and consistent opponent of the unwise and vicious rule of "two terms and no more" for any legislative officer Keep him in till he can be of some use. Keep in a Congressman till he learns his business and makes his district known and felt. Do as was done with the old "Ninth Indiana" that kept Schuyler Calfax in Congress 12 or 14 years, till he became so useful that he was made speaker. Had our Twelfth district followed this cause. we might have had a speaker before now. But we were foolish enough to use this high office as a cheap decoration, to hang, first about the neck of one man and then another. We have favored more terms for Judge Colerick, more terms for Judge Lowry and more terms for Judge McClellan. We believe the last named could have been easily renominated and reelected, but he refused to try it. as he believed his party was committed to the two-term rule, although he never had bound himself by any promise. He remained loyal to what he believed the plan his party had adopted It makes no difference to us, who the man is, whether Robinson or some one else. It would be wisdom to take Robinson, for he has done well, and partly at least, learned the business. He could be vastly of more use to us than a new man, no matter how able.

Right to the Point.

There has always been more or less criticism by Lagrange county, on the great expenses of running the public business in DeKalb county. We may have been too liberal at times, but our records show we have let no deserving poor starve or freeze to death. During the recent cold snap, a man 86 years old died of want in that county, whether he froze or starved, the Democrat of that place is not certain. He died while his young wife was out trying to procure food for him and the baby. Why did not the authorities help this family? What were the neighbors doing while the old man froze and the baby cried for food and the mother was seeking aid? For our own part, we are willing to pay a little higher tax and feel that the needy are notgoing to perish by neglect.

Catching at Straws.

The Dispatch is hard to suit. Yesterday it bragged because on Saturday the COURIER said a new president would be elected in France, while on the same day, the Dispatch gave his name. A week or so ago, it whined because we got an obituary a day ahead of them Now these things happen often Sometimes one gets ahead and then the other, as when we told Friday about Mr Boland goning to Indianapolis, while the Dispatch had it on Monday, three days later. It is such an easy thing to get a scoop on the Dispatch and we are so used to it we never think of it.

Rev. John Rettig Dead.

Rev. John Rettig, known to many Auburn people, died yesterday by accidental poisoning, at the Orphan's Home of the Reformed church at Fort Wayne. He was feeling weak and ill, and went to take some whisky as a stimulant, and got hold of a bottle of carbolic acid. He saw his mistake at once, and active remedies were given him but he never rallied. He was in Auburn as pastor of the Reformed church about 1880, and when he left here, he became superintendent of the Orphan's Home and was in that work when he died.

Will Snell Coming

Senator Nusbaum telephoned here to Mr. Boland yesterday and Mrs. Snell. that her son, Will, who has been in the 15th regulars several years has been honorably discharged and is now on his way home. He was serving with his regiment in Cuba, being stationed at Puerto Principe. Parties here had united in signing a petition for his discharge and he is expected home the last of this week. His term of enlistment would not have expired till next fall.

THE COUNCIL MEETING.

City Fathers Put in a Long Session of Hard Work.

□There was a full board at the regular meeting last evenin, and a busy and important session was held. Among other things, Geo. Boland, was given the insurance on the new plant, putting on $2000, the same amount as was held on the old one. The reason for the small amount is the belief that the fire risk at the new one is very small as men are at work in the building all day and all night. They also decided to provide more hose for use in the building. The risk now, is $500 on building and $1,500 on contents, which includes machinery etc.

Frank Eckhart on behalf of the Eckhart Carriage Co., presented the contract between the town and that company. It states that the town had arranged with them to continue the water mains up to the factory from the point on East Ninth-st, where the town would stop, and so have the use of the water. The main on that part of 9th-st, is 6-inch pipe, and the rest of the way 4-inch. The arrangement as read in the contract submitted was agreed to as being fair for both.

The question of sewerage came up as unfinished business, and the attorney, Mr. Link read the points of law bearing on the matter. The law is voluminous and has been amended so often that only an expert can get at it. Mr. Link made it plain and we give the general points:

A majority of the property owners may petition the Board for a system of sewers, and it is decided to construct them. It can be done, and the expense then charged up to the lot owners. They will be given 20 years to pay it. making a 20th part each year, and they must pay 6 per cent interest on all unpaid assessments. The town must pay for the distances occupied by streets and alleys.

The matter was fully discussed and a vote taken, which decided the sewerage necessary, and that we proceed to it at once. Notice will be given so that any who have grievances or objections can have a full hearing, at the meeting March 17. The city engineer must make a plan for the entire system and then we can build such parts as we can this year, and the rest of it the next year etc., but all will be part of the same system.

BUTLER.

A. D. Morse is again at his post, after an illness of about two weeks.

Isaac Stiefel is upon the street again, after a very close call from hemorhage of the lungs.

Marshal Karle is at Battle Creek Sanitarium undergoing treatment. Last reports were hopeful.

Rev. Frech was able to fill his pulpit last Sunday.

The M. E. Sunday school is prospering under its new management.

The Church of God, Lutheran and Brethern are all holding revival efforts

The Bowman sawmill under the management of Geo. Drew, is doing quite a business.

The quietude of last Sunday afternoon was broken up by the onimous scream of the fire whistle. A dense smoke loomed up in the north part of town seemed hurrying in that direction. It was soon known that Frank Paul's dwelling was enveloped in flames The fire company seemed forever getting there and when the house, a good new one, was half burned down, they reached it only to find their hose fell short of throwing water on it, and had to go back to the waterworks building and get more. The wind was blowing a gale and finally when a stream was poured upon it, there was little left, saved a few charred fragments, so the loss proved a total one. We do not know exactly who was to blame, but the delay proved fatal. The house was built about six years ago by Peter Shoub, and cost between $600 and $800, upon which there is an insurance of $400 in J. A. Campbell agency. The greater part of the goods were saved. Mr. Paul is a young man just starting in life and the blow will be a hard one for him. He has the sympathy of many friends in his misfortune.

OBITUARY.

—John Applegate, was born in Noble County, Indiana, March 7th, 1860, and departed this life at his home in Auburn, Ind., Feb. 16th. 1899, at the age of 38 years, 9 months and 11 days Mr. Applegate was united in marriage to Miss Jane Bushong, Sept, 28th, 1882. To this happy union were born five children, two boys and three girls, all of whom are living. About ten years ago they moved from Avilla to Auburn, where they have since lived. Several years ago Mr. Applegate united with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, of which order he was a member at the time of his death. The order to which he belonged was to him and family during his illness and death, all that an order could be. They ministered to their wants until death came into their home. May God bless you in your work of love and mercy. The burdens of life, especially at a time like this are not so heavy when we have some one to lean upon. Mr. Applegate was a great sufferer during his last illness, but he endured it all with great patience. He was a kind father, and provided well for his family He was honest in his dealings with his fellowmen, and led quiet, peaceable life He leaves to mourn his death, a wife, five children and two brothers, beside many other friends. Our sympathies go out to the bereaved family in their deep sorrow and present sickness, and we lift our hearts to God in prayer in their behalf. The funeral was private on account of scarlet fever in the family, and took place Saturday at 10:30 a. m. Interment took place in the Wood lawn Cemetery. J. D. Brosy officiating

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Olive Holmes Kennedy was born in Seneca County, Ohio, Sept 11, 1835, and died near Waterloo, Ind, February 15th, 1899, aged 63 years, 5 months and 5 days.

She was one of a family of six children, Benjamin F. Orza, Mrs. G. T. Abbey, and Mrs. Samuel Kennedy survive her. Her parents came to DeKalb County in 1842, she being seven years of age at the time. She grew to womanhood in the home of her parents, and on April 20th, 1856, she was joined in marriage to William Kennedy, the occasion being a double wedding, her sister being married to a brother of the groom at the same time.

She was the mother of three children. One died in infancy, and Mrs. Norman T. Jackman and Ambrose, with the husband of her youth survive her. They have resided at the present home since 1872.

She has always displayed the most sterling womanly and wifely qualities standing ever at her post, a tower of strength and support of her husband, and a firm and reliable guide to her children.

She had been ailing for several years, but the final struggle was of short duration. She peepared the evening meal as usual for herself and husband. and did up the ordinary housework, when at 8:30 she was stricken, and at 12:40 a. m. her career on this earth was at an end. Cottage services were conducted by Rev. W. O. Butler at 10:30 a. m. on the 16th inst., and the remains were followed to the grave in the Waterloo cemetery, by a large number of relatives and neighbors.

Important to Mothers.

The manufacturers of Castoria have been compelled to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to familiarize the public with the signature of Charles H. Fletcher. This has been necessitated by reason of pirates counterfeiting the Castoria trade mark. This counterfeiting is a crime not only against the proprietors of Castoria, but against the growing generation. All persons should be careful to see that Castoria bears the signature of Charles H. Fletcher, if they would guard against the health of their children. Parents and mothers, in particular, ought to carefully examine the Castoria advertisements which have been appearing in this paper, and to remember that the wrapper of every bottle of genuine Castoria has the fac-simile signature of Charles H. Fletcher, ander whose supervision it has been manufactured continuously for over thirty years.

A MOST WONDERFUL CURE.

Eminent Physicians Pronounced it Consumption.

Dr. C. D. WARNER, Coldwater, Mich.

Dear Sir:—I have received great benefit from your White Wine of Tar Syrup I had a cough and the doctors gave up all hopes of my recovery and pronounced it consumption; I thought that it was death for me. I tried everything that I could hear of. Finally one of my friends prevailed upon me to use your White Wine of Tar syrup. I took one and one half bottles and am cured entirely Such medicine I can recommend to those who are afflicted as I was.

A Serious Question

There is a family in town with a number of children, and this part of the family is worthy of the assistance the charitable are giving them. The man has work, and could support his family, but he takes it for drink. Now shall we furnish a worthy family the things they need so that the husband may be able to use all his earnings in strong drink? Can we compel him to use his money for his family? These are serious questions, but they face us every day.

ST. JOE.

Henry Hull has been quite sick for several days with grip, fears are entertained that typhoid fever may set in.

Measles are almost epidemic in the C. A. Jenkins neighborhood. In the family of C. A. Washler. five were down at last reports.

Mrs. Geo. Hamm and mother visited with the two daughters of Mrs. Hamm in Garrett over Sunday.

—County superintendent, Coe, was in Concord township visiting schools last week. He visited the St. Joe schools Wednesday and Thursday, and we feel assured he found everything in apple pie order in our school for we feel sure no abler corps of teachers are found in the county, and it is only necessary to know their names in order to learn ab eir recommendations, and near they are: H. G. Provines, principal; M. J. Hadsell, grammar; Miss Bertha Hollabaugh, intermediate: Miss Addie Widney, primary.

Died at her home two and one half miles east of Newville, Wednesday Feb. 15, 1899, Mrs. James Weirs, better known as the widow of a Mr. Boland who was drowned in the St. Joe river near the Webster Mills 20 years ago.

Died Sunday night Feb. 19, 1899, at his home two miles east of St. Joe, Harmon Gee, aged about 72 years. Thus another of DeKalb's old pioneers has passed away. Uncle Harmon as he was familiarly called, came to Concord township in the late 30's or in the early 40's and has always continued to reside here. He leaves a widow, seven children and numerous relatives and friends to mourn his loss. To know uncle Harmon was to be his friend. His funeral will be from the Christian church in Coburn town of which society he has been a consistent member for over 50 years. The golden wedding of Mr. Gee and his estimable wife, was celebrated the first of this month. The family of the deceased have the heartfelt sympathy of the whole community.

St. Joe has had another burglarly, Mr. Free. Zigler's harness shop being the sufferer. Sometime during Saturday night five or six sides of leather were taken out of the shop, and of course on Sunday morning when the matter became known, all of St Joe s detective force was right in it. The country hereabouts was thoroughly gone over to try and find some track of the missing leather. Some time about noon the property was found by the chief of Tolice and Mr. Zigler, secreted under a pile of railroad iron, near the home of the late Jame Ryan. Mr. Zigler hauled his roll of leather out of its hiding place and was for taking it home at once, but the chief did not want it that way, he wanted it to stay right where it was and set a watch over it, and by so doing perhaps get Mr. Thief when he came to get his jewel. But how well they succeeded is easily told. The watch did so well that Mr. Thief succeeded in getting away with the leather during the afternoon or early evening. It must have been removed during the afternoon and in daylight, as we are loth to believe that it could have been taken when such men as Sol Barney, Rich Culbertson, Wm Beecks and a dozen more were on watch with guns and revolvers loaded to the muzzle

SEDAN.

Mr. Harrison Jones, an old pioneer of Fairfield township died at his home on Sunday morning Feb. 19. Mr. Jones was one of the oldest men in Fairfield township, He had been quite poorly for several years, and this winter the dreaded lagrippe set in and in his enfeebled condition they were unable to conquer it. Thus one by one the old pioneers are leaving us and the place that once knew them will know them no more.

W. H. Crane and sons spent Sunday in Kendallville, visiting friends.

Mr. Lloyd Treesh and wife of Kendallville visited father and mother L. W. Treesh over Sunday.

O. L. Wheaton made a trip to the Hub today on business.

Rev. Campbell closed a series of meetings at this place last week.

Elsworth Hamilton will move to Auburn this spring.

For Good Roads.

TO ALL CONCERNED:—There will be a public meeting in the school house at Hesse, Cassel, Saturday evening, Feb 25, 1899, to solicit free subscriptions for hauling gravel on our road. All come out and do something, and make it a success.

Club Notes.

Saturday's meeting of the L. L. C. was a very enjoyable and profitable one. The subject for the day was Chicago, a continuance of last week's subject except that this session was to be devoted to Literary Chicago.

Mrs. Lewis was leader and gave as she always does an excellent paper. She said that Chicago had not until within a short time been interested in any great degree in literature, having been too busy in building up her great commercial interests, but now under the influence of her great men and women would soon become a literary center. She had asked to assist her several members of the club, and assigned them subjects that she wished brought out. First, Miss Hague, gave a brief and concise account of the Chicago University from her personal experiences. Miss Margaret Buckley gave quite fully the aims and results of the grand work of Armour Institute, mentioning the different departments of work, which were many and varied. Mrs. sprott gave a short account of the libraries of Chicago. Mrs. Mary Rose had for her subject the noted men of learning and influence, giving a short sketch of many men whose names are familiar to us and many of whom we have had the pleasure of hearing, having lectured in Auburn. It was pleasant to have them thus recalled to our memory. The newspapers of Chicago and their editors was the subject for which Mrs. Emanuel was responsible and from her much valuable information was gleaned as to the vast number newspapers published in Chicago, and their influence on the public. She stated that Victor F. Lawron proprietor of the Chicago Daily News and "Chicago Record" would not publish a Sunday edition, she further stated that papers in almost every language of the world were published in Chicago.

Clubs and Club Women was the subject given to Mrs. Barns. She spoke more especially of the influence of the Woman's Club, a large organization of nearly one thousand members and its influence in municipal affairs of the city, it having been instrumental in bringing about many reforms.

This work was followed by a paper by Mrs. Swineford of "From Chicago to Denver" being a personal account of her trip to Denver last June to attend the Biennial of the Federation of Women's Clubs. This was nicely arranged and her description of the rivers, plains and mountains, was excellent. Three minute talks on Chicago was the next exercise in order and Mrs. Nusbaum gave hers as, "A Day in Chicago" accompanied by her young son. This was given in a pleasing manner, relating many little incidents that occured on the way and while in the city.

Mrs. Ford's talk was on the noble work and influence of Hull House She gave many interesting items of importance. Mrs. Guild who was to have given a "talk" was unable to be present. The club had as visitors Mrs. Moss and her friend who is visiting her, Mrs. Egnew of Boulder, Col After current news and criticisms the club adjourned to meet with Mrs Holmes next Saturday.

The Up-to-Date Club did not hold a meeting last Friday evening on account of the party given by Hubert Hartman, and as the members of the club were all his friends and were invited, it was not thought advisable to hold a session. The club meets next time with Nona McBride.

The Reading Club met with Mrs. Aber last Wednesday and spent the time as they have for the last few meetings in preparing for the Art Loan to be held this week for the Auburn Band. They will have no meeting this week.

The Jolly Eight met with Allie Mitchell Saturday afternoon and had their usual good times. Games and plays were the order of the day, and this was followed by refreshments that were enjoyed by all. They meet next Saturday with Bessie Baker.

The Culture Club held its meeteng with Mrs. Etta Ryan last Saturday afternoon. The distance kept a number away so the attendence was not large. Responses to roll call were sayings of Washington Mrs. Moody ably conducted the lesson which was German Literature. and treated more especially of the works of Parsival, Hansachy and Martin Luther, a discussion covered the time of other German authors from 1250 to 1530. Miss Laura Ober asked to be excused for an indefinite time from her duties as secretary, as owing to continued illness in her home she wou'd not be able to be present regularly. This was granted her. The club greatly regrets this as she is an efficient and faithful officer. Mrs. Shaffer was appointed to fill the vacancy until such time as Miss Ober can again attend. After a business session the club adjourned.

He Knew His Business

Boys are more wide awake than they are given credit for. Auditor Seiler's little boy, Waldo, is in the office at odd hours, and had evidently noticed that every man who got a county order had to sign the stub on the book. The other day, one of the commissioners had left his order lying on the desk and gone into the other room for something. Waldo happened to be alone in the room and when the commissioner returned and picked up his order, the lad called out in a decisive way, "Don't you take that order till you have signed the book." When it was explained that the book had been signed all right he seemed to feel relieved.

Struck By a Train

A special reaches the COURIER from Waterloo, that C. C. Boyer, well known here, and at that place, was struck by a train while walking on the track about half way between Waterloo and Butler. He was going west and on meeting a train, stepped off on the other track and waf hit by a train going east. Both legs were broken or cut off between the foot and knee, one arm broken. and was hurt about the head. The accident occured about seven o'clock. He was taken to Butler.

Queer Power

Even the waves of the sea and the tides are likely to be utilized to furnish power for the use of man. A device has been completed, to have the rising and falling of waves, fill reservoirs with compressed air to use as power. The tides are to be used to fill ponds of water at high tide, then the water is allowed to flow out at low tide and so furnish water power for mills. Queer plan, both of them, but they may prove valuable.

—A new cure for the grip is going the rounds of the papers. It may not be as attractive as Geo. Grund's cure, which is being copied from the COURIER in all parts of the state, but it will do no harm to try. It is to put a half teaspoonful of sulphur into the shoes once a week.

—The boys who went south on the recent trip say the weather down there was too cold for comfort. Although not near as cold as here the damp air made them suffer more. Photographing a Comet.

The astronomer, like other people, sometimes finds what he is not looking for. This is especially likely to happen in making photographs of the heavens. Many asteroids, and occasionally a comet, have been unexpectedly found in that manner. It now appears that a small comet, known as Chase's, was thus accidentally photographed on at least four plates which were exposed in November to catch the Leonid meteors. The comet happened to be near that point in the sky from which the meteors appear to radiate, and, although it was invisible to the eye, the faithful sensitive plates took note of its presence.

The Kendallville News copies from the Garrett Clipper an article that puts the facts on the wrong side. They pity "poor Marion Kinney" because "he was sent to jail for picking up loose coal along the railroad track at Butler." Where they got this idea, we don't know. If these papers had copied from a reliable source, as they might easily have done, they would know that Kinney was punished for stealing coal from the company's coal bins.

—The twenty millions we agreed to pay Spain for the Philippines has been voted by Congress. This is right and proper. We had ratified the treaty that contained the promise to pay it. We should close up all the points of the treaty as soon as we can. That will end our troubles with Spain. Then we can take up as new business the question as to whether we shall keep the Philippines or let them go free. Spain will have no more right to them. We can give them away or sell them if we want them ourselves.

French Follies.

Among the "follies" which French women are wearing these days is a long gold chain with a microscopic watch, finely chased and made in imitation of a tower clock, with a cock and an owl for ornaments. The same design appears in another and less costly form, that of a small pendant watch in oxidized steel, attached to a narrow black moire ribbon. A bracelet with an alarm watch attached to it deserves a prize for ingenuity. The watch is set in the ordinary way and at the appointed hour it releases a little needle, which pricks the arm of the wearer, and thus draws her attention to the time, which might otherwise pass unnoticed. Theater muffs are features of this winter's Paris toilets. They are soft, fluffy, fragile things, made of silk, gauze or lace, ornamented with bands of flowers. They are worn suspended from chains of crystal.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Frozen Ground and Explosions.

Last March a magazine containing 300 quarts of nitroglycerin exploded, and much damage was done by the shock in the village of Wellsville, N. Y., about one mile distant. A week later another magazine, in the same place, containing 600 quarts of nitroglycerin, exploded, but although the shock was felt much farther away than before, no damage was caused except in the immediate neighborhood of the magazine. An explanation of the difference in effects of the two explosions is suggested by the fact that when the first occurred the ground was firmly frozen, but at the time of the second explosion a general thaw had occurred.

Secured License Too Soon.

At Columbus, Kan., the other day a young man took out a license to marry a girl of his acquaintance, and not until the fact that the license had been issued appeared in the papers did it occur to him to ask the young woman whether she would have him. She not only refused to marry him, but has brought suit to recover heavy damages.

ART LOAN SCENES

The Courier Reporter Takes a Few Snap Shots of The Pictures.

THE loyal Auburn citizen starts out to help the band by patronizing the Art Loan. So he takes some spare change, puts his overcoat over his arm and is off, telling his family that if it is a good show he will be back after them.

As he saunters along the business houses on Seventh street he is struck with the idea, that as he is going out among the pick of the town, he might as well slick up. So he goes into Charlie Pommert's, Geo. Grund's or Jack Bland's and gets a shave.

Every booth he passes displays some new attraction and he stops to study it over and chat awhile with the person in charge. He admits that he listened to the free music of the band on several evenings last summer, and hopes they will now be appreciated by a liberal patronage.

He purchases some articles to please his wife to help the good cause. Then he buys a ticket on the homeliest man—has fun at the fishing pond, and concludes to stay long enough to hear the fine music.

The Mexican and Indian curiosities, the alpenstock, the articles from Damascus, the basket made of grass tight enough to hold water and a hundred other things in that showcase detain him for some time.

Oh! but isn't it all lovely. I have had my fortune told at the Gypsy booth. I have got some of that lovely needle work and am to have several pieces of hand painted china. Pa says there is nothing too expensive to buy when the money goes to the band.

This is the picture of the homeliest man the man who is to get the most votes We have not got his name yet, and he don't look like I. M. Zent, W. H. McIntyre, S. C. Snyder, Will Schaab, Chas. McClellan, Mike Long. Hugh Culbertson or Jim Lewis, who are all avowed candidates and hustling for votes. They want that nigger doll.

Over five hundred have visited the Art Loan so far, and nothing of the kind as shown in this picture has been registered as yet. We took in $10 the first evening, and the COURIER, on behalf of the band, thanks the public for its liberal patronage and hopes to see you all, and and your friends, with us tomorrow evening.

Wants More Satisfaction.

Editor Higley still has troubles of his own. Recently Vernier sent his attorney and another friend to have the editor take back something he had said. A look over the paper don't show any "take back," Editors are not in the habit of taking back anything truthful they have said. On the other hand, any editor will cheerfully and frankly correct any wrong statement he may have made it is a very easy thing for an editor to be deceived in a matter. It may be told to him in good faith by men who believe they are making a correct statement. But when it is shown to be incorrect, it should always be corrected

GEORGE WASHINGTON, the hero, has always obscured George Washington the man, and yet the sterling qualities of the man made the hero. Whenever the two characters have been distinguished they have made separate studies, with the result that one class of writers make him a sublime genius and the other a commonplace man made great by circumstances. Washington was as great in wisdom and foresight and as unerring in judgment as a statesman as he was as a soldier. His physical endowments, his qualities of mind, his habits, education and training—all tended to round him out and develop him into a perfectly balanced man. No one faculty being developed above another gave his life a simplicity that appeared commonplace, but it was the simplicity of genius. Though a man of great dignity he was easily approached. An aristocrat by lineage he was a man of the people. Extremely modest he was fond of state and of ceremony. Though his outdoor life as a surveyor, a soldier and a farmer gave him a rough exterior, a rugged physique and robust health it did not quench his taste for gay uniforms or fashionable apparel. That he was not free from vanity is apparent in the thirty odd portraits of himself, a few painted in the effulgent regalia of war and all in the habiliments of a cavalier. He was as straight as an Indian, six feet two inches tall, with large bones and broad shoulders, wide at the hips; feet large, requiring a No. 11 shoe, and Lafayette said his hands would have been a curiosity for a medical museum. This may explain why he rarely shook hands. He weighed 210 pounds.

To his clothing Washington devoted much thought and attention, not only as a young man, but all his life. A journal written when he was sixteen has several long and elaborate entries about how "to have my coats made." In 1754 he records having bought a "superfine blue broadcloth coat with silver trimmings," "6 prs. of the very neatest shoes" and "2 prs. of fashionable mix'd or marble color'd silk hose." It is evident that he always strove to be in the fashion. During Washington's presidency a caller describes him as being dressed in purple satin, and at one of his levees, he was clad "in black velvet; his hair in full dress, powdered and gathered behind in a large silk bag; yellow gloves on his hands, holding a cocked hat with a cockade in it, the edges adorned with a black feather about an inch deep. He wore knee and shoe buckles, and a long sword with a finely wrought and polished steel hilt; the scabbard was white polished leather." Wherever he happened to be Washington was constantly demanding a washerlady. The bill of his laundress for the week succeeding his inauguration was for "6 ruffled shirts, 2 plain shirts, 8 stocks, 3 pair silk hose, 2 white hand., 2 silk hand., 1 pr. flanl. drawers, 1 hair nett." He drove from his residence to the Senate in a cream-colored chariot with richly painted panels. His bootblack once failed to polish the general's huge boots all the way up—a task performed every morning—and the father of his country beat the luckless darky over the head with them.

Washington was hot-tempered. He wanted John Marshall, afterward the famous justice, to run for Congress and sent for him to explain his wishes. Marshall told Washington he was too poor, he could not afford to give up his business and incur the expense. While thus opposing Washington's wishes Marshall says he never received such a torrent of abuse in his life. He feared Washington would jump on him from across the table, but the row ended in Marshall remaining Washington's guest for a week, and then running for Congress and being elected. Washington was thoroughly upright and honest in his dealings with men. James Parton said he had a genius for rectitude. Jefferson, who did not like him, said his justice was the most inflexible he had ever known and that no motives of friendship or hatred were able to bias his decision. Washington was a faithful attendant at church and was a vestryman, but he took no active part in church affairs outside its business relations.

WHERE HONOR IS DUE.

If you please, you may laud George up to the skies,
As the man who won battles and never told lies.
You may tell of his virtues in story and song;
How he carefully sifted the right from the wrong;
Of his wisdom in counsel, his bravery in war;
How he drove the grim British away from our shore.
You may cherish forever his hat and his sword,
And up to the skies our brave Washington laud.
Long, long may we hold him an example to youth,
For honesty, temperance, courage and truth.

While we gaze with delight on a structure so grand,
Let us honor the builder who drew out the plan,
And added, through years of infinite care,
Small stone upon stone, firmly fixing them there;
And though this may be but a girl's point of view,
Let us give credit where it is certainly due,
And pluck from his laurels one leaf for another,
So three cheers for our George, and four for his mother.
—Youth's Companion.

WASHINGTON'S SECRETARY.

Tobias Lear, Who Witnessed the First President's Death.

When Gen. Washington died on Dec. 14, 1799, his private secretary, Tobias Lear, sat down and wrote a full account of the melancholy event. His account is a most important document to biographers, but it has rarely, if ever, been published in full and the manuscript has been supposed lost.

Tobias Lear was born at Portsmouth, N. H., Sept. 10, 1762, and died at Washington, D. C., Oct. 11, 1816. He was graduated from Harvard in 1783, and in 1785 became private secretary to Gen. Washington. In 1802 he was appointed consul general at Santo Domingo, and in 1804 consul general at Algiers. In 1805 he negotiated a treaty of peace with Tripoli. Col. Lear's manuscript, above referred to, has been supposed to be lost, but the editor of McClure's Magazine has discovered it in the possession of a descendant of the writer, and prints it entirely. Col. Lear describes Washington's last moments as follows:

"About 10 o'clock he made several attempts to speak before he could effect it. At length he said: 'I am just going; have me decently buried, and do not let my body be put into the vault in less than three days after I am dead.'

"I bowed assent, for I could not speak. He then looked at me again and said: 'Do you understand me?'

"I replied, 'Yes.'

"'"Tis well,' said he.

"About ten minutes before he expired (which was between 10 and 11 o'clock) his breathing became easier; he lay quietly; he withdrew his hand from mine, and felt his own pulse. I saw his countenance change. I spoke to Dr. Craik, who sat by the fire. He came to the bedside. The general's hand fell from the wrist. I took it in mine and put it into my bosom. Dr. Craik put his hands over his eyes. And he expired without a struggle or a sigh.

"While we were fixed in silent grief, Mrs. Washington (who was sitting at the foot of the bed) asked with a firm and collected voice: 'Is he gone?'

"I could not speak, but held up my hand as a signal that he was no more.

"'"Tis well,' said she in the same voice; 'all is over, and I shall soon follow him. I have no more trials to pass through.'"

Simple in His Tastes.

George Washington was simple in his tastes, and during his youth he was a hearty eater, but was not particular as to what he had. He wanted plain food and plenty of it. During his later years he ate very little. His breakfast at Mount Vernon was of corn cakes, honey and tea, with possibly an egg, and after that he ate no more till dinner. He kept, however, a good table, and usually had friends with him. A book written by Maclay gives his experiences when he was in the United States Senate at the time Washington was President. Maclay dined with Washington a number of times, and scattered through his diary are bits of gossip about Washington.

WASHINGTON AS AN OLD MAN.

Age Found Him Nobly Generous—Dignified at All Times.

"You will meet, sir, an old gentleman riding alone, in plain drab clothes, a broad-brimmed white hat, a hickory switch in his hand, and carrying an umbrella with a long staff, which is attached to the saddle-bow. That person, sir, is Gen. Washington." This delightful portraiture of Washington in his old age, when the storms had passed and life ran in quiet groves by the side of his beloved Potomac, was drawn by young Custis, adopted son of the patriarch, and intended to assist the recognition of Washington by a gentleman who had asked to be directed to him.

THE WASHINGTON COAT.

The wish of Washington when old "to move gently down the stream of life until I sleep with my fathers," was granted.

And yet, his latter days at Mount Vernon were busy days; for, every morning, rain or shine, he would mount his horse and make the circuit of his farms, a distance of between twelve and fifteen miles. Not a field or orchard, barn or cabin, wood or clearing, but what passed daily beneath his watchful eyes. His journal tells of a morning spent in teaching a rebellious coral honeysuckle vine to entwine the trunk of some stately forest tree; of the clearing away of the underbrush from a grove of favorite pines; of making drills for the sowing of holly-berries, etc.

Each day he gave personal directions to his overseers, regulating almost with the care of a father the busy life of the negro world, and sometimes even attending directly to their needs and complaints.

In a field of the richest grass and clover Mount Vernon could afford, a tall old sorrel horse, with white face and legs, cropped, in its season, the luxuriant herbage or stood meditatively, in the shade, doubtless dreaming of passed glories. Every day while making his round of the farms, Washington never failed to stop before this field, lean over the fence and call, "Nelson."

At the sound of his voice the old steed would prick up his ears and run neighing a greeting, to curve his neck under the caressing touch of his master's hand. This was the war horse, "Nelson," whose strong limbs had borne his master safely through the carnage and tumult of many a bloody battle to the crowning honor at Yorktown, where, sitting on his back, the commander-in-chief of the American armies had received the surrender of Lord Cornwallis. In this active, unostentatious way passed the last years of the noblest man of his age—perhaps of any age.

KNOCKED WASHINGTON DOWN.

Father of His Country Given a Black Eye by a Virginia Politician.

Washington was an eminently fair man. He had a quick temper, but as a rule he kept it under control. Sometimes, however, it got the best of him. This was the case once in Alexandria, Va., when Washington was knocked down by Lieut. Payne. Payne was a candidate for the Legislature against Fairfax of Alexandria. Washington supported Fairfax, and when he met Payne he made a remark that Payne considered an insult, and Payne knocked him down. The story went like lightning through the town that Col. Washington was killed, and some of his troops who were stationed at Alexandria rushed in and would have made short work of Payne had Washington not prevented them. He pointed to his black eye and told them that this was a personal matter and that he knew how to handle it. Every one thought that this meant a duel. The next day Payne got a note from Washington asking him to come to the hotel. He expected a duel, but went. Washington, however, was in an amiable mood. He felt that he had been in the wrong, and said: "Mr. Payne, I was wrong yesterday, but if you have had sufficient satisfaction, let us be friends." There was a decanter of wine and two glasses on the table which Washington had ordered to smooth over the quarrel. The two drank together and became such strong friends after that that Payne was one of the pall-bearers at Washington's funeral.

Gen. Washington's Courtesy.

In the Century there is an article by Martha Littlefield Phillips, giving "Recollections of Washington and His Friends." The author is a granddaughter of the youngest daughter of Gen. Nathaniel Greene, and she tells the following story in the words of her grandmother, concerning a visit of the latter to Washington at Philadelphia:

"One incident which occurred during that visit was so comical in itself, and so characteristic of Washington, that I recall it for your entertainment. Early in a bright December morning, a droll-looking old countryman called to see the President. In the midst of their interview breakfast was announced; and the President invited the visitor, as was his hospitable wont on such occasions, to a seat beside him at the table. The visitor drank his coffee from his saucer; but lest any grief should come to the snowy damask, he laboriously scraped the bottom of his cup on the saucer's edge before setting it down on the tablecloth. He did it with such audible vigor that it attracted my attention, and that of several young people present, always on the alert for occasions of laughter. We were so indiscreet as to allow our amusement to become obvious. Gen. Washington took in the situation, and immediately adopted his visitor's method of drinking his coffee, making the scrape even more pronounced than the one he reproduced. Our disposition to laugh was quenched at once."

POLITICS OF THE DAY

DEMOCRATIC POLICY.

A student of present political conditions cannot but reach the conclusion that it is more than likely that the Democratic party can secure a majority of the electoral votes next year, and, also, return a majority to the House of Representatives.

It is true that we are having much industrial activity, but long before the campaign of 1900 it will be apparent to the common people that the profits from all this activity have not come to them, but to those who engineer and manage the trusts and corporations which now so largely control all business enterprises. It is true the present Republican administration has conducted a successful campaign against the Spaniards, but it has produced along with the glory a number of intricate problems. Whether it can save national honor in their solution is a matter of speculation and conjecture.

Very clearly this nation's strength cannot be used to widen trade at the sacrifice of any people's desire for independence. These problems are yet those of the Republican party. If they be solved by it, then that party will be entitled to the credit; if not, then it must suffer the criticism for failure. But, in any case, no substantial advantages will accrue to the body of the people.

Evidently the Democratic party in 1900 will find its greatest strength along the lines of its traditional policy. It came into existence through its assertion of individualism, and its logical mission now is to rescue the people from the threatened serfdom to corporate control of industrial activities.

Within the last two years corporations aggregating a capital of $4,000,000,000 have been organized for the purpose of controlling the manufacturing industries of this country. In competition with these, individual enterprise is paralyzed, when not brutally beaten down. The employer becomes the employe, and—if not by wise laws obviated—in the near future all the people will be mere "hands" in the employ of these monstrous corporations.

What would be the character of citizenship under such a social regime? The Democratic party must formulate and advocate measures to check this demoralization. The Republican party is powerless to do so. Its organization is controlled by the managers of these market forestallers—these bloodless and soulless combinations.

The single gold standard is a weapon in the hands of those who support these combinations. Wise statesmanship by the Democrats will lead to the broadest organization of those who are opposed to having the entire credit of this country resting on gold alone. No man should be barred from participating in this war against the single gold standard by any barren declaration.

In 1896 the Republicans were still claiming to be bimetallists. They make no such professions now, but openly declare in favor of measures designed to fasten on us forever the single gold standard.

The Democrats stand now for the joint standard. Silver and gold at any ratio is infinitely better than gold alone. The fight must be made in that way, and in that way can be won.

The Democratic party will always remain opposed to the protective tariff robbery, and cannot consistently wage war against monopolies and trusts without waging war against a system of taxation which is always unjust to the mass of the people, and is often instrumental in seating and strengthening monopolies.

If the Democratic party should rise above the level of mere legendary traditions and frame a platform consistent with the existing vital problems to be solved, it will be triumphant in the next national election.

Then will come conditions when the humblest may compete with the highest for wealth and distinction—when the results of prosperity will not be confined to corporations and the lordly few, but will extend to the many-handed form of toil in factory and field.—Chicago Democrat.

Rocks in McKinley's Path.

Administrations have been wrecked before this on smaller rocks than those in President McKinley's course to-day. His work has in many respects commended itself to the people, but they have had more than enough of the effort to gloss over and hide the iniquities of army administration under Alger, Eagan and the beef contractors, and they do not relish the present attempt to change the issue from beef to Miles.—Rochester Herald.

Responsibility for Bloodshed.

There are principles more important to the country than the acquisition of any territory or even than the prevention of bloodshed. And of these the greatest is that which the senate minority has been upholding in insisting upon its constitutional right to pass upon the treaty, undismayed by the outcry that has been raised against them. Address to the responsibility for bloodshed, it will remain for future history to determine whether that should be borne by those who have opposed or by those who have promoted the policy of subjugation.—Baltimore News.

Twenty Trusts a Day.

In one day twenty trusts were incorporated at Trenton, N. J., ranging in capitalization from $32,000,000 to $50,000.

Among these trusts were those intended to control whisky, milk, butter, cheese, gas and electric light power and heat.

Never before in the history of this nation were so many trusts given legal existence in a single day. The situation is indeed alarming when twenty combines, all intent on "reducing the cost of production" and consequently resolved to cut down the wages of labor, enter upon the field of their endeavors at the same moment.

That the United States law against trusts is a dead letter needs no argument. Facts speak louder than words, and the attitude of Attorney General Griggs is a confirmatory commentary on the facts. This officer, sworn to enforce the law, has notified the trust managers that his office is not "hunting business."

But the trusts are hurting business, and as long as Griggs of New Jersey, Griggs, the greatest trust attorney in the nation; Griggs, the friend of combines, remains at the head of the attorney general's department trusts will go right on defying the law and robbing the people.

The Expected Happens.

The opening of actual hostilities between the American army in the Philippines and the native insurgent forces, however deplorable it may be, comes in the category of those events that are expected and happen in accordance with the expectation. The leading men of brains, independence and character in both the Democratic and Republican parties have repeatedly warned the government of the impending danger, while the civilized world wondered at the inconsistency of a policy that accorded the promise of independence to the Cubans, within five hours of our shores, and denied that promise to the Filipinos ten thousand miles away. But warnings, entreaties and the oft-expressed sentiment of enlightened humanity on both sides of the ocean—everywhere except in England—have been persistently ignored.

If the country is to be thus plunged into an unwelcome conflict it will become the duty of citizenship to support the administration in all active and conscientious measures looking to a speedy termination of hostilities. But the administration will be held responsible for the war—for the desolation of the Philippines, the sacrifice of American lives and the depletion of the United States treasury which will result during the next fifty years.—Columbus Post.

Day of Awful Significance.

The day when the American senate formally refused to reaffirm the great principle of the declaration of independence that governments derive "their just powers from the consent of the governed" may well be termed a day of awful significance in American history. Fortunate will it be for the United States of America if in some future century, when the passions and prejudices of our time live only in recorded history, the thoughtful historian does not place his finger upon Feb. 6, 1899, and write: "Here began the decline of popular government in America."

Sundry Silly Bill.

It is nearly time for some genius in Congress to invent a new way of raiding the Treasury. The river and harbor bill as a method of legislative burglary is overworked. Included from year to year in the ridiculous items that make up the bulk of the measure are always projects of genuine merit and importance. But the time will come when the larceny will cease to be a joke, and then projects which have merit will suffer the fate of those which have not.—St. Paul Globe.

Facts Not to Be Forgotten.

Stirring events in army circles at Manila must not be allowed to interfere with the investigation of the beef scandal and the charges of General Miles. The country still has an incompetent Secretary of War, and there is a state of affairs in the management of the army which is exceedingly dangerous as well as unsatisfactory to the country.—Peoria Journal.

JUST A TRIFLE WORRIED.

"Perhaps President McKinley is not afraid of the currency question, and then, on the other hand, perhaps he is afraid of it."—Chicago Democrat.

HENRY GEORGE, THE PRINTER.

Noah Brooks Tells How the Famous Writer Became a Journalist.

In an article on "Henry George in California," Noah Brooks tells the readers of the Century how the political economist became a newspaper writer:

In the autumn of 1866 I was the editor of the "Times," a daily newspaper published in San Francisco. One day, the foreman of the composing-room, after disposing of business concerning which he had come to my desk, somewhat hesitatingly told me that one of the compositors had written several editorial articles, by way of experiment; and they were very good, so the foreman thought. But the young printer had destroyed his productions, after passing them around among his intimates in the office. Would the editor-in-chief like to look at one of the young man's writings? I said I should be glad to see one, and if he sent me anything worth printing it should be used, and the writer should be paid for it.

A few hours later, a bundle of sheets of Manila paper was laid on my desk by Mr. Turrell, the foreman, who, with a smile, said that the young printer had happened to have ready an article which he was willing to submit to my judgment. I read the paper, at first with a preoccupied mind and in haste, and then with attentiveness and wonder. Considering the source from which it came, the article was to me remarkable. I recollect that it was written in a delicate, almost feminine hand, in lines very far apart, and making altogether a bulk which had at first misled me as to the actual length of the disquisition. The article was not long, and was entitled "The Strides of a Giant;" it was descriptive of the gradual extension of the Asiatic frontiers of Russia, the changes that had taken place in the relations of the European powers, and the apparent sympathetic approach of the United States and Russia toward each other.

In some doubt as to the originality of this paper, sent to me by a young and unknown printer, I first looked through the American and foreign reviews on my table, then, satisfying myself that the article had not been "cribbed from any of these publications, I changed the title to "The Two Giants," and printed it as the "leader" in the "Times" of November 30, 1866. Let me say that when I told my foreman that, surprised by the excellence of the English, and the erudition exhibited in the article, I had some doubts concerning the originality of the young printer's work, he warmly replied that the young fellow was a thoroughly honest man and would no more borrow ideas than he would steal. Oh, no; my good friend Turrell would risk his reputation on the young compositor's honesty.

The foreman said that, if I were curious to see the young man, I would find him at a certain case, so many cases from the entrance to the composing room. I looked with some interest, and was disappointed to find that my vigorous and well-informed contributor was a little man, so short that he had provided himself with a bit of plank on which he stood at a case too tall for him. He was apparently then about twenty-five years old, but in fact was ten years older, as he was born in 1831. His auburn hair was thin, and the youthfulness of his face was disputed by the partial baldness of his head; his blue eyes were lambent with animation and a certain look of mirthfulness.

Near acquaintance with Henry George confirmed me in my strong prepossession in his favor. He was bright, alert, good-humored, and full of fun; yet his talk showed that he was a thinker, that he thought independently of all writers and that he had wide, serious and original views of life. The man's manner, his simplicity, his diffidence, and absolute sincerity, captivated me, and I liked him thoroughly and at once. He continued to contribute to the editorial page of the paper, sometimes with a fertility of production that dismayed me; and, after a few weeks, a vacancy having suddenly happened in my editorial staff, I invited George to the place. He was given a comfortable salary, and from that time forth he set type no more.

Compared with Jerusalem, Damascus is Parisian. The Jerusalem air presses heavily with its melancholy past. Half a score of sects make it a rendezvous for pillage or for mummery, and its memorials of imperishable events have to be looked at through the dust of perished dynasties. It is mystic, solemn, arcane. Damascus is practical, positive, and even merry. The wail of Israel sounds along the arid valleys of Zion, but Damascus sings a voluptuous carol by means of its ice-cool, fabled river. The tinkle of its bells mingles forever with the gurgle of its waters, and above all you hear the silvery laughter of the Syrian girls, and catch the dancing humor of their dark eyes through their little veils. Jerusalem has its austere character to sustain. Its temples are tombs. Its weight of poignant history keeps it grave. But in Damascus you are under no obligations to the past that the present cannot make you forget. Its innumerable shuttles and armories call you back to the bustling exigencies of life. The coffee bazars defy melancholy. So this stranded city on the shores of time—the gold on whose mosques never corrodes—basks in the sun and eats figs merrily just as it did when Saul of Tarsus journeyed that way.—A. C. Wheeler in Harper's Magazine.

Begging in Various Countries.

In London begging is a pastime, in Fiji it is a necessity, in Genoa it is a pleasure, and in Shanghai it is a crime, but in Ceylon it has achieved the most glorious acme that the combined forces of science and art can possibly reach. Begging is not practiced in Ceylon. It has reached the great stage of perfection. Rich and poor alike beg with equal facility. The first thing that the wee, bronze babies are taught is to hold out their hands for the coppers of the kind-hearted traveler, and even the gray-haired, yellow-gowned priests of Buddah will appeal for a pittance with a look of remorse that would stagger the starved denizens of the Bowery. The Ceylonese will beg for anything from a rupee to a red-hot stove. He will leave a square meal to beg for an old coat, and the more one refuses him the more persistent become his efforts.

WOMAN'S LIFE IN DAWSON.

Writes Interestingly of Her Experience in a Queer Klondike Tent.

Mrs. M. R. Hill has written an interesting letter to her mother at Nyack, N. Y., from the Klondike. Mrs. Hill, after her marriage, went with her husband to seek gold. She has had many thrilling experiences and gone through much hardship. Mrs. Hill is one of the few women in the gold region, and aids her husband in prospecting. Her mother has received several gold nuggets, which Mrs. Hill found.

Mrs. Hill writes from Dawson, on December 12. She tells of going from Dawson to Stampede Gulch, a distance of seventeen miles, one Sunday. It was "just about freezing." She cam back on Wednesday and it was then 20 degrees below zero. It was 25 below when they reached Dawson.

"I walked back in five hours," she writes. "I had on a fur cap and it came down around my neck and ears and over my forehead to my eyes. I had a veil, folded four times, tied around the lower part of my face. I wore a short dress, moccasins, leggins and a heavy cape. I did not feel the cold, but I was just white with frost, and a neighbor had to tear the things from me. From that time on the thermometer kept going down until it got to the bottom, 45 below. This lasted for a week, and then it grew warmer, until now it is about at the freezing point.

"I believe we get a little sun yet, but where I am we can't see it. It is dark at 4 p. m. and light at 9 a. m. While waiting for spring, so that we can prospect again, we try to sleep thirteen hours out of the twenty-four, and then wonder what we will do the remainder of the day.

"We have had some snow, but not as much as usual. It is about eight inches deep now. The prices of provisions still advance. There is plenty of food, but the companies keep the prices up, and it costs a miner $5 a day to live.

"I do not intend to leave here until I have made a fortune. This life agrees with me and I am actually getting fat. The trouble with many here is that they get discouraged too soon and give it up. I am one of the few women here who entered to stick to it until we 'strike it rich.'

"Our house is a tent fixed up on boards to make the walls six feet high. It is 10x17 inside. Outside it is boarded up to the eaves, and about seven inches of sawdust packed between the boards and tent. Then we have six inches of dead air space between the tent roof, and then another canvas roof. We have a flat ceiling of canvas and a board floor. We have a door and two windows, and manage to live comfortably."

The Mule as a Warrior.

Some years ago a very ludicrous experiment was tried in a far Western camp with a view to extending the range of mules' military service. It occurred to an inventive officer that this long suffering animal might be used as a sort of automatic guncarriage in fighting the Indians.

So a mule was brought out and a small mountain howitzer strapped upon his back, the muzzle pointing tailward. Then he was led to the middle of the parade ground, and in the presence of an interested circle of officers and men, the gun was pointed and the fuse lighted. But the sputtering of the powder aroused an ill timed curiosity in the mule. He twisted around his head, but couldn't quite reach the fizzing thing, whereupon he began to wheel, and the muzzle of the cannon slowly swept the horizon, successfully covering every portion of the field and all who assembled there.

Then there was a panic, most unseemly. Some of the spectators broke and ran, some circled about in a frantic effort to keep in line with the head of the mule, some fell flat on their faces. At last, after a blood curdling interval of suspense, the howitzer went off—you might have fancied that it roared out with laughter—and the result was nothing more than the overthrow of the inquisitive beast and the demolition of a chimney in the barracks. It was certainly a mulish joke, but the experiment wasn't repeated.—New York Press.

The Strength of Instinct.

The bloodhound trials held on the moors near Scarborough, England, are interesting rather as drawing attention to a neglected and possibly valuable form of animal talent than for any contribution they made to our knowledge of what these dogs can do. The runs were scarcely a mile in length, and most of the hounds acquitted themselves creditably. The result has shown that after some century and a half, during which the breed has not been trained or exercised in the work which was formerly the sole object for which it was kept, the dogs readily follow the trail of a man at once, and at a rapid pace. But heather is the best scenting ground in England, and it was largely over such moorlands that the Border bloodhounds were used. If only required to follow a single trail there is little doubt that the dogs would have gone not one mile, but ten.—London Spectator.

A Language of Three Hundred Words.

In the more inaccessible parts of the Sierra Madre Mountains, in Northern Mexico, live a curious people called the Tarahumaris. Many of them dwell in caves, but they have also small villages, all of which are situated about 8,000 feet above sea-level. The Tarahumaris are small in body, but possessed of much endurance. Their only food is maize, and they manufacture a drink called teshuin, from the same cereal. Their language is limited to about 300 words, and they cannot count beyond ten.

The Czar's Car.

The height of luxurious traveling has been reached by the Czar and Czarina. The Empress' private car is upholstered in pale blue satin. The electric lamps are all in the form of lilies, and it contains writing and tea tables made of mother-of-pearl. Our Policy of Territorial Expansion.

Annexationists are advocating the addition of Canada to this country, and think it can be accomplished in a peaceful manner without exciting a quarrel with England. How to Avoid Shrinking Underwear.

No greater personal discomfort can be borne than the wearing of underwear which is hardened and drawn up in washing. Yet if care be given the work the trouble may be prevented. Impure soap, and too hot water are responsible for much of the ruin wrought in washing woolen and silk goods. When ready to begin, fill a tub half full of warm water, in which dissolve a fourth of a bar of Ivory soap; wash the articles through it, rinse and squeeze, but do not wring. Hang on the line, while still damp press with a hot iron. By this washing the garments will remain soft and white.

MARK TWAIN'S DAUGHTER.

Pretty Miss Clemens Inherits Her Father's Witty Genius.

The family of a famous man is always interesting to the world's admirers of the man's books or paintings or whatever else he has accomplished for good. Clara Clemens, the pretty daughter of Samuel L. Clemens ("Mark Twain"), is a deserved favorite in Viennese society, where the family of Mr. Clemens are spending their second winter.

Miss Clemens is a beautiful girl, and inherits her father's ready wit and his love of pleasant company. In Florence, when she was still a slender young miss in short dresses, she was known along the Arno quays as "La Bella Signorina," and was one of the celebrities of the town almost equally with her distinguished-looking papa, who was as great a lion in Italy as he is now in Austria.

When Miss Clemens went to Vienna she began taking singing lessons under the best masters, as so many girls in society do, simply as an added accomplishment. This year, however, she is devoting herself seriously to the study of music, having learned that she is the possessor of a voice of singular sweetness and power. It is expected that she will devote her talent to the concert stage.

Mark Twain himself is supposed to be writing a book about Vienna. He likes the Vienna people, and spends much time studying their life and manners.

CURE FOR APPENDICITIS.

Prominent Physicians Say It Is Amenable to Proper Medical Treatment.

This paper is a protest against the current surgical theory and practice that all cases of appendicitis must be split open. This protest is based on twenty-seven years' experience as physician and surgeon, including service in three hospitals, one western fort, five years in mining surgery, five years in railroad surgery, twelve years in general practice on the central western plateau of Minnesota and four years in this great city, which—unique in the speed of its rise, unique in the snap of its people, unique in vast tributary territory and population—is decreed by the fates to be the hub of the earth in the near-by future.

My experience is that appendicitis and other abdominal aches for which men now operate are promptly amenable to proper medical treatment. I can recall 100 cases treated with symptoms of this malady—or of typhlitis or perityphlitis, as it was formerly called—but I have never yet met a case of it in which I felt it was my duty to cut or which terminated fatally. Influenced by the prevailing craze to cut, time and again in coming to new cases of this kind I have thought: "Now, sir, your time has come; in this case you must cut." But, presto! simple medical treatment again prevailed. Later on I shall cite other unimpeachable practitioners who share my views that medical treatment avails in this malady, one showing forty-nine out of fifty-one cases successfully treated—being more than 96 per cent.

My treatment for appendicitis is free calomel-and-soda purgation, supplemented by hot applications, to be followed by a saline if action is too slow.—Medical Record.

Strange South Sea Island Belief.

There is a belief among the South Sea Islanders that no man can enter paradise who has lost a limb, and for this reason a man will often die rather than submit to amputation.

But few actresses are as bad as they are painted.

"Evil Dispositions Are Early Shown."

Just so evil in the blood comes out in shape of scrofula, pimples, etc., in children and young people. Taken in time it can be eradicated by using Hood's Sarsaparilla. In older people, the aftermath of irregular living shows itself in bilious conditions, a heavy head, a foul mouth, a general bad feeling.

It is the blood, the impure blood, friends, which is the real cause. Purify that with Hood's Sarsaparilla and happiness will reign in your family.

Blood Poison—"I lived in a bed of fire for years owing to blood poisoning that followed small pox. It broke out all over my body, itching intensely. Tried doctors and hospitals in vain. I tried Hood's Sarsaparilla. It helped. I kept at it and was entirely cured. I could go on the housetops and shout about it." MRS. J. T. WILLIAMS, Carbondale, Pa.

Scrofula Sores—"My baby at two months had scrofula sores on cheek and arm. Local applications and physicians' medicine did little or no good. Hood's Sarsaparilla cured him permanently. He is now four, with smooth fair skin." MRS. S. S. WROTEN, Farmington, Del.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; non-irritating and the only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

The Wife Knew Better.

"Charlotte, my dear, how is it I find you weeping? Have you had bad news from your husband?"

"Oh, worse than that! My Arthur writes me from Carlsbad that he would die with ardent longings for me, were it not that he could gaze affectionately at my picture, and cover it with a thousand kisses every day."

"That is really very nice of him. And pray, is it that you are crying for? I would give anything to have such a poetic and tenderly loving husband as you have!"

"Ah, yes, my Arthur is very poetical; but let me tell you that, just to try him, I slipped my mother's photo into his traveling bag instead of my own before he started."

Penholder that Gives Heat and Cold.

An ingenious Frenchman has patented an article which he terms "a hot and cold pen-holder." The holder consists of a cylinder pierced with three small openings at its upper part, and inclosing for winter use a combustible carbon cylinder or for summer a wad of sponge or cotton impregnated with a solution of sal ammoniac. To "start up the works" in winter time the carbon cylinder is lighted and placed in the holder; the other cylinder, with the nib, is slid on the latter, and the paper tube is then fixed over both. In summer the chemically saturated wad produces sufficient cold to keep the hand cool by using the pen.

Heavy Pudding or Hard Labor.

Oliver Twist, as the world is by now almost tired of hearing, asked for more and was duly punished. Another workhouse inmate was brought before a London magistrate recently for an offense the reverse of Oliver's. The lady in question refused to eat the portion of pudding allotted to her and expressed her disapproval of the fare by walking out of the refectory during the meal, followed by other inmates. Such an act was a serious sign of insubordination and a dangerous example to more hungry or more timorous paupers, and so the labor mistress "had the law on her." When before his worship the defendant explained that the pudding was heavy and laid on her chest. The real offense, however, was leaving the table before the others had finished. It is cheering to know that though inmates of workhouses are in misfortune and have come down in the world, the social tone is kept up in its utmost rigor. For this crime against manners Mr. Cluer awarded a sentence of fourteen days' hard labor. At first sight this may seem a little harsh, but no doubt workhouse discipline must be maintained either by heavy pudding or hard labor.—London Telegraph.

Perkins' Experience with Filipinos.

Senator Perkins, of California, once had an experience with Filipinos which might have ended disastrously. Years ago the Senator was a sailor. The ship lay becalmed off one of the Philippines, when three junks manned by crews of bloodthirsty Malay pirates pulled off from the shore some five or six miles away.

Now, sailors know of no more unwelcome visitor than a Malay pirate. He disregards all the polite rules of society, and is a most uncongenial comrade. Perkins and his mates were anxiously awaiting the expected attack of these pirates, whose coming always meant bloodshed and robbery, when, fortunately, a breeze sprang up, the tops'ls filled, and the ship got beyond the reach of the junks.—Saturday Evening Post.

MISSOURI'S WAR GOVERNOR

Restored to Health by Pe-ru-na.

A LETTER FROM THE AUDITOR OF THE INTERIOR.

GOV. T. C. FLETCHER.

Hon. Thomas C. Fletcher, the noted war Governor of the State of Missouri, is a great friend of Pe-ru-na. He writes:

The Pe-ru-na Drug M'f'g Co., Columbus, Ohio:

Gentlemen—For years I have been afflicted with chronic catarrh, which has gone through my whole system, and no one knows the torture and misery I have passed through. My doctor has prescribed various remedies, and I have never found any relief until I was persuaded by a friend to use Dr. Hartman's Pe-ru-na. After the use of one bottle I feel like a new man. It also cured me of a dropping I had in my throat, and built my system up generally. To those who are suffering with catarrh I take pleasure in recommending your great medicine. Very respectfully, Thomas C. Fletcher.

Everything that affects the welfare of the people is a legitimate subject of comment to the real statesman. The statesman is not a narrow man. It is the politician who is narrow. The true statesman looks out on the world as it is, and seeks, as far as is in his power, to remedy evils and encourage the good.

HON. WM. YOUNGBLOOD.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR INTERIOR, WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 10, 1898.

The Pe-ru-na Drug M'f'g Co., Columbus, Ohio:

Gentlemen—I've often heard of your great medicine and have persuaded my wife, who has been much of a sufferer from catarrh, to try Pe-ru-na, and after using one bottle she has wonderfully improved. It has proved all you have claimed for it, and I take pleasure in recommending it to anyone who is afflicted with catarrh. Yours,

Wm. Youngblood,
Auditor for the Interior.

Catarrh in its various forms is rapidly becoming a national curse. An undoubted remedy has been discovered by Dr. Hartman. This remedy has been thoroughly tested during the past forty years. Prominent men have come to know of its virtues and are making public utterances on the subject. To save the country we must save the people. To save the people we must protect them from disease. The disease that is at once the most prevalent and stubborn of cure is catarrh.

Locomotor Ataxia and Paralysis Can be Cured.

These extreme nervous disorders were treated with wonderful success by the discoverer of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, previous to his discovery being offered to the public generally. This remedy is the only known specific in many diseases that, until recent years, were pronounced incurable. Here is the proof:

James Crocket, a sturdy old Scotchman living in Detroit, Mich, at 88 Montcalm St., was cured of Locomotor Ataxia by these pills. For many years he has been a chief engineer of one of those big passenger palace steamers plying upon the great lakes. This is a position of great responsibility and the anxiety causes a great nervous strain. Mr. Crocket says: "For fifteen years I watched the big engines and boilers without a single accident, and only noticed that I was getting nervous. Suddenly without warning I was taken sick, and was prostrated. I had the best of physicians but grew gradually worse. At a council of doctors, they said I had nervous prostration, and had destroyed my whole nervous system and would never recover. For three years I was unable to move from my bed. The doctor said I had locomotor ataxia, and would never be able to walk again.

"The pains and suffering I experienced during those years are almost indescribable. The friends that came to see me bid me good-bye when they left me and I was given up. The doctors said nothing more could be done. My wife kept reading to me, articles about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. We finally decided to try them. The first box gave me relief. I continued to use them for about two years before I could get strength enough to walk. I am nearly seventy-five years old and there is not a man in this city that can kick higher or walk further than I can and to-day I owe my present good health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People for they saved my life."—Detroit Evening News.

Appropriateness.

COMMUNICATED.

I wonder if an "old sinner" could say anything, or would be allowed the privilege of suggesting a few ideas about, "How to run a meeting." I believe a little stirring up along this line would prove highly beneficial, "Spiritually" to some of our church people of today.

While in church not long ago, noticing the easy and indolent manner of some of the "brethren rnd sisters" and the small amount of enthusiasm they put in their work of "serving the Lord." I said to myself, if I had a score of people working for me, and they would not take more interest, and do their work better, and put in better time, I would discharge the whole lot, and they would have to beg like tramps at the back door to get me to take them back.

On meeting days or evenings, while waiting for the congregation to gather, in place of sitting idle for fifteen or twenty minutes, looking around to see what sister A, has on, or if brother B, has creases in his pants. why not improve the time by singing a few good old solemn hymns, like,

Come Thou fount of every blessing.
On Jordon stormy banks I stand.
There is a fountain filled with blood.
Nearer my God to Thee, Nearer to Thee.

This will warm up your cold feeling and make you ready to enjoy the sermon. After the sermon, often comes the class meeting. Some one starts up a kind of a "ditty song," no solemnity about it. Why not sing something like this?

How firm a foundation ye saints of the Lord
Is laid for your faith in his excellent word.

This good old hymn has all the promises of the Lord in it. The last two lines He says:

That soul, though all hell should endeavor to shake,
I'll never, no never, no never forsake.

Have your hymns appropriate to the occasion, this makes the meeting interesting. For instance, some brother or sister gets up to speak. They tell of their troubles and trials and loss of husband, wife or child. When done speaking, why not sing something like this, it would be very appropriate.

Friends fondly cherished have passed on before
Waiting, they watch me approaching the shore.
Singing to cheer me through death's chilling gloom
Joyfully, joyfully, haste to thy home.

Some one arises and expresses a desire to get to heaven; they ask God to deliver them from sin, from selfishness and fill them with love and joy etc.

An appropriate verse would be:

'Tis there, there, the Lord will deliver.
And souls drink of that beautiful river,
And peace flows forever and ever,
And love and joy forever increase.

An old man or womas speaks. It would be very appropriate to sing,

My latest sun is sinking fast,
My race is nearly run,
My strongest trials now are past,
My triumph is begun.

Again, a big meeting in progress; want to have a revival; an invitation is given to come forward. The preacher says, "brethren sing something." Well, that is just about what they do. They often sing without a thought about what would be to the point, or suit the occasion. Of course they are nice good songs but "don't fit." You ask what would I sing? My first lead out would be,

Come ye sinners poor and needy
Weak and wounded sick and sore
Jesus ready stands to save you
Full of pity, love and power.

When we had finished this first, if prospects were good, I would strike out,

Oh come and will you go, will you go, wil you go etc.

Now the next thing in order will be a good long prayer, not too long, but to the point, send it up as though you meant it, and mean it too, and when done say, Amen, loud enough for all to know that you are through.

Now, more good appropriate hymns are in order, and our hymns-books have plenty of them. It is the leaders that should post themselves on "what to sing and when to sing it."

I attended a revival meeting not long ago, where they sang so fast, that one half of the singers could not keep up, and no more appropriate songs for the occasion than "Old Zip Coon" would be at a funeral. The result was, not one came forward. There was no solemnity about the meeting. It was more like a jolly time for boys and girls.

One of our poets says:

Oh sing, to me of heaven,
When I am called to die,
Sings songs of holy ecstasy
To waft my soul on high,

He does not say just tell me of heaven but sing it to me. I for one: believe there is as much, or more converting power in good old fashioned hymns, than in preaching and praying. Nothing will make a man or woman feel as mellow, as a good hymn appropriately sung, and one of the kind that he, or she, has learned years ago, when mother would take us on her lap and sing us to sleep, or cuddled us on father's knee for the night's rest, and while mother would sing tenor, father would sing bass.

I hope no one will take any offense what I have suggested. My motto has always been, if I have anthing to do, do it with all my might. And I like to see lodge workers or church workers, go about it as though they were getting well paid and have a system of doing such work, the same as in worldly matters.

If you cant make a long prayer, think up a few good sound sentences that express your feelings and desires, and send them up in full force. God is not deaf, but some of the congregation are very hard of hearing, and it might be they would like to know what you said.

If you can sing, sing also with a vim If you can't, I pity you indeed, for you miss a world of pleasure. We will now close by singing. "Lord, dismiss us with thy blessing."

His Life Was Saved.

Mr. J. E. Lilly, a prominent citizen of Hannibal, Mo., lately had a wonderful deliverance from a frightful death. In telling of it he says; "I was taken with Typhoid Fever, that ran into Pneumonia. My lungs became hardened. I was so weak I couldn't even sit up in bed. Nothing helped me. I expected to soon die of Consumption, when I heard of Dr. King's New Discovery. One bottle gave me great relief, I continued to use it, and now am well and strong. I can't say too much in its praise." This marvelous medicine is the surest and quickest cure for all Throat and Lung Trouble. Regular size 50 cents and $1. Trial bottles free at H. B. McCord's Drug Store: every bottle guaranteed.

The Dewey Medal

By the courtesy of the sculptor, Daniel C. French, HARPER'S WEEKLY is able to publish the first authentic reproduction of his completed design for the Dewey medal. The Tiffany company will cut the dies and strike the medals in copper—1635 in all.

Upon the obverse is a lifelike presentment of the head of Commodore Dewey, with the following inscription: "The gift of the people of the United States to the officers and men of the Asiatic Squadron under the command of Commodore George Dewey." Upon the reverse, surrounded by the words, "In memory of the victory of Manila Bay, May, 1, 1898," is the figure of a young sailor, stripped to the waist, who sits up on a gun, with a flag across his knees, and one foot resting upon a swing loop of rope. In this beautiful figure Mr. French has admirably embodied the genius of the episode in its highest and purest aspect—the spirit of the fleet, such as one's imagination may picture it to have been on that memoriable morning, and also the spirit of the country on whose behalf it was going into action. The chief characteristic of the face is youth—the beauty, confidence, and pure intention of yonth. In the pose of the figure are alertness, fearless uprightness, and the unconscious grace and composure of the flag is suggestive. The moment represented is not the one of victory, but of preparedness thereto. The flag is not a menace of the world, nor under the pretext of its name is aggrandizement foreshadowed. It is safe in the keeping, of Young America, and when the cause is right it will be uplifted.

—The Angola Republican of Feb. 15 says: Mrs. Della Kutzner, of Auburn, came near meeting a horrible death Monday last. She saw that one of her chenille curtains had taken fire from the stove, and in her effort to take it out of door, her dress took fire and was soon ablaze, and but for the presence of mind in taking a rug and wrapping it about her in such a way as to smother the flames, she soon would have burned to death, as she was alone. As it was she was somewhat burned and much damage done to curtains and carpets. She is a sister of Mrs. J. Frank Kline, of Angola. Women cannot be too careful while working about the stoves, as their clothing, as a rule, is very inflammable.

What Shall We Do?

A serious and dangerous disease prevails in this country, dangerous because so deceptive. It comes on so slowly yet surely that it is often firmly seated before we are aware of it.

The name of this disease which may be divided into three distinct stages is, First, Kidney tronble, indicated by pain in the back, lumbago, frequent desire to urinate, the flow of urine being copious or scant with strong odor.

If allowed to advance, this reaches the Second stage, or Bladder trouble, with heavy pain in the abdomen low down between the naval and the water passage, increasing desire to urinate, with scalding sensation in passing, small quantities being passed with difficulty, sometimes necessary to draw it with instruments. If uric acid or gravel has formed it will prove dangerous if neglected.

The third stage is Bright's disease.

There is comfort in knowing that Dr. Killmer, the great Kidney and Bladder specialist, has discovered a Remedy famous for its marvelous cure of the most distressing cases and known as Dr. Kilmer,s Swamp-Root.

It is sold by all druggists.

As a proof of the wonderful virtues of this great discovery, Swamp-Root, a sample bottle and a book of valuable information will be sent absolutely free by mail on application to Dr Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention that you read this liberal offer in the AUBURN COURIER.

THE A. O. U. W.

The Brethren Have a Grand Meeting and their Guests Enjoy It.

In spite of the bad weather and worse roads, quite a number attended the meeting of the A. O. U. W. at their hall last evening including a number of invited guests. They were called to order by the Master Workman, T. C. Ford, the audience being to that time entertained by Mandolin music by O. W. Binder and W. Hartford, accompanied by Miss Margaret Ford. The opening hymn was sung and prayer was offered by Rev. J. N. Wilson. The welcome address, by C. E. Emanuel was able and full of good thoughts. Then came a recitation by Miss Bell Brandon, which was well received. Mrs. Bolton read a selection of intense interest and proved herself a good reader, a talent we are to sorry to say, is not as common as it should be. Morris Widney, accompanied by Mrs. Lanning on the organ, sang one of his best comic solos, and was compelled to come back, when he sang "The Owl" both intensely enjoyable. Little Sydney Farmer, gave a grand recitation, a wonderful display of elocutionary ability for a child of nine years She is a little prodigy. Miss Maud Trover sang one of her sweetest solos greatly to the enjoyment of all. The next was a recitation by Miss Nellie Harris, nicely given, and following this was the address of T. D. Neal, the Master Workman of Indiana. His effort was along the line of A. O. U. W. work, giving the history of the order, and its conditions and aims. It threw much light on their work, much that the outside world has not known. He also gave a high compliment to the exercises he had just heard. E. D. Beadle, one of the leading members here followed with a neat speech, in which he set forth more fully than had been done so far, the details of the order. The order is open to all white citizens from 18 to 45 who are perfect phsically. The initiation fee, including medical examinatian is $4. The insurance or protecting feature is limited to $2000, but the duties of the order also extend to care and assistance for helpless ones of a member's family. In this connection he spoke of the good done in the family of the late John Applegate. Mrs. James Farmer, then gave the last number, which was a fine recitation, for which she has quite a talent herself, and proves her capability of giving at least part of the instruction that is apparent in her little girl. Then after a closing song, the meeting adjourned.

The Kidney Complexion.

The pale, sallow, sunken-cheeked, distressed-looking people you so often meet are afflicted with "Kidney Complexion."

Their kidneys are turning to a parsnip color. So is their complexion.

They may also have indigestion, or suffer from sleeplessness, rheumatism, neuralgia brain trouble, nervous exhaustion and sometimes the heart acts badly.

The cause is weak, unhealthy kidneys.

Usually the sufferer from kidney disease do s not find out what the trouble is until it is almost too late, because the first symtoms are so like mild sickness that they do not think they need a medicine or a doctor until they find themselves sick in bed.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root will build up and strengthen their weak and diseased kidneys, purify their diseased, kidney-poisoned blood, clear their complexion and soon they will enjoy better health.

You can get the regular sizes at the drugstore, at fifty cents and one dollar, or you may first prove for yourself the wonderful virtues of this great discovery, Swamp-Root, by sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co, Binghamton, N. Y. for a sample bottle and a book that tells all about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. When writing kindly mention that you read this liberal offer in the AUBURN COURIER.

There was a sudden call of fire this this forenoon and the siren whistle brought a lively crowd out on the street. It proved to be a blaze that started in the Greenler factory in the shavings room. The factory is well supplied with hose and water and the employes went for the fire with such vim, that it was under control in a short time. The fire department, however, was on hand in time had it been needed. The promptness with which this blaze was stopped shows the importance of being well provided with means to fight fires. Had it got a good start, nothing could have saved the big establishment.

Used the Shovel.

Charles Cooke, a tramp of color is now hibernating in the Auburn jail. He was at Garrett and wanted to sleep in the warm, soft, lake sand in the B. & O. sand house at Garrett. This is against the rules, and the man in charge of the sand tried to get him to give it up. But he knew a luxury when he saw it and refused to go. High words followed, when Cooke picked up a shovel and hit the sand man over the head. This irregular proceeding caused his arrest. He was brought before 'Squire Chew and fined $5. and trimmings which brought his bill up to $16 05. Not having the five cents, and much less the $16, he was glad to escape by coming to Auburn. Deputy sheriff Hartford went over there last evening and brought him over, and he is with us over Sunday.

Sure Cure

A man named C. F. Robinson in Hartford, Conn, who was thought to be dying of pneumonia, and who lost consciousness with his temperature at 107, is on the high road to recovery, due to radical treatment by his physician. Robertson was stripped and placed on a bed of snow. Snow was heaped over him, and he was kept thus for half an hour. Then the doctor hit him a blow in the face. Robertson opened his eyes and spoke rationally. Ordinary treatment of the disease has been resumed successfully.

Taxation in China.

The Chinese are perhaps the most lightly taxed people in the world. In China all the land belongs to the state, and a trifling sum per acre—never altered through long centuries—is paid as rent. This is the only tax in the country, and it amounts to about 2s 6d per head yearly.

Palestine Swallows

In Palestine the swallows are allowed not only the freedom of the houses, but of the mosques and tombs, where they build their nests and rear their young.

To Kill Rats by Disease.

The discovery is announced in a preliminary communication by Dr. Issutschenko of Russia, of a microbe pathogenic to rats. An epidemic having broken out among the rats kept for experimental purposes in the government agricultural laboratory, a bacillus was isolated from the liver and spleen of affected animals that proved excessively fatal to rats and mice. Experiments in making the organism useful as a living rat poison have not yet, however, had an encouraging success.—Popular Science Monthly.

DEFENDING THE NATION.

Catarrh is our country's enemy. Lagrippe, lung troubles and other diseases of the mucous membrane take hold of our people and fatal results follow with alarming frequency. All of these troubles are catarrh, and cannot exist where the membranes are clean and healthy.

Mrs. Lou Davis, Fayetteville, Tenn., tells in her letter how Dr. Hartman's great catarrh remedy, Pe-ru-na, cured her of la grippe and serious lung complication. She says:

"I was afflicted with a disease commonly known as la grippe two years ago; the doctors said I had consumption. I got one bottle of Pe-ru-na and the second night my cough stopped. I took several bottles, and I will say that I believe I would be a dead woman now if it had not been for Pe-ru-na."

Mary M. Pruitt, Palpa, Mo., says:

Pe-ru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, O.

"I had la grippe for three successive years; it seemed to get a tighter hold on me each year. It seemed I was in the jaws of death. What had helped me before would not do me any good. I saw an advertisement of Pe-ru-na. I procured two bottles and it cured me. I have not felt any symptom since. You may use this in any way you please."

FUNNY MAN.

The Spanish Humorist Breaks Loose After the Surrender.

The Mark Twain of Manila Discusses the Situation.

[Cleveland Leader.]

Manila, P. I., Jan. 2,—(By Mail.)—There was at least one Spaniard who refused to look upon the serious side of the surrender of Manila. He is an alleged funny writer on one of the Spanish papers here. Following are translations of a few paragraphs of his attempt to extract humor out of the memorable event of Aug. 13:

"After three months and a half of siege and blockade, after we had been living for three days solely on lizards because we had eaten all the buffalo, horses, dogs and nearly all the tender, sleek-looking Chinamen, came that disartrous 13th of August, a date that will be written with in the pagee of our history, together with May 1 and St. Innocents' day The moon was on the last quarter of Taurus, on the Holy Fast Saturday of St. Casaino, when the English consul's cuckoo clock, which, by the way, was bought at the Estella del Morte, had already struck the hour of 8 and 43 minutes, when the enemy's ships began to vomit myriads of shells and bombs upon the besieged. The artillerymen fell like bedbugs, the infantry died like bedbugs and the volunteers burst like bedbugs. The military assistance corps pushed forward with great alacrity to the most advanced positions of the firing line, conveying ammunition and pickled cockroaches, the only nourishment available, to the brave defenders.

"The military engineers had placed in position two large searchlights, so as to prevent night attacks by the fleet. At the first shots they were destroyed and the general ordered them to be or 14 carriage lamps, which he thought would answer the purpose. Six million seven hundred and sixty-four thousand three hundred and eighteen bombs fell into the city and 3223 buildings were reduced to ruins. The only ones that remained standing were the convents of the Jesuits and the archbishop's palace, which fact leads us to believe that the American explosives were not Protestants, in spite of their explosiveness, or that they were manufactured by some meek pastor with a soft spot in his heart for the pope."

"The veteran civil guards, as well as those that were not veteran, slept the sleep of the just while our natives were sinking in the river Pasig, four naphtha pleasure launches and two papier mache guns that we had been treasuring as family heirlooms. These were left to block up the stream, so that it might not afterwards be said that our navy was not good enough even for that purpose. The mayor at the head of the city council, in all his glory, paraded about the streets, side streets, alleys, plazas, into all of the out-of-the-way corners of Manila, endeavoring to imfuse hope and keep up the spirits of the people and shares in the Spanish-Filipino bank.

"We had fired more than 10,000,000 rifle rounds and nearly 12,000 shells when we ran short of ammunition and had to load our pieces with cash of the Philippine treasury, bringing about a curious sta-e of affairs, lor, after the capitulation, the gold was found in the possession of General Merritt, the silver in the hands of the officers, and the copper held by the soldiers, no doubt the result of our

EXTRAORDINARY GUNNERY.

After the intrenchments had been abandoned our 172 soldiers, commanded by only 437 generals, that we had left, concentrated in the walled town, and for 9 hours and 14 minutes kept up a galling fire against the 26,000 Americans.

At last, a clean, white towel, the only clean thing in Manila, was unfurled and our desperate general, caressing his bald pate for lack of hair to pull, with tears in his eyes, told us of the terms of capitulation, which we accepted in a dignified and honorable measure. The conquering generals entered the town in uncovered carriages, not so the coachmen, who remained covered, as they wore hats decorated with their national colors and United States postage stamps, much to the enlightenment and amusement of the Manilians.

of the German cruiser that was to convey to Hongkong one of our generals who could now well pose as an independent grandee, tooted it in the bay but she spoke in German, so we might not be humiliated by understanding the catcall. Afterwards two companies of American soldiers, accompanied by their bands, in very correct formation marched in to do us the honors, while we withdrew to the military arsenal to deposit our arms, which were then free from dust and straw. In order not to wound our feelings the Americans waited until night before they hauled down our flag and substituted their own of crazy-quilt pattern and style."

"After The Bazar"

Not a man, woman, or child in Auburn regrets, the money paid out for the benefit of the band, however. The band is worth all it ever cost us, and more. The citizen shown here is only making believe he feels bad. He is happy to think his money was spent in a good cause.

The Art Loan and Bazar has been a grand and brilliant success no matter from what point of views it is studied. All the managers and helpers worked hard and incessantly for the five days and evenings. Many who had no direct interest as members or member's wives worked all the time till the last minute. They should have unstinted praise. And the Reading Club were the leaders in all.

The interest as the closing hour drew nigh, became greater, and when Will Schaab announced the winners of the several prizes everybody gathered about him to hear the results.

HISTORY OF A WEEK.

PEOPLE, PLACES AND THINGS OF THE WORLD.

News of Crimes and Criminals, Accidents, Fires, Etc., from North, South, East and West, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

Fatal Explosion.

A terrific natural gas explosion at Wabash, Ind., leveled a two-story brick dwelling, fatally injuring one and so badly hurt the other inmate that recovery is doubtful. The building destoyed belonged to Emiline Burns, aged 84 years, and was occupied by her and her adopted daughter, Bessie Lane. The latter went to the cellar for potatoes. Mrs. Burns heard her strike a match and immediately there was an awful explosion, and both were buried in the crumbling ruins. When the child was removed her clothing was burning. She was nearly nude and bleeding from many wounds. She cannot survive. Mrs. Burns dropped into the cellar, and though fearfully burned and cut, may get well. The shock was felt two miles distant, and in the immediate vicinity windows were blown in. Bits of curtains and fragments of carpet landed in tree tops, and bedding and other furniture were hurled 200 feet from the wreck.

The Bulgaria Is Safe.

A special from Ponta Del Gada, Azores, says: The Hamburg-American liner Bulgaria, Capt. Schmidt, from New York, on January 28 for Hamburg, which the British tank steamer Weehawken reported in distress 800 miles from Azore Islands, is entering this port. All on board the Bulgaria are in good health. The Bulgaria, it appears, stopped eleven days during which she was engaged in repairing her machinery and rudder. She lost one man during the operation. The British steamer Antillian, Capt. Frost, from Liverpool on February 4 for New Orleans, attempted to take the Bulgaria in tow, but gave up the task. The Bulgaria eventually proceeded alone.

Vigilance Needed.

Gen. Otis has cabled the War Department as follows:

On nights of 21st and 22d insurgent troops gained access to outskirts of city behind our lines. Many in hiding and about 1,000 entrenched themselves. They were completely routed with loss of killed and wounded about 500 and 200 prisoners. Our loss was slight. City quiet, confidence restored, business progressing.

The following dispatch has been received at the Navy Department from Dewey:

For political reasons the Oregon should be sent here at once.

Another Revolution Planned in France.

Paris special: The Chamber of Deputies voted to prosecute Deputies Deroulede and Marcel Habert on request of the public prosecutor. Deroulede and Marcel entered the barracks of Gen. Rogel's brigade on the day of Faure's funeral and questioned the officers and refused to leave when requested to do so. They were arrested, and confessed they wished to lead the troops into a revolutionary movement and replace the "parliamentary republic by a plebiscite republic."

Stayed with His Boat.

A telephone message from Mt. Carmel, Ill., says when the ice broke in the Wabash River the steamer Fox was carried away, with Capt. Henry Carmon on board. Searching parties are now looking for him. Capt. David Bosaw offered to rescue Capt. Carmon with a skiff, but he refused to leave the boat. People along the river were notified to be on the lookout for the craft. It is almost certain the boat was crushed by the ice and Capt. Carmon lost.

Muskogee Burning.

Telegraphic advices from Muskogee, I. T., say that the town is burning down. The telegraph office is destroyed. Muskogee is the principal city of the Creek Nation. It is on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad, 117 miles south of Parsons, Kan. The town is one of the chief trading places of the Indian Territory and contains a number of business buildings.

Salvationist Badly Injured.

Andrew W. Crawford, adjutant of the Indianapolis branch of the Salvation Army, attempted to eject a hoodlum from the army headquarters and was set upon by the youngster's friends, stabbed in the groin and leg and badly bruised by flying bricks. His assailants escaped identification.

Christians in Japan Happy.

The new board of trustees of the Doshisha at Tokyo, Japan, has restored the former constitution of the university, thereby securing a continuation of the policy that prevailed before the late board of trustees decided to ignore the Christian religion in the training of the students.

Frozen to Death in Bed.

The dead body of Mrs. Nancy L. Sargent, who was frozen to death during the recent cold snap, has been found near Hanover, Ohio. Mrs. Sargent was a widow, nearly 80 years of age, and lived alone. Neighbors found her lying on a bed frozen stiff.

NATURAL GAS COMBINE.

Company to Control Plants in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois.

The Central Union Gas Company has been organized under the laws of Virginia to control the natural gas wells and plants in Ohio, Indiana and southern Illinois. The capital stock will be $24,000,000, of which there will be $10,000,000 7 per cent cumulative preferred and $14,000,000 of common stock. Of this authorized capital $10,500,000 is to be retained in the treasury for the purchase of companies and plants. The consent of eleven large gas-producing plants has been obtained, so it is said, toward entering the pool. These are the Dayton, Tippecanoe City, Covington, New Western, Piqua, Sydney, Troy, Springfield, Urbana, South Charleston and the Mount Sterling gas companies. It is asserted that these companies are earning $600,000 net per annum. This amount, it is expected, will be sufficient to provide funds for dividends at the rate of 7 per cent upon preferred stock and 3 per cent upon the common stock, with the prospect of a considerable increase at once from economies which will result from the consolidation.

SHOOT IN A CROWDED STREET.

Lively Fusillade Between Policemen and Crooks at Omaha.

An exciting chase and pistol duel between two Omaha policemen and two unknown crooks through a crowded thoroughfare was witnessed by hundreds of people on a recent evening. Although more than fifty shots were fired no one but one of the fugitives was touched by the bullets. Early in the evening Policemen Giecke and Cunningham in citizens' clothes were patrolling a side street between two main thoroughfares, when they saw two suspicious-looking characters dodging through an alley. The officers ran toward them and called upon them to halt. Instantly both men drew revolvers and fired in the very faces of the officers, who drew their pistols and returned the fire immediately. The men ran down the alley, firing back at their pursuers. In this manner all four men emptied their guns and reloaded them while running four blocks, keeping up a constant fusillade. The crooks escaped, although one of them was so badly wounded that he left a trail of blood behind.

SLAIN BY HIS BROTHERS.

Thomas O'Neil Literally Cut to Pieces by Two Younger Brothers.

Thomas O'Neil, a butcher, employed at Swift's packing house in South St. Joseph, Mo., was literally cut to pieces by his two younger brothers, Edward and Jack. The men lived together, Thomas being married. They had a dispute over money matters, when Edward and Jack attacked Thomas with butcher knives. The dead man was stabbed twice in the heart. His head was badly cut and his body is covered with knife wounds. Edward was badly cut in the head. Jack O'Neil is a one-legged man, and has no fingers on one hand. He says he did the killing in self-defense.

FOUR PERSONS KILLED BY GAS.

Two Women and Two Children Are Asphyxiated in Philadelphia.

The bodies of Mrs. Charles Fahrenkamp, her two children and an unknown woman were found in Mrs. Fahrenkamp's house at 1416 North 52d street, Philadelphia. All had been killed by asphyxiation and the circumstances surrounding the mystery are such as to lead the police to believe that one of the women was the author of the crime. There was nothing about the body of the unknown woman or about the premises that would lead to her identification.

Saved from Perishing by Indians.

Advices received from Dawson say Lieut. Castner of the Fourth United States infantry, who started almost a year ago from the southern coast of Alaska to explore the interior and find, if possible, an all-American trail to the Yukon, has arrived there. Finding the trail they had believed to exist impassable, Lieut. Castner and two companions started to reach civilization by floating down the Tanana river on a raft. The raft was wrecked the second day and all the supplies were lost except a coil of rope. With the rope another raft was built and for six days the men floated down the river, living on berries and rose apples. Just as hope was almost gone the party drifted into an encampment of Tanana Indians. These guided them to a camp of white men a hundred miles up the stream, where the party rested until a boat could carry them to the Yukon. Lieut. Castner found all maps to be incorrect. He says, however, that there is a feasible route for a trail or railway from the coast to a point on the Yukon river below Circle City.

Callon received a ball through his chest.

Interview with General Gomez.

Gen. Gomez, in an interview at Matanzas, said: "Cuba must decide its own future, and I realize that the present problems are quite as serious as those solved by force of arms and that the independence for which blood has been so freely spilled might be thrown away by a few acts of folly. But the conduct of the real Cubans since the protocol was signed by Spain and the United States must challenge the admiration of the world. Our forces, half of them without sufficient nourishment, have kept the peace and compelled the camp followers, who flocked to us when victory was assured, to observe the laws. Brigandage might have been expected, but there has been none. Some Spanish guerrillas recently began depredations, and the Cubans have suppressed them. No reprisals have been levied upon those who did not favor our cause during the insurrection. We now invite all classes to join us in forgetting that war ever divided the people of the island. My greatest ambition is to see Cuba free and independent, and its people united for honest government, peace and prosperity. This can be accomplished more easily than many think. The Spaniards in Cuba are displaying a willingness to meet the Cubans half way. They are beginning to learn that we desire peace and protection for all. Since Jan. 1 sentiment throughout Cuba has changed materially. Another two months will see all classes fraternizing. Now, let me say that unless I greatly misjudge the people of the United States, the majority of them will demand the redemption of those promises made by Congress. The selfish politicians in the United States form a dangerous element, as they do in all other countries, but they cannot control the will of the people, in whose hands the future of Cuba is safe."

SNOWSLIDE AT SILVER PLUME.

Two Men Rescued Alive—Mine Buildings Swept Away.

Another snowslide occurred at Silver Plume, Colo., carrying away all the buildings of the Seven-Thirty mine, together with several miners' cabins, and burying four men, two of whom have been rescued alive. The two who were rescued are Peter Olson and David Fitzpatrick. They were badly injured. The men were miners and lived in cabins on the Seven-Thirty and Dunderberg mines. The slide started at the head of Brown Gulch, and ran right over the Seven-Thirty mine and partly across the Dunderberg. The miners who were buried under the snow were caught asleep in their cabins.

LOCATE CLAIMS ON PORCUPINE.

Exclusion Act Driving Prospectors Into American Territory.

Numerous beach claims have been located on Tahkis creek in the Porcupine district, Alaska. Most of the land in that vicinity has been staked off and the prospects are said to be good for a heavy output this summer. The Canadian exclusion act is driving newcomers and gold seekers who have been waiting for weeks into American territory back of Haine's Mission, the Porcupine and elsewhere to prospect, where a man may locate twenty acres instead of 250 and 150 foot claims.

Washington, says a correspondent, has had very few real winter snows, and the people were almost stupefied by the recent blizzard which struck the capital and left the streets piled high with drifts and nearly three feet of snow on the level. Some of the Western Congressmen made light of the Washington blizzard, and used it as a text for repeating experiences in Dakota blizzards. But as a rule Western men who were out in the storm admit that it was a genuine blizzard, and about as severe as they ever encountered anywhere. They find no fault with Washingtonians for complaining, for it was risking life to go out in the storm and face the wind while floundering through the snowdrifts. There were many narrow escapes and some most perilous experiences. No criticism could apply to the people of the capital city for suspending business for one day, as they did. The schools were closed, business houses were not opened, and departments of the Government were so short-handed that little was done. Congress was the only branch of the Government at work, and the Senate had a larger percentage of its members present than had the House. The grave and dignified Senators went to the capitol from force of habit, and they worked all afternoon and were sent home in carriages by the sergeant-at-arms.

It was with some difficulty that Col. Bright, the sergeant-at-arms, secured enough carriages, as livery men were not anxious for business engagements, and the ordinary hackmen were few and far between. Nobody wanted to face the storm, and hackmen were as indifferent to the power of money as were others. They would not be hired to go out in the storm. Col. Bright could get no one to supply the carriages for the Senators for a time, but he called up the funeral director, who does the business for the Government, and said he must have carriages. The man who furnishes the carriages for state funerals could not risk losing his business, and he sent enough carriages to carry the Senators to their homes.

There were some incidents to show that young men in clerical positions were more careful and cautious than were their elders. Senator Cockrell of Missouri, one of the oldest men in the Senate, tramped two miles to the capitol early in the day because he had some important work with his secretary, a young man of 25. When he reached his committee room he found a telephone message from his clerk announcing that the weather was too bad for him to venture out. The Missouri Senator expressed himself vigorously about the want of energy in the newer generation and wrote his letters himself. That clerk is wondering when he will be dismissed.

The Washington blizzard was only for one day, but the snowdrifts remained, and for several days, and Washington enterprise, even aided by the national Government, was not able to remove them or open the streets to traffic again. The street railroads were tied up, with one exception.

The new system proved a failure in a snowstorm. The fine snow sifted through the slot and destroyed the current, leaving the cars without motive power. It ended the illustration that the underground electric was the only system for street railroads, even in cities where they have only occasional snowstorms.

The most discouraging feature of Washington was the complacency with which the people accepted the stoppage of all business. They had been buried under a snowstorm by the powers of nature, and they waited for the same power to uncover the city. They simply waited for two days for the sun and the warm rain to unlock the city from its snow blockade.

Coal was the great luxury of the capital after the storm. The coal merchants were indifferent. They had coal in the railroad yards, but snow would have to be shoveled away to get at it. They preferred to peddle out what they had by the bushel at exorbitant prices rather than open up the streets and yards and get coal to their customers. In many instances gentlemen carried home a few bushels of coal in their private carriages, because they could not get the coal men to deliver the fuel. Other prominent residents had to close their houses and take refuge in the hotels, because they could not get coal to heat their houses.

WANTS THE GENERALS SHOT.

Fiery Debate Takes Place in the Spanish Cortes.

Spanish political circles are greatly agitated over the meeting of the Cortes and the public awaits the action of that body with keen interest. The opening session was marked by scenes of disorder, but personal encounters that threatened at different times were avoided. Discussion of different phases of the war with America provoked general uproar. Count d'Almenas was particularly severe in his attacks upon the Spanish generals and demanded that those who surrendered be shot. Rivera, Weyler, Blanco, Linares and Cervera, he declared, were failures as fighters and administrators. A great uproar followed this statement, and a number of people were expelled from the galleries.

The count proceeded with a denunciation of the "shameful capitulation of Santiago." "Five months have elapsed since this disgraceful war ended," exclaimed Count d'Almenas, "and why have not the generals who surrendered to the enemy almost without firing a shot been executed before this? No one can say that the Spaniards are not a brave people and will die for their honor, but we have an army of lions led by asses."

CASH TO PAY SPAIN.

House Votes the $20,000,000 Under Suspension of Rules.

A separate bill appropriating $20,000,000 for payment to Spain under the provisions of the treaty of Paris was passed Monday by the House of Representatives under suspension of the rules. No amendment was in order, and an attempt to secure unanimous consent to offer an amendment declaratory of a policy not permanently to annex the islands was objected to. Mr. Wheeler of Kentucky, upon whose point of order the appropriation went out of the sundry civil bill, made the only speech in open hostility to the measure, but upon the roll call thirty-four members—thirty-one Democrats, two Populists and one silver Republican—voted against it. The votes of 219 members were cast for it.

COMMISSION TAKES A REST.

American-Canadian Conference Ends—Trouble Over Alaska.

The American-Canadian joint high commission, which has been holding sessions in Washington, adjourned to meet at Quebec Aug. 2 unless the chairmen of the respective commissions agree upon another date. The commission first began its labors nearly six months ago in Canada, and has, with the exception of probably a month, been earnestly at work endeavoring to accomplish the object for which it was appointed—the formulation of a treaty covering the many perplexing questions of differences affecting the business interests of the United States and Canada.

A dozen important questions were referred to the commission for its consideration, and the commissioners assert that substantial progress in the settlement and adjustment of many of the questions has been made. Probably those which have given the most serious trouble and proved stumbling blocks to a final agreement on all have been the two relating to lumber and the Alaskan boundary question, on both of which the Canadians have demanded concessions which the Americans felt it would be prejudicial to the best interests of the United States to grant. It was felt that an adjournment for a few months might result in a better prospect for harmony and a disposition on the part of the Canadians to agree to propositions made to them from the commissioners on this side of the boundary line.

SCHLEY GIVES HIS SIDE.

Says He was in Command at the Famous Battle of July 3.

Admiral Schley, with permission of the Naval Department to answer charges preferred against him, has sent to the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs his defense to the accusation that he disobeyed orders in thoroughly exploring the harbor of Cienfuegos before sailing to Santiago to seek Cervera's fleet and his version of the inner American naval history of the famous sea battle of July 3. He freely quotes official documents to prove that his orders at Cienfuegos were discretionary and he asserts in practically so many words that he and not Admiral Sampson was in command when Cervera's fleet was destroyed.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Great Britain continues to be the greatest customer of the United States, despite the fact that our purchases from her continue much below those of former years. The figures of the treasury bureau of statistics covering the calendar year exports and imports show that our sales to the United Kingdom in the year 1898 were $538,661,787, against $482,695,024 in 1897, while our imports from Great Britain in 1898 were but $111,361,017, against $159,002,286 in 1897. Thus our sales to the United Kingdom are nearly five times as much as our purchases from her. The imports into the United Kingdom from the United States in the calendar year 1898 show a healthy increase in the items of bacon, lard, copper, raw cotton, leather, hops, corn and oats.

REBELS FIRE MANILA

PROPERTY LOSS IN THE TOWN IS ENORMOUS.

Natives Apply the Torch During Night Attack—Filipinos Driven to the Jungles by American Troops—Visayans Offer to Fight Aguinaldo.

The rebels fired the city of Manila Wednesday night, applying the torch to many buildings. The greater part of the city is heavily damaged. The attempt to burn the city was followed by an outbreak of rebel sympathizers and severe fighting in the streets followed. The troops suppressed the outbreak by prompt and determined action. A number of the insurgents were killed and several American soldiers were wounded. A large market place was among the first to burn. Between six and seven hundred residences and business houses were destroyed. Fires were started at several points simultaneously and, spreading with great rapidity, resisted all efforts to control them.

Native sharpshooters were concealed behind corner buildings. They shot at every American in sight. Flames burst forth simultaneously from Santa Cruz, San Nicolas and Tondo. From these points the flames spread in all directions. In a short time the greater part of the city was on fire. Notwithstanding the continual firing of the hidden sharpshooters the American garrison turned out and fought the fire. In many cases they had first to drive away the lurking assassins.

None of our troops was killed, but seven members of the Minnesota regiment were wounded while making a rush into the burning Tondo quarter. The troops were rallied from some of the outlying encampments. They quickly spread through all parts of the city and promptly subdued what was evidently planned for a general uprising and massacre.

The fire lasted all night. The native rebels in the city have been completely subjected by the prompt work of Gen. Otis and the other commanders. It is evident that the incendiaries and assassins believed that the entire town would be destroyed and with it the foreign residents and the American soldiers. The loss will be very heavy. Strong guards are posted in all parts of the city and it is believed that another massacre will not be attempted.

The attempt to burn the city of Manila is part of the often announced plan of the insurgents. Filipino spies and sympathizers have been watched by the American troops day and night. Many have been captured. Some of them were disguised in women's clothing. Plots of all kinds have been rife. There has been constant fear for weeks that a massacre and conflagration would be attempted. Gen. Otis warned his officers to be ever vigilant and since the first battle on Friday four troops have guarded all quarters within the lines.

Anciento Lanson, president of Negros Island, called on Gen. Otis with his fellow delegates. They assured Gen. Otis of the hearty support of the Visayas. The government of Negros, they declared, was in favor of American rule. The commission offered to raise an army of 100,000 Visayans to fight the Tagalos on the island of Luzon.

CONGRESS

The House on Friday finally passed the sundry civil appropriation bill, to which it had devoted over a week. No important amendment had been adopted. The Speaker's ruling upon the motion to recommit the bill, with instructions to incorporate in it the Nicaragua canal amendment, was sustained—155 to 96. A bill was passed authorizing the President to appoint five additional cadets-at-large to the naval academy. The evening session was devoted to private pension legislation. The naval personnel bill, for which the Navy Department has been contending for so many years, was passed by the Senate. It was under discussion for several hours, but was passed practically in the form in which it was reported by the Senate committee. The remainder of the day's session was devoted to passage of bills on the private pension calendar, seventy-four in number, and to the reading of the Alaska code bill.

The Senate spent most of the day Saturday on the postoffice appropriation bill, but failed to complete it. An echo of the old star route developments was heard when several Senators criticised the method by which a combination of speculators secured the star route contracts. Several bills of minor importance were passed early in the day. The House spent two hours upon the naval appropriation bill without making any progress. The remainder of the session was devoted to eulogies upon the life and public services of the late Representative Northway, of Ohio. The paragraph in the bill relating to the naval academy, against which Mr. Mudd (Rep., Md.) raised a point of order, was stricken out, the point of order being sustained. Mr. Mudd then moved additional appropriations of $720,000 for the completion of the buildings at the academy authorized in the last naval bill.

During almost six hours Monday afternoon the postoffice appropriation bill was under discussion in the Senate, the time being consumed largely by Mr. Butler (Pop., N. C.) and Mr. Pettigrew (Sil. Rep., S. D.) in an amendment providing that the postal commission should present its final report to Congress by March 1, 1900. Failing after many trials to obtain unanimous consent for the insertion of the amendment in the bill, Mr. Butler permitted it to come to a vote. It was defeated 27 to 19. Mr. Hawley, chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, moved to take up the army reorganization bill, unanimous consent having been refused to take up the measure without displacing the unfinished business—the anti-scalping bill. Mr. Hawley's motion prevailed, 44 to 26, this making the army bill the unfinished business. A separate bill appropriating $20,000,000 for payment to Spain under the provisions of the treaty of Paris was passed by the House under suspension of the rules. The Senate bill to reimburse the Governors of States for expenses paid by the States in organizing volunteers for service in the war with Spain before their muster into the service of the United States also was passed Formal discussion of the Hull-Hawley army reorganization bill was begun in the Senate Tuesday afternoon. Mr. Hawley and Mr. Warren, Republicans, supported the measure, and Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Cockrell, Democrats, opposed it, while Mr. Proctor, Republican, addressed the Senate in favor of some amendments which he had proposed to the bill. The postoffice appropriation bill was laid before the Senate and its consideration was resumed. At 2 o'clock the debate closed and the voting began. Mr. Butler's amendment reducing the amount paid to railroads was defeated, 45 to 15. The bill was then passed. The House reached the last page of the naval bill and adjourned with a point of order pending against a provision fixing the price of armor plate at $545 per ton. Much of the time was occupied in debating the amendment offered by Mr. Mudd (Rep., Md.) appropriating $720,000 to complete the three buildings authorized to be erected at the naval academy at Annapolis. The House adopted the amendment, 75 to 53.

The House on Wednesday inaugurated the custom which has prevailed for many years in the Senate of listening to the reading of Washington's farewell address on Washington's birthday. Two hours were devoted to the naval-appropriation bill. The consideration of the naval bill was suspended to allow the members of the House to pay tribute to the memory of the late Senator Morrill of Vermont. The session of the Senate was devoted to two special orders—the reading of Washington's farewell address, an annual custom of the Senate on Washington's birthday, and the pronouncing of eulogies on the late Senator Justin S. Morrill of Vermont.

The naval appropriation bill finally passed the House Thursday afternoon, after four days of acrimonious debate, most of which was spent upon the question of rehabilitating the naval academy at Annapolis in accordance with the scheme inaugurated by the appropriation of $500,000 in the last naval bill and the proposition to increase the maximum price to be paid for armor plate to $545 a ton, existing law limiting it to $400. Upon both propositions the Naval Committee suffered signal defeats. The amendment to build a great armor plant was ruled out upon a point of order. During the entire session, until 6 o'clock, the Senate had under consideration the river and harbor bill. Good progress was made, eighty-nine pages having been disposed of, with the exception of one amendment. A bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs permitting volunteer regiments to retain their colors and to deposit them in the State capitals was passed.

SONG OF LABOR.

Work, work, work,
In meadow and mill and mart;
Work, work, work,
Till the dews of labor start.
Where the sailors launch their ships,
And plow the waves apart,
Work with a song on the lips,
And work with a prayer in the heart.

Let the dreamer lie at ease,
And gaze at the bright blue sky,
Lulled by the murmuring bees,
While the summer winds go by;
Though its skies be cold and gray,
Be this thy heart's content,
That thine is the sweeter day
In useful labor spent.

Better to delve all day
With the blessing of peace at night,
Than to fritter the time away,
With fingers idle and white.
For labor is God's good gift,
Though it be the curse of the fall;
And the hands that struggle and lift
Are the noblest hands of all.

A CIRCUS TRAGEDY.

I.

Gugusse, the favorite of the Winter Cirque, which stood in the shadow of the Kremlin, in Moscow, Russia, was not a handsome fellow. He had neither the wit of the clown, the grace of the chariot driver nor the versatility of the ringmaster, yet he was more popular with the Muscovites than all the three together. He owed his popularity a good deal to nature, who had sent him into the world, equipped with an enormous head, large, fanlike ears, and a hunchback balanced upon slender legs, which bowed beneath their weight. He was the king of the dwarfs and the idol of the mob—for, to a mob, grace, wit and strength are nothing compared with hideous deformity.

Yet he was a man. He had passions like other men. He had a heart within his bony body as capable of human affection as that possesssed by any of the public who applauded his tricks. And this heart he had thrown at the feet of Mlle. Nina, daughter of Adolphe, the equilibrist, the handsomest horsewoman in the circus.

When she appeared at the circus for the first time he was dazzled by her beauty. She danced into the ring in a cloud of gauze, among which spangles glittered like diamonds. A white rose, suspended from pearly teeth, contrasted with the rich red of her cheeks and coils of jet black hair, which streamed luxuriantly down to her waist. She was proudly, insolently beautiful, and the dwarf—whom the whim of a circus manager had taken from the cobbler's lapstone—was completely dazzled by the sight of such radiant loveliness.

As time went on the star dropped from the sky. The distance between them grew less and less as the illusion faded from his eyes. Every morning he used to see the dazzling beauty of the previous night, in a dirty morning wrapper, patching her scanty wardrobe as she watched the pot boil in the open air. He began to talk with her, and then he began to dream, and in his dreams he saw Nina walking by his side radiant with happiness.

Nina laughed at his gibes, screamed at his jokes and shouted "Encore, Gugusse!" when the love-stricken dwarf made some grotesque movement, which, he hoped, would be interpreted as an exhibition of affection. The fair horsewoman occasionally caressed him as she would have caressed a dog. He was less than a dog in the eyes of the circus people. Jealous of his popularity, they cuffed him whenever they met him, and the dwarf found it useless to protest.

One evening he told Nina that he loved her. The girl stared at him a moment as if she had not heard aright and then burst into a fit of laughter. Gugusse frowned, and drew himself up to the full height of his little figure, hoping perchance to impress her. Then he told her how he had loved her from the moment he first saw her, and how life was impossible without her regard.

Every word the dwarf uttered was like a jest to the merry-hearted girl. She sat in her chair and shook with the exuberance of mirth. Gugusse stepped forward and took one of her white, plump hands in his horny palm. Nina jumped up with a gesture of disgust, drew her hand away, and struck the dwarf a blow in the face.

A few hours later the circus rang with cheers as Gugusse entered. But the dwarf had no heart for his work that night, and he was hissed from the ring.

I.

The next day the circus bills bore the imposing announcement:

"Unparalleled Novelty. Stupendous Attractions. The Tragedy of Usande; or, the Martyred Maiden. Mlle. Nina and Gugusse."

At 7 o'clock the house was crowded. The usual exercises took place—tight rope, trapeze, horizontal bar—but they passed almost unnoticed. The people were waiting for the promised tragedy. They wanted to see the white-robed maiden devoured by the bear.

At last Gugussse and Nina entered the ring, and the pent-up excitement of the crowd found vent in cheers. Nina was witchingly beautiful in her white toga, over which fell tresses of rich, dark hair. She looked like the white-souled martyrs of old, for whom the stake had no terrors. She advanced to the center of the ring, and Gugussse, looking as hideous as the headsman of the restoration, bound her securely to the post. Nina clasped her hands together, and lifted her large eyes skyward in an attitude of prayer.

Gugusse disappeared and reentered the ring with a tame bear, which had been his playfellow since he left his Polish home. He held the animal by the ear, and as the brute struggled and growled menacingly, the people applauded to the echo.

They watched Gugusse approach the maiden, and heard some words uttered, which they took to be an appeal for her recantation. In reality Gugusse was murmuring a passionate declaration.

"Nina, I love you. Have pity on me. Can you not hear me? Have pity on me or I will let Biska fly at you. I have made him drink brandy. I have beaten him, and this morning I stole his meat from him. He is hungry; he is mad; he will tear you to pieces. Will you be mine?"

Nina shook her head with a gesture of impatience.

"Nina! Nina! I am a man—I have a right to love you. I love you with my whole soul. I cannot live without your love. Be mine! Do not make me desperate. Ah! you shake your head. You will not! You despise me. I know it. You shall pay dearly for it now!"

As he finished speaking the dwarf bent down and unmuzzled the furious brute which pawed the ground viciously at his feet. Nina turned pale. There was desperation in the dwarf's face—there was murder in his eyes. Her cheeks blanched with terror, and from her lips came the cry:

"Help! help! help!"

With a rapid movement Gugusse unmuzzled the bear, and the famished animal dashed past him, sprang upon the helpless girl and rent her with his claws.

The scene was so realistic, so strikingly rendered, that the audience applauded until the circus was filled with a deafening roar. They little knew that a tragedy was being enacted, and thought it was part of the "business" when a beautiful head dropped down and blood spurted from the white, unclothed arm.

What passed just then in the mind of the wretched creature who stood watching the horrible sight? Was he conscious of his infamy? Was he seized with pity at the sight of so much youth and beauty being ruthlessly torn to pieces? Did he wish to undo what he had done?

No one can tell, but just as the bear was planting his cruel claws upon the white shoulders of the half-conscious girl the dwarf sprang forward and seized the brute in his muscular arms. With a mighty effort he pulled the bear off his victim and flung him to the ground.

The passion which famine and excitement had aroused in the bear caused him to turn with furious force upon his master. As they rolled over together in the sawdust the bear caught the dwarf in a terrible embrace. There was a cracking of bones, and before the people belonging to the circus had time to run to his aid the infuriated beast had planted his fangs into his neck.

And the crowd, little suspecting that a grim tragedy had taken place before their eyes, jumped on their seats and howled out, amid a storm of applause:

"Encore, Gugusse! Encore, Gugusse!"

A FAMOUS PAINTING BOUT.

Grapes that Birds Pecked at, and a Curtain that Deceived Zeuxis

In a chapter on "Grecian Painters," in his St. Nicholas Serial, "Bright Sides of History," Mr. E. H. House lets one of his characters tell this famous story in his own language:

"Well, uncle, I may not remember everything, but I will tell it to you as well as I can. Zeuxis was the one to start the business. He went around Athens 'win his chin in the air,' as Mr. Besant says, telling folks he could make better pictures than all the other fellows put together. Parrhasius didn't think he could stand that, on any terms; so they challenged each other, and it was arranged that each of them must get up as good a piece of work as he could, and let the public decide which should hold the championship. Zeuxis led off with a man carrying a basket of grapes, life-size; and Parrhasius followed with only a big curtain. When the show opened, a lot of birds flew to the grapes and tried to nibble them. The people went wild over that, and Zeuxis felt sure he was going to win in the first round. He called out to Parrhasius to hurry and lift his curtain, if there was anything worth looking at behind it; and then the match came to a quick finish, for the curtain was the picture, you see, and there was nothing at all on the other side. As soon as Zeuxis saw how the thing stood, he owned up that he wasn't in it. He had only fooled a flock of birds, but Parrhasius had caught a first-class painter, who ought to have known all the tricks of the trade. Then Parrhasius held his chin in the air, and walked off with the belt. But Zeuxis behaved very decently after it was all over. He admitted that his man carrying the grapes must have been badly done, or else the birds wouldn't have dared to go near him; so for that alone he deserved to be counted out. That's all there is of it, I believe. What are you laughing at, uncle. Haven't I told it right?"

"Oh, yes," said Uncle Claxton, as soon as he could get his face straight; "right enough, after a fashion; though I never heard it just that way before, and I didn't expect you to report it as if it were an Athenian prize-fight."

The Police at Shanghai.

In a well ordered British-American quarter at Shanghai, China, the strong force of police is an interesting feature. Some of these are Englishmen; others are Chinese who have been trained to deal firmly with the great coolie class which throngs in all parts of Shanghai; and there are besides the Sikh police, chosen men from the Punjaubi regiments, who patrol the city and its lonely outskirts on horseback. In the French settlement the guardians of the peace are wholly different, being fairly faithful copies of the typical gendarmes of Paris. They are assisted by a certain number of Gallicized Chinese, but the affairs of the French quarter are not, on the whole, so well administered as those of its Angle-Saxon neighbors.

England's Honey Supply.

English bees are unable to produce as much honey as England needs. Every year we have to import 2,250,000 pounds, of which the declared value is $155,000 or about six cents per pound. Among the countries engaged in supplying our markets with this product, the principal are the United States, Chili and Peru, the other contributors including the British West Indies, France, Australiasia, Canada, Germany, Italy and the Spanish West Indies. No statistics of the quantity of honey produced in the United Kingdom are obtainable, but it is quite evident that bee-keeping is capable of being much more profitably developed than it is.—Westminister Gazette.

Romantic Career of Rev. Robert Collyer, a Gifted Clergyman.

Few clergymen have had the experience of Rev. Robert Collyer, pastor of the Church of the Messiah, New York, who spent many years of his life at the humble occupation of a blacksmith. He is an old man now—in all except manner, intellect and spirit. He is not exactly an orator. But he is a deep thinker, and has what he says so well planned and thought out that it strikes with much more force, to the mind of the average thinker, than any flowery flights of oratory would or could.

Although Dr. Collyer accuses himself of having been a dunce in his boyhood, this statement does not agree with his early habits as illustrated by the following incident: It is said that a gentleman about fifty years ago stopped his horse near a smithy in a Yorkshire village. On entering it he hardly arrested the attention of a boy who seemed to be absorbed in the work of blowing the bellows. Closer observation revealed the presence of a book placed on a shelf near the lad's head with its pages kept open by two pieces of iron. Each time he brought down the bellows or released it he appeared to catch a sentence from the book. For twelve years he stood at the forge in Ilkley, having previously been an apprentice in a linen factory.

His love for Yorkshire is very strong, especially that part of it where he spent his boyhood days. For twenty-five years he labored to give to the world a picture of Ilkley ancient and modern, and a large book bearing that title was published by the "blacksmith preacher" and J. Horsfall Truner since Dr. Collyer went to New York.

Dr. Collyer was 27 years old when he sailed with his young wife, the day after their marriage, among the steerage passengers, to seek their fortune in the new world. He had preached occasionally in Methodist churches "for nothing a Sunday," but he came to America with the single ambition of being a successful blacksmith under a government where he could have a vote and a voice. For nine years he worked in a shop in Shoemakertown, near Philadelphia, leaving the anvil in 1859 to go to Chicago to preach. He had been a licensed local preacher in the Methodist Church while he was in Shoemakertown, but had changed his views during his last year there, and went West to take charge of a Unitarian church.

A FUNERAL AT SEA.

BURIED ALIVE.

Punishment of an Indian Who Proved Recreant to His Sweetheart.

Seven men were jailed at Homing Post, in the Osage Nation, Okl., charged with a horrible crime—the burying of a man alive. The men admitted their guilt, but singularly believed that they had done nothing wrong. The story is a strange one.

Many years ago Black Horse, a Kaw Indian, met Miss Thula Bigheart, the daughter of ex-Chief Bigheart, of the Osage Nation. They loved each other fondly and became engaged. After that Miss Bigheart went away to Washington to school. In the meantime she forgot her Indian lover, and when she returned last fall to her home there was Black Horse to greet her, but for him she had no fond words. However, as she had promised to be his bride, the date was set and great preparations were made. The ceremony was to be held at the home of Frank Johnson, a relative of Miss Bigheart. Black Horse knew she did not love him as of old, but he said nothing. The 100 guests assembled at the home of Johnson and made ready for the feast. As is the custom, Black Horse was not to come till 9 o'clock, but when that hour arrived he did not show up; neither did he come an hour or two hours later. Miss Bigheart finally became discouraged and invited the guests to be seated at the feast.

After the feast Miss Bigheart is said to have called aside her three brothers and her foster uncle, Frank Johnson, together with his three sons, and asked them to find Black Horse and bury him alive for the slight he had put upon her. Some hours later the men reported to Miss Bigheart and said they had found Black Horse and had buried him alive. This was on New Year's day. The next day Miss Bigheart went away and the secret of Black Horse's disappearance remained unrevealed.

A short time ago a party of Kansas hunters discovered the body of Black Horse buried in the sand near Homing Post. The authorities were notified and they speedily ran down the seven men responsible for the Indian's death. The men confessed.

Later Miss Bigheart was arrested at the home of an uncle near Pawhuska. She denied that she asked her brothers or the others to bury Black Horse alive, but admitted that she may have assented to the proposition.

A FUNERAL AT SEA.

One of the Most Impressive of Burial Ceremonies.

A funeral at sea is impressively solemn. In a large ship like a liner carrying so many souls, it is not an unfrequent occurrence, especially when invalids are being brought home. The body is placed in a coffin painted black and perforated with holes, so that it fills with water on contact with the sea. It is, besides, heavily weighted with fine bars. It is carried to the afterwell deck of the ship by seamen, who place it on gratings by the opened starboard bangway. At the commencement of the service the ship is slowed down. All the officers not on duty attend in full uniform, and wearing brassards on the left arm. Should there be a clergyman on board he is asked to conduct the service; if not, the Captain reads it. The bell is tolled and the ensign floats half-mast high. It is an open service, and any of the passengers who care to attend do so. Four seamen stand by the gangway, two on each side. The Union flag is placed over the coffin, the inner corners being tied to a grating placed lengthwise underneath. The two seamen farthest from the sea hold lanyards attached to the grating, and wait for the signal of the Captain to tilt it, so that the coffin slides from under the flag into the water, the engines being previously stopped. One hears the splash, the ensign is immediately hoisted close up, and the engines proceed again at full speed.

SUCCESSFUL BALLOON.

This One Safely Crossed the Channel from England to France.

Many attempts have been made to cross from England to France in a balloon, but only a few have been successful. This balloon crossed under the management of Percival Spencer. The sail was of great benefit in navigating the balloon.

The Queen's Drives.

The Queen's coachman never knows where he is to drive until her Majesty is actually seated in the carriage. This rule has been in force ever since the Queen ascended the throne.

"Are you aware, sir," said the good man, "that you are going straight to perdition?" "Am I?" asked the wicked one, as he stopped, balanced himself unsteadily, and looked half incredulously at the other; "then th' feller I met back there on nexsh cornersh blame liar; he said I wash wobblin' all over th' street."—Cleveland Leader.

ONE OF OUR DESERT ISLANDS.

San Clemente, off the Coast of California, Is Barren and Lonely.

About fifty miles off the coast of California, nearly opposite San Diego, lies the barren, lonely, and half unknown island of San Clemente. The trip is usually a rough one. But in summer-time, at least, Wilson's Cove offers a comparatively safe harbor and if one knows the locality well it is not hard to land on the steep boulder-strewn beach. From the shore the bare hills rise abruptly on all sides, broken only by a little terracing. The first impression given by the island and confirmed by a study of its structure as a whole is that of a great block of the earth's crust, tipped up on the side toward Catalina, and very little altered by erosion.

San Clemente forms a pasture for thousands of sheep and a smaller number of cattle, and Wilson's Cove is the headquarters of the sheep herders when they are on the island. That is chiefly in the spring and summer, for during the rainy season not only do the sheep need less care but the island is often unapproachable on account of rough weather. At such seasons one old man, who has lived there for thirty years, used to have the island to himself, and might see no human face for three months at a time. His cabin stands just above the shore at Wilson's Cove, and near it are the few rough buildings used by the sheep men. The place is usually known as Gallagher's.

The only water supply here is rain caught during the winter season in tanks. The days of living in this favored spot are further enhanced in summer time by strong winds which flow through a gap in the hills, bringing from the naked slopes clouds of dust.

The more level regions of the island remind one constantly of the desert. There are no trees except a very few in some of the larger canons. In the spring there are flowers, but they soon wither, and the summer aspect of the island seems its normal one. In some places there is grass, in others only cactus, or a little low underbrush, and two species of mesembryanthemum, which are called "salt grass" by the herders.

Not only camp sites, but stone implements and human bones remain in considerable numbers to testify to the former occupation of this island by Indians.

The desert-like character of the island is intensified by the almost absolute stillness. Birds of all sorts are much fewer than on Catalina. Except for a few crows—seldom heard—there seem to be none but the smaller birds, such as linnets and sparrows, which live principally in the canons. There are no squirrels on the island. Snakes and frogs are also unknown there, but in their place are multitudes of silent, sun-loving lizards. In the canons one may catch an occasional glimpse of a wary fox; but generally the only large animals seen are the herds of wild goats, and the sheep and cattle, scarcely less wild, which are pastured here.

The most striking features of the island's topography, next to the terraces themselves are the canons which cut across them. There are no gradual descents from ridge to canon, but a chasm yawns without warning across the level plain of a terrace, its walls dropping almost vertically into depths which can only be guessed. To scale these walls is in most cases an utter impossibility. Even at the most favorable points the path which winds down to the bed of the canon and up again on the opposite side is so steep and rough that only a mountain-bred animal could follow it. The hard-riding Mexican herders will not trust themselves to their sure-footed horses in crossing some of the canons, and any one acquainted with the class knows that a trail which will make a Mexican dismount must be bad indeed.

In the dry season not a stream is flowing anywhere on San Clemente. Only the great depth of the canons cut in the solid rock and the immense boulders which are scattered over their beds can give any idea of the force of the torrents which foam and roar through the gorges in the winter. Neither words nor pictures can do justice to the wildness and immensity of San Clemente's topography in general. The depth of the canons, the broad expanse of the terraces, the height of their cliffs and the roughness of the coast are all belittled in any general view, and figures are powerless to measuring grandeur.

We sailed out of the cove in the sunset, and this was our last view of San Clemente; the waters around us silver blue, the rugged cliffs rising above them, black against the saffron sky, and nestled in the shadow of those beetling hills, the little cabin, pathetic in its loneliness, with the sturdy old man sitting on the porch, his dogs and fowls around him, watching the vessel out of sight.

Originality of a Schemer.

A big, uncouth-looking stranger with shoulders like a Hercules, walked into a department store late one afternoon, and, after gazing about a minute, stepped up to a salesman and made known his wishes to buy a shirt. A couple of samples were shown him and he informed the salesman that either one would do. It was an article that sold for $1.50, and in making payment the stranger pulled from his hip pocket a huge roll of bills. He apparently skimmed them over in search of a small bill, but he could not find one of less denomination than $500. One of these he handed the surprised salesman, but he arose to the occasion and sent it away with the cash boy.

When the change came back it was nearly all in small bills. The stranger interrupted the salesman in his work of counting the bills by reaching for the pile and wadding it into his hip pocket. "Oh! I guess it's all right; and you can give that shirt to a porter if you can find one big enough to wear it. All I wanted was the change. You see, it was after banking hours, and I am a man of resources. Good day."—Philadelphia Record.

The "Evil Eye" in Italy.

The "evil eye" is as good as an article of faith among the Italians, who take every imaginable precaution to counteract its baneful influence. The syndic, or head of the municipality, of Leghorn has been arrested for misappropriation of funds and his property seized to meet the claims of his creditors. An appraiser, Sig. Banolena, was named to value the furniture of the syndic. Bandolena set to work with a will but after a few hours he felt sick, went home and died of apoplexy. Another appraiser was named to continue the valuation, a Sig. Cirri, who after a few days' work went home to dinner, and, strange to say, died of apoplexy during the night. There is now a strike among the appraisers of Leghorn. No one will get into the shoes of the dead men and judicial proceedings have had to be suspended until they can find a third man who will risk apoplexy for a consideration. This stout hearted man has not been found as yet.—Chicago Record.

HOW DREYFUS RECEIVED THE NEWS.

The Reopening of His Case Makes Little Impression on Him.

How did Dreyfus receive the good news that his case was commanding universal attention, and that the Criminal Chamber of the Court of Cassation had taken it seriously in hand and was conducting an exhaustive investigation? It will be remembered that in his reply to the telegram which his wife was allowed to forward to him he said that he rejoiced with them all and was in excellent physical and moral condition. Whatever particulars may have been received at the French Ministry of the Colonies on this subject, have however, been carefully withheld from the public, but as matters stand at present this was rather to be expected than otherwise, as the officials here are not in the habit of taking the world into their confidence.

Now, a person occupying an important position at Cayenne, and well informed as to what is passing at the Ile du Diable, has arrived at Paris, and in the course of conversation on this very interesting topic, he positively declares that the ex-captain of artillery received the glad tidings very coolly, and did not appear to be at all impressed or excited. The reason which he gives for this is a melancholy one. Although the unhappy man endeavored to assure his family in the affectionate message to which I have referred, he is, according to this authority, in a very prostrate state.

"Dreyfus," he goes on to explain, "is in a spirit of great intellectual depression, and it is not possible that this should be otherwise. Only think! He has been for nearly four years cut off from all intercourse with his fellow-creatures, as no one is allowed to speak to him, or even to answer his questions. Moreover, it is a long time since he has asked about anything, as this would have been a mere waste of breath. In the earlier period of his life at the Ile du Diable, Dreyfus worked a good deal at algebra, but now he rarely takes up any intellectual task. I can, however, declare in the most positive manner that whenever he does speak it is to proclaim his innocence. But as nobody is permitted to reply to him, this question cannot be discussed. Moreover, he sees only his keepers. There are a dozen of them, and they are replaced every three months. Besides them only four persons can get near Dreyfus. They are the Governor of Guiana, the Director of the Penal Administration, the Commandant of the Island and the doctor.

"Well," concludes this gentleman, "apart from what I have mentioned it is utterly impossible to furnish details about the position of Dreyfus. He is considerably aged, walks with a pronounced stoop, and his mind has become enfeebled. This is all that I can say about him, and as a matter of fact, with the single exception of the people who can get to him, no one could add one new or interesting particular."

The Cape Bustards.

Two of the most beautiful of the lesser Cape bustards of South Africa are the Vaal and the Blue koorhaans, birds of splendid form and coloring, good epually for sport or for the table. Another very beautiful bustard is the Bush koorhaan, a denizen of bush and forest country, with its notable pinkish crest, its intense black underplumage, and its handsomely speckler black and rufour back. This bird gets up most silently before the gnuuer, wavers through the trees with a flight not unlike that of a woodcock, and affords not only pretty shooting, but excellent eating.

The paauw itself may well be termed the king of all the bustards. It attains a length of more than four feet, a wing spread of eight feet four inches, and a weight of as much as fifty pounds. The weight depends, of course, greatly upon the bird's feeding. Average well-fed specimens will scale from twenty-five to thirty pounds. But at certain seasons this magnificent bird feeds greedily upon the gum exuding from the thorny acacia, and puts on flesh and fat in a quite amazing manner. In big locust years, too, the paauw gains flesh with great rapidity. At such seasons well-fed male specimens will attain enormous bulk and fatness, and are to be found ranging between thirty and forty pounds—many colonists say even as much as fifty or sixty pounds—in weight. The flesh of this splendid game bird is delicious eating, and a paauw is one of the greatest luxuries of the hunter's camp fire or the colonist's table.—Saturday Review.

Made From Sawdust.

The town of Deseronto, in Canada, where there are several large lumber mills, is partially lighted by gas made from sawdust. The sawdust is charged in retorts, which are heated by a wood fire, the gas from the retorts passing into series of coils and thence into the purifiers, which are similar to those used for coal gas. Lime is the principal purifying agent employed. When it passes out of the retorts the gas possesses an odor much less disagreeable than that of ordinary lighting gas, and resembles somewhat that of smoke from a fire of green wood or leaves. The works in use are small, turning out daily 540 cubic meters of gas, for the production of which about two tons of sawdust are required.

The Kentucky board of health has refused to sanction the practice of osteopathy in that state.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Mystery in a Woman's Death—Small Boy Killed by Peculiar Accident—Train Wreckers Confess Their Deed—Two Explosions of Natural Gas.

The body of a young woman was found lying in the bushes near the Wabash river, near Independence village. It proved to be that of Miss Mehaly Silvers, who had left the home of Samuel Dutcher, where she had been working, and had started to walk to her home, a distance of four miles. Near the body was a bundle of clothing, containing a purse, in which was $5 and a locket.

Explosion Costs Two Lives.

Charles Pumfrie, in lighting a fire in a stove in his residence at Marion, ignited natural gas that had collected in the house during the night from a leak in the pipe. In the explosion Pumfrie was blown into the yard and covered with debris from the wrecked building. His wife, who was ill in bed, was saved from death from the falling roof by the protection of an iron bedstead. Both were fatally injured.

Explosion in a Schoolhouse.

An explosion of gas occurred at the school building in Jonesboro, when 400 children were in the building. Escaping gas was discovered by one of the pupils and a match was applied to a joint in the service pipe, and an explosion followed which tore up the floor of the building for a distance of forty feet. None of the children was seriously injured.

At Fort Wayne, Carl, the 8-year-old son of Dr. Derbyshire, was instantly killed. Carl, with other boys, had taken the front trucks of a wagon and buried one wheel in the ground, the other was turned up and revolved rapidly. While Carl was riding on the wheel it broke down and fell on his chest, crushing a rib through the heart.

Attempt to Wreck a Train.

Roy Galbreath, aged 30, and Frank Roadarmel, aged 20, were arrested at Valparaiso for putting ties on the Grand Trunk road for the purpose of wrecking the midnight passenger train. But for an extra west-bound freight discovering the obstruction the passenger train might have been wrecked. Both men confessed their guilt.

The glass cover of the casket was broken in pieces and other evidences pointed unmistakably to the conclusion that he had regained consciousness after being buried and had died from suffocation.

AUBURN WEEKLY COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....MARCH 2, 1899.

TAKE IT OUT

The law editor of the Dispatch must be going daffy, else why would that paper keep standing at the head of its columns the old and exploded fraud about newspaper subscribers. Here it is.

NEWSPAPER LAWS.

"Any person who takes the paper regularly from the postoffice, whether directed to his name or whether he is a subscriber or not, is responsible for the pay.

The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the postoffice or removing and leaving them uncalled for, when in arrears, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud."

Now there is not a word of truth in the above. It is not the law, and never has been. Some years ago, an ingenious publisher invented this terrible law and its "court decisions" to frighten delinquent subscribers into paying up their just dues. It probably scared a few, but the fright soon wore off for men who will refuse to pay the small sum they owe on a newspaper, have pretty tough hides. But other editors got hold of this "law" and it suited them so well, that they, too, published it. But after a time your Uncle Samuel got to hear of his "new law" and at once he got his dander up. He bade his postmaster-general, tell the newspaper men they were chumps to believe such stuff. He went further; he said that now that it was known that there was no such law, the publishing of it as a law was a fraud, and those who continued to do so would be punished. The thing stopped suddenly, and now no one hears of it except when some new man goes into the newspaper business. He bites at it as soon as it comes in sight, just as he does when a patron brings him in a copy of the "Ulster County Gazette" a paper "published in the last month of the last year of the last century, etc." Newspaper debts are like all others and have to be collected in the same way. The law does not provide a special punishment for one-class of citizens. It serves all alike. If there is a special punismest for men who beat the newspapers it mast be looked for in the Bible. Better take this fraudulent law out of your columns, for Uncle Sam's gobulins 'll get you, ef you don't watch out.

THROUGH THE HEART

A Garrett Tough Shot Dead While Drunk and Disorderly.

Last evening an hour or so before dark, Sheriff Hathaway was called over to Garrett, as a murder had been committed. He and Deputy-sheriff Hartford went at once. They found the parties and the murdered man at a house in "Dutchtown" which is just this side of the low ground which lies next to the town proper. It is on the road leading from Garrett down to the Junction, and near the little turn just out of the town. The inmates of the house were arrested and brought over here, and are now in jail. They are; Mrs. Emma Fish, the head of the establishment and her son Ben Fish, a young man of about 18; two girls, Della Farmer and Laura Wilson. They were interviewed by the COURIER, but Mrs. Fish was not inclined to talk much. The son, being the one who did the shooting, of course has little to say. The girls did not see the shooting, being in another room, and know very little about it. Mr. Moody their attorney, is now preparing for their defense. From all these sources, we get a fair idea of the trouble.

It appears that Mrs. Fisher has been keeping a "resort" for some time and one of the girls has been with her for two or three years, the other being a more recent addition to her family group. Last evening about four o'clock while the son was down town, two men, strangers to the inmates, so the latter claim, came to the house drunk, and in a noisy and disorderly manner, proceeded to terrorize the establishment. Mrs. Fish could neither quiet them nor make them leave, and the girls shut themselves into another room for safety. The strangers kept up their racket till the son, Ben, came home, and he tried to get them to leave. They pitched onto him, and pounded him over the head, and it is supposed that to defend himself, he drew a revolver, and fired at the men, hitting one in the breast, the ball going through the heart. He fell and died at once. The other man ran out, and got away. Young Fish made no attempt to escape, and claims he did the shooting in self defense. The mother is greatly depressed over the affair, and the trouble of her son. The girls are merely held as witnesses, though as a matter of fact, they did not see the shooting. They were in the other room all the time and when the shooting began, they were too frightened to stay, and broke open the window and jumped out, they hardly know how. They did not come back into the house for some time, not till the second man was gone, the wounded man dead and all quiet. They will all be called before the justice for examination this afternoon, and that officer will probably bind them over to court, which sets next week.

Mr. Sharpless who is associated with Mr. Moody in the defense, is over from Garrett. Mr. Pomeroy, for the state, is getting the case ready and Prosecutor Rhodes is expected on the afternoon train. But the trial will not begin in time to get into today's paper.

The dead man's name is Dulton and his home at Battle Creek. Both men were employed as brakemen on the B. & O.

March Juries.

At the drawing of names by the Jury Commissioners this forenoon, the following is the result:

GRAND JURY.

Samuel R. Rickel	Grant
Darius Haag	Keyser
Elijah Saylor	Concord
Henry W. Magginis	Newville
Benj. F. Cornelius	Troy
Josephus R. Shilling	Concord

TRIAL JURY.

Richard C. Baxter	Union
Frank Trowbridge	Union
Jerry Walborn	Keyser
Frank Hoover	Smithfield
Morton Wilson	Union
Jerome Showalter	Union
Wm. R. Boots	Concord
Chas. W. Graham	Richland
James N. McBride	Grant
Henry L. Houser	Butler
Wm. Ensley	Butler
Thomas Hall	Butler

The first six names drawn are always the grand jurors; the next twelve being the petit or trial jurors. In this case, however, it is not certain that the grand jury will be used at all. Judge Hartman has decided that they need not be called, as it is not known whether there is anything for them to do. We presume that if any serious need should arise, they could be called later.

How is Your Gasoline Stove?

R. G. Curtis, an expert at cleaning and repairing gasoline stoves, will be in town for a limited time. He comes well recommended, and work entrusted to his care will be carefully looked after. Owners and users of stoves will understand that this is the proper time to have them cleaned and repaired for the coming season. Mr. Curtis will be located at Culbertson & Boland's.

My daughter, after being treated by four doctors and being given up for lost, a neighber recommended Foley's Kidney Cure. Today she is able to walk several miles without fatigue. I feel we would have lost her if it was not for your medicine.

Yours Resp'y, MRS. J. M. BAILEY.

An Illustration

We clip the following from the Dispatch to show how easily a want of knowledge or a want of care as to facts, can do an injustice. Under the above head it is this:

"The older people in Auburn wil remember that when the Lake Shore road was surveyed, through the influence of several men it was constructed west of town when it should have run east of the creek. Had this been done the Junction would not now be a mile and a half away. Again when the B. & O. was surveyed through the south part of town and that company wanted to secure ground for their shops here the awful price asked drove the company away and the town of Garrett was the result. Had an enterprising unselfish spirit been manifested then Garrett would not have been built and Auburn today would be a city of 10,000 people.

This illustrates that a lack of public spirit engendered by selfish motives, with hopes of gain by the expense of others, by less than a score of men a quarter of a century ago and caused inconvenience and extra expense to thousands of people many times over. Who is it that has not time and again spent time and money to get to the Junction and back when going east or west on the B. & O. The Junction should have been located east of South Auburn with one depot for all the railroads passing this place. This opportunity is beyond recall and we only mention this fact to show what might have been done and should have been done for the convenience and up-building of Auburn at the proper time and how a few men can change conditions that will last for generations."

A part of this item is true. Some property owners in this vicinty, we believe used their influence to get the Jackson road on the west side of town, so they could sell town lots. But for this the Junction might possibly have been at the south or southeast part of town. But when we come to talk of the B. & O. shops, that is a different matter, as we shall show, before we are done with this subject! But first, we shall deal with the rank injustice of the Dispatch's article.

There was no "lack of public spirit" by Auburn citizens. They offered to give 40 acres of valuable land and $10,000 cash. Who says this was not liberal? There was no "awful price asked," but not only was this liberal offer refused by the B. & O. but when our people asked them "How much, then, do you want?" no satisfactory answer was given and the matter stopped for it takes two to make a bargain. The Dispatch's article does injustice to men now passed away, but among the most liberal, energetic and progressive, the city.

In order to set this matter right, we will follow with a chapter, which will make it clear, that Auburn people did all that could be done. There was no use to try.

Court Matters.

Judge Hartman goes back to Angola the last of the week to finish any work that may be left and then begins court here next Monday. The trial jury will not likely be called till Thursday of the following week. March 6th, as there is a number of cases to be tried by the judge. As had been announced, the intention was not to call the grand jury, but the murder case from Garrett, will, we suppose, compel the calling of them together. But their session will likely be a short one.

THE DUTTON MURDER

Witnesses on Both Sides Heard Before Justice Walter.

As indicated in yesterday's Daily the preliminary examination in the Dutton murdur case, began yesterday about 4 p. m., about the time we went to press. Prosecutor Rhodes and Deputy-Prosecutor Pomeroy represented the state and Moody and Sharpless represented the defense. The Garrett marshal, Mr. Freese was here also. Sheriff Hathaway brought over the prisoner, Ben Fish, also his mother Mrs. Fish and the two girls Della Farmer and Laura Wilson. The state also had for its first witness, the other man implicated with Dutton in the affair and who it was said had disappeared at the time of the shooting. His name is Frank Compton. All the witnesses were sworn, and then sent away and the state called up Frank Compton. He is a young and intelligent man about 25. We give his long testimony in brief.

My name is Frank Compton. Live at Garrett and have been a fireman on the B. & O. since Dec 2. I have known Albert J. Compton about six weeks. I met him yesterday afternoon. We walked about some, went to two saloons, took a drink of whisky at each, then went to Dutton's room just east of the Ross House, met a friend or two there. When we left, I saw Dutton had a small bottle of whisky. He said he would go to Nick Ritter's saloon and pawn his watch for $2 and we would go out for a good time. But he could not get the money. So I went to a friend of mine, Mr. Thumma and got $2 of him, and Dutton said "We will go out to Mrs. Fish's resort and have a good time." We went out about 3:30 and one of the girls opened the door for us. We went in and staid an hour or an hour and half. (Here his testimony is not fit for publication.) He says there was no quarreling or trouble, till young Fish came in. As soon as Dutton saw Fish, he called out, "What d——d yellowhammer is that?" Ben Fish replied "G—d d—m you, I'll do you up," and stepped into another room. Dutton picked up the iron poker under the stove and said to me "Watch him do me up." Ben came back at once with a revolver and fired at Dutton, but missed, and Dutton struck him on the head with the poker. Ben fired again and missed and Dutton again struck him on the head. Ben fired the third time and Dutton dropped the poker saying to me, "My God I'm shot" and soon fell and died. Ben did not shoot again and I walked out. I saw the body later, and also the revolver. The witness seemed clear and calm and held his story on cross examination. He would not own they were drunk.

The next witness called was one of the girls.

My name is Della Farmer. Q. Is that your true name? Witness looked angrily at the Prosecutor, Pomeroy, and remained silent. After having the question repeated a time or two she said reluctantly:

"No it is not my real name. My name is Sophie Maxwell and my home is at Churubusco. I have worked some time at Fort Wayne for Mr. Hedekin on Wayne st. A friend told me he could get me a good place at Garrett, and H weeks ago today I came there and went to live with Mrs. Fish in Dutchtown, at the east part of town. I had met Benny Fish before. He has a sister living on a farm near Fort Wayne. At Mrs. Fish's were; her father and Benny, myself and the other girl Laura Wilson. (Witness kept calling Miss Wilson, "May.) I had known May 4 weeks yesterday. I do not know what May does for a living.

(All along here, an hour or so was wasted in quarrels between the attorneys and finally the court adjourned for supper.)

After supper, they started out better and Miss Maxwell went on.

I was at the house; the two men came to the door. I opened it and let them in, I said "Hello" and they said something of that sort I got them chairs near the stove. They had been drinking, and had a bottle and asked us to drink. I said, "I don't use the stuff," May, the other girl was on one side of the room at a table, writing and did not say much. The men drank, and began to complain that we did not give them attention, Mrs. Fish came from another room and they told her they had come to have a good time. She said, "you have come to the wrong place then." I went to the pump out on the porch to get a drink of water, then into the kitchen, then to the room where the men were. They said "Why in h—ll don't you drink?" I refused. They must have been there half an hour when Ben came in. One said "Who the h—ll is that?" I said "it is the landlady's son." I do not know what the men then said. Soon there was trouble for they began to kick things around, I was in my room washing my hands. I came out and said, "Boys, please don't act so." The dead man picked up the poker and jammed it through the window, breaking out the glass. Benny ordered them to stop saying, "Now that's enough, you can't make a rough house of my mother's house. But they said "We will, though. The dead man said as if speaking to his friend, "I'll show you I'm game." Ben said "You'll pay for this." He struck Ben square on the head with the poker. I ran out of the room saying, "Come on May, let's get out of this." We hurried into my room and shut the door behind us. It did not shut easy but we got it fastened soon, and hearing the racket we tried to get my window open. While trying this, the shooting began in the other room. One shot was fired, and we had got the window up a little. I stuck my feet out and slid out on my back. May then got out and we staid out till we were cold. By that time a doctor had come and we went in. The dead man lay there, and the doctor could do nothing for him. Mrs. Fish was crying and half distracted, saying "My poor Benny is killed." Ben was in the kitchen trying to stop the flow of blood from the cuts on his head made by the blow from the iron poker.

Cross ex, I saw Ben stagger when struck by the poker the first time, Did not see more. We got right out Did not see Ben have a revolver, did not see that till after we came back into the house. Saw none of the shooting. I do not know the names of the men. Never knew them. They kicked over chairs, but did not kick me, May has since told me that one of them kicked her. Can't say whether the men drank all their whisky or not I said, "Boys what makes you do so?" They said, "We came here for a good time and are a going to have it." When the fight began and I called May to come out with me, she said at first, "No, let's stay here," but she got scared, too, and followed me.

This closed her testimony, and the court adjourned, to meet at 9:00 a. m. today to take much additional testimony as thought necessary to get evidence sufficient to bind young Fish over to court. He is not a very attractive young man, but his condition may have much to do with that. His head is swathed in white bandages, one going clear around his head just above the ears and the other being a broad band from the forehead over the middle of his head to the back part of the other bandage. If the girl's testimony should prove true, that he was struck first he has a chance to plead self defense. But if Compton's story should prove true that Ben shot before Dutton struck him, he may have a hard time to save himself,

It seems that Dutton is of a good family. His mother lives three and one half miles from Jackson, Mich., and one half mile from the cemetery where he is to be buried. He is the youngest of the family. His brother John Dutton, who is yardmaster at Battle Creek, came here for the body, brought it from Garrett on a special in time to go north to Jackson at 5:30 p. m. Mr. Caruth met him there and had quite a talk The mother has heart disease and they told her Albert was badly hurt in an accident on the road. Now, they are a going to fix the story in a way, that she will never know, the disgraceful circumstances under which her son met his death.

CLUB NOTES.

The Reading Club will meet this week in regular session with Mrs. J. A. Barns on Thursday afternoon. A full attendance is desired as there will be business of importance to transact.

The Up-to Date Club met with Miss Nona McBride last Friday evening Miss Pearl Oberlin and Dall Gibson furnished some excellent music. Refreshments of a delicious nature such as cake, strawberry sauce, maccaroons, popcorn and candy were served, and al went home, saying "What a good time we have had."

The L L. C. met with Mrs. Holmes on last Saturday and those not in attendance missed a treat. The subject was, "The Virginias." Without in anyway detracting from the other states that have been under consideration, the Virginias seem to far to lead in interest and importance. The committee in arranging this day's program, had planned that the work should be of an original and personal nature. To the leader, Mrs. Lackey, had been given the subject, "Life in the Virginias," as all her life had been spent there with the exception of the few years she has lived in Auburn. She gave a delightful account of life in her native state, and made many tender yet delicate allusions to her childhood days in the old home. Her beautiful tribute to memory of the "old mammy," caused many of us to wish we had lived in Virginia and had a "mammy," to whom we could go and pour out our sorrows, and know in advance the unselfish sympathy we would receive. Mrs. Lackey said, "Mammy received what she gave, unqualified affection." The devotion of the dear mother of the south was most delicately touched upon in connection with the gallantry of the sons. She closed her paper with a beautiful description of a Christmas in Virginia. She had also asked several members to assist her in her work, and the following responded. Mrs. Husselman, Mrs Brown, Mrs. Olds, Mrs. Mollie Rose, Mrs. Schaab and Mrs. Barns.

The paper by Miss Nellie Buckley, "Harper's Ferry, and the Shenandoah Valley," was full of interest and recalled the story of John Brown and his Fort at this place.

"My Sojourn in the East," was the subject of a paper by Mrs. Hortense Robbins, and was a fine description of a trip taken by her and her husband last summer. Starting from Detroit, going by way of Niagara Falls, the Lachines, St. Lawrence river, Lake Champlain, Hudson river and from there by way of Ocean steamer to Old Pt. Comfort, Va., then by way of the Potomac to Washington, D. C. Her description of scenes especially of the Thousand Islands, was fine and gave one a better idea of them than any one can derive from magazine articles. The same may be said of Lake Champlain many other descriptions of places.

After this paper came a "conversation" led by Mrs. Mollie Robbins, subject, "Recollections of our Neighborhood." She chose for her neighborhood her childhood home in Virginia. Words can hardly describe this paper, full as it was of delicate allusion of girlish pranks, the life in the old home with brothers, sisters and young friends, and our memories went back with hers to the old home scenes. She gave a fine description of some mines near her home. The conversation then became general, and every one present took a part in it.

Current news were omitted. The club adjourned to meet with Mrs. McCord on next Saturday, and the club with its guests will be entertained by the following; Mrs Ford, Mrs. McCord and Mrs. Barns.

The Jolly Eight met with Bessie Baker last Saturday afternoon, but no further report has been received.

The Culture Club met with Mrs. Millie Sheets. After the business of the club the lesson was conducted by Mrs. Winnie Hebel in absence of the leader, Mrs. Moody. This lesson treated of German Literature, from the time of the Renaissance to the dawn of the Classical Period. This brings the work down to about 1750. Music was given by Mrs. Sheets. At the close was a question box which brought out several discussions, the principal one being, "When will the 20th century begin?" Adjourned to meet in one week with Mrs. Shaffer, and all members are requested to be present as some things not down on the program will be brought about and those who do not attend will miss something.

What They Stood For.

The chief of the imperial secret service was assured that he might tell all without fear of getting the federal machine down on him. "The foreign dogs," the chief of the imperial secret service thereupon announced, "are saying your highness stands for mediaeval barbarity!" Absent-Mindedness.

A French writer engaged upon a profound scientific work rang for his valet. He then sat down and wrote this note: "Kindly send some one to arrest the cook. She has stolen my purse." This he directed to the chief of police. The valet appeared, and, while waiting for his master to finish writing, picked up something lying under the table. As he took the note he said: "Monsieur, here is your purse; I found it under the table." "Ah, just in time; give me the note, Jean." He hurriedly added the postscript: "I have found my purse; it is unnecessary to send any one," and handed the missive to the valet, saying: "Deliver this at once; it is important." He then went back to his writing.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

OBITUARY.

Cyrus C. Boyer was born in Franklin Township, DeKalb Co.' Ind., July 2, 1848. Died in Butler, Ind., Feb. 25, 1899, aged 50 years, 7 months and 23 days.

He was the third child of Joseph and Sarah Boyer. who were pioneers of DeKalb county. They have passed to the other life. There was a family of eight children. Edward. Oliver, Mrs. Alma Boyle and Mrs. Letta Thompson survive him. Cyrus received such an education as was to be had in the schools of Auburn, Angola and Waterloo, and was a well informed man. He was engaged in the drug business in Waterloo for several years and served by J. D. Campbell as clerk. His whole life, however, with little exception, was spent in agricultural pursuits He was married to Mary E. Walsworth June 9, 1881. Two children were born to them. Carey W. and Nellie W., who reside with their mother in Auburn. His nervous system suffered by some strain along his life's journey, somehow, and for many of his later years he has been the victim of that dreadful calamity, deafness. Robbed of one of the most exquisite senses of human life, it is easy to account for anything eratic which might appear. Indeed, it is thought that had he not been thus afflicted, the horrible accident from which he died would have been avoided. His bruised and broken body was taken to the home of his sister Letta Thompson, in Butler, who with her sister, Mrs. Boyle, rendered every care that sisters could minister, until the close of life which had been filled unusually full of the unexpected. Funeral services were conducted by Bev. Butler and Moorman in the U. B. church at Waterloo and many sympathizing citizens followed the body to the grave in that cemetery.

If you have had the grip you need Foley's Honey and Tar to heal your lungs and stop the racking cough incidental to the disease. Guaranteed 25 and 50 cents.

Talks a Hole in a Board.

Mr. Edison has devised an instrument for talking a hole through a plank, says the Washington correspondent of the Boston Transcript. This sounds like a joke, but it is a fact, nevertheless, and it affords one of the most interesting illustrations of the power of sound waves. When the wizard was in Washington a while ago an examiner of patents spoke to him casually on the subject, and, struck by an inspiration, he sat down and drew a sketch of the apparatus in question, which consists primarily of a diaphragm, a ratchet and a toothed wheel When one talks to the diaphragm, its vibrations cause the wheel to revolve, and through the familiar contrivance called a "worm gear" a gimlet is turned, which bores its way through a board. Indeed, the device here described has been patented by Mr. Edison, but not for the purpose above described. It appears in the records of the patent office as a contrivance for winding a clock.

BOON TO BRAKEMEN.

SAFETY APPLIANCES ON RAILROAD CARS.

Interstate Commerce Law Has Compelled the Great Trunk Lines to Equip Freight Cars and Engines with New Safety Couplings and Guards.

With the beginning of the new year there was signalized the execution of a law that gives to railway employes a vastly superior degree of safety and protection than they have hitherto enjoyed. A visit to the various railroad repair shops during the last month of 1898 would have witnessed unusual bustle and preparation, for many interstate lines were striving to complete the equipment of their freight rolling stock, with security appliances required by legislation. These efforts indicate the progress of the times, and railway employes and the general public alike have been intensely interested in the investigation and adoption of appliances that place risk to life and limb at the lowest possible minimum.

Fifteen years ago the man who devoted himself to a career on the hurricane deck of a freight car took his life in his own hands. He was forced to go in between moving cars, take out coupling pins and put them in with his naked hands. On the road the brakeman was also switchman—he had to maintain his position on top of the car while in motion, set brakes when signalled, take the ground and make flying switches, cut out cars, recouple and risk all the possibilities of fatal accident which no care nor skill could overcome. He was exposed to all kinds of weather. It might rain so hard that he could not see the lights fifty feet away. It might so sleet that his lofty perch was slippery as glass. A slide of the foot meant an inquest. These men were hardy, brave, daring. They deemed it a disgrace to betray fear, and they did many really reckless things almost uncalled for, to show bravado, until the accidents and dismemberments became so numerous that they began to cast about for means of reducing the danger.

MAKING A COUPLING ON A STORMY NIGHT.

The air brake, the automatic coupler and the closed platform were the first moves in this direction, but were adopted rather to protect the passenger than the employe. Further, as originally used, they were faulty. Prompt stops were difficult, rear-end collisions—because of the impetus of the engine—were frequent. Clamps to tie the driving wheels were a step ahead in the way of improvement. All this, however, applied solely to passenger trains.

Then came the turn of the freight hands. Burden cars were equipped with air breaks, but the old way of risking a crushed hand in coupling with link and pin still continued. Great skill was shown by experts in manipulating these so as to fall always at the right tilt. Superintendents finally made each man carry a short club to help in this work. It operated well and reduced the risk, and here was the start of the automatic coupling for freight cars.

With the passage of the interstate commerce law, the matter of the protection for employes was taken up in earnest. The industrial unions agitated the subject, and forced the roads to act, experiments were made, March 3, 1893, the law was passed that put a new system into operation, and with the present year uniformity of action with the various roads has gone into effect. This measure throws all the known safeguards around all classes of railroad employes, especially those who handle the commerce of the country. By its restrictions no rolling stock can be used that is not equipped with air brakes and automatic couplings. No man need now go behind a moving engine and make a coupling. The fact that the great lines could not all at once equip their engines and cars is the reason why six years have been given to gradually perfect arrangements. A violation of this law by an average road running 20,000 cars would cost a couple of millions, the fine for each violation being $100. Still, some roads are not yet entirely ready, and Congress is being petitioned to extend the time for five years additional in some instances where the adoption of the new devices will have to be slow and gradual.

The total equipment, locomotives and cars, last June, was 1,333,599. Of this number but 448,854 were fitted with train brakes, and 545,583 with automatic couplers. The increase during the year 1898 was 27,339. In 1861, out of every 152 trainment employed one was killed, and only 181 passengers suffered similar fate, or one out of 2,827,474. This indicates the terrible risks assailing a railroad employe before safety appliances were adopted.

As has been said, the chief cause of delay in forcing these improvements was the lack of uniformity. Some cars have their drawheads well up on the platform, others drop under. Legislation has established a popular plane. It has not taken long to sift the devices down to one that possesses the requisites of universal interlocking couplers that unite automatically by impact. The master car builders, in convention, have formulated specifications that preserve the essentials of plane above the tracks, conformation of knuckles and grip, and size of the automatic drawhead. This system, when followed out, admits of the adoption of any one of a hundred patents.

The new drawhead in a freight car is fashioned much like the wrist and curved hand of a man. The wrist is the bar of the drawhead, which goes under the platform and holds the head firmly in place. The head itself has sufficient radial movement to admit of its being opened and closed at will. There are two portions of the knuckle. One can be represented by the thumb, and the other by the curved fingers. The fingers of this knuckle never straighten, but they will move radically on the wrist axis, thus permitting the drawhead to be opened for the dropping of the opposite fist. The brakeman turns a lever in opening the coupler, and is not compelled to put more than half of one arm in between the cars.

ARABIAN WOMEN.

Some of Them Never Leave Their Homes After Their Marriage.

Many an Arab lady never leaves her home from the time she is married until she is carried out to be buried. A woman of the middle class is allowed more liberty, and occasionally goes out for walks, accompanied, as a rule, by a servant. The poor creature is enveloped in masses of white drapery, which make her look like a walking bundle, and in front of her face she arranges a large black scarf, embroidered with blue, red and white flowers. It falls low in front, and even by holding up the ends she cannot see more than a foot or two of the road before her. Servants and other women of the lower classes wear pieces of black crepon wound tightly round their faces, leaving just a slit for their eyes to peep through, and they are equally muffled up in white draperies. Seen from a distance they might be men with masks or thick black beards, as in Arab countries it is by no means easy to tell a man from a woman at first sight. The older and uglier a woman is the more prudish she seems to be about covering up her face, which, after all, is rather considerate on her part. Even the greater number of negresses wear the yashmak, but the Bedouin women never do. Indeed, in the interior there is one Arab tribe whose men wear veils and whose women go about with their faces uncovered. These are probably the "new women" of Arabia.

"Uncle Beasley, are you going to heaven?" asked the little boy. "I s'pose I'll have to, some day or other," answered the old man.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

MICHIGAN'S BEE WIZARD.

"Uncle Bill" McMurphy, One of the Quaint Characters of the State.

One of the quaint characters of Saginaw, Mich., is "Uncle Bill" McMurphy, the bee wizard, who has netted a snug little fortune gathering wild honey from the woods of Saginaw County. For upward of forty years this strange old man has roamed the forests and wild lands of the valley, spending the golden autumn days in the solitude of the woods and wild flowers spying upon the secret hiding place of the bees' hard-earned treasure. The trade of a bee hunter seems a very peculiar one, almost an irksome task, but Mr. McMurphy has plied it until he has reduced it to a science, and each season's work generally averages him from 1,200 to 1,500 pounds of strained honey. Some years he has done even better than this and prepared for market over a ton of the saccharine product. By an actual record of each year's yield for the past forty years, which ended on Nov. 15 last, Mr. McMurphy had gathered a trifle over twenty-six tons of wild honey.

When the bee-hunting operations begin in the fall it is with great difficulty that the hunter succeeds in attracting the busy insects from the rich wild flowers to the bee box, a small wooden structure arranged in compartments, with tiny glass windows—which is in truth a snare or trap. This trap is baited with a sweet, highly scented mixture, which contains a drug that partially stupefies the bees and renders the labor of following them to the "bee tree" less difficult. After the insects have once tasted the alluring mixture in the box they lose all appetite for the sweets of the wild flowers, and after loading up on the mixture in the box fly sluggishly to their tree, where they discharge their load and return directly to the box, bringing other bees with them. When the hunter has the bees working on the box it takes but a short time to locate the tree where the honey is being stored up. As a bee leaves the box he watches the direction of his flight. If the bee tree is a mile or so away upon leaving the box the bee rises perpendicularly to a height of forty feet, then heads directly for his tree, but if the tree is but a few rods away from the box the bee leaves the snare leisurely, in a diagonal manner, but directly toward his tree, for invariably the bees fly to the storehouse of their money "as the crow flies." The hunter watches their flight, then takes his box and follows upon their trail from forty to eighty rods. The box is again uncovered and the process is repeated, and so on until the line takes him to the base of the honeybee tree.

FURNISHED HOUSES.

Are Rented by the Fashionables for the Short Term Session.

Now that it has become the habit of New-Yorkers to remain out of the city for longer periods than they formerly did, the furnished house has become a much more important element in the real estate business. This same tendency has been noted in London, where it is no longer considered necessary to the maintenance of one's position that a house which is to be occupied for only a few months should be kept throughout the entire year. It is said that Americans who go there for the season are now in the habit of taking a house when possible rather than living in a hotel at a greater expense and with less certainty of comfort. The convenience of the furnished house may be a very great one to the tenant, but it is a highly profitable form of enterprise to the landlords, who, in addition to the advance in price paid for the use of furniture, are in the habit of receiving for a few months the same price that would be paid for a whole year. The prices demanded for furnished houses are very high, and they are dangerous speculations only when they are not taken by the beginning of every winter season, which is commonly supposed to be from about the middle of November to the 1st of December. After this later date the rent asked for the furnished house declines steadily and the profits of the landlord are diminished. This loss is less in the case of those who are in the habit of occupying the house until it is rented, but as a general rule the percentage of loss is likely to be considerable when the house is not rented promptly. The demand for such house has been so great in recent years that the number available has increased in spite of the risks.—New York Sun.

Two Irish Stories.

One day, hearing a knock at the door, a mistress asked her Irish servant who it was that called.

"It was a gintleman, ma'am, looking for the wrong house," was the reply.

A workman repairing the roof of one of the highest buildings in Dublin lost his footing and fell. Striking a telegraph line in his fall, he managed to grasp it. "Hang on for your life!" shouted a fellow workman. Some of the spectators rushed off to get a mattress on which he could drop. But the workman, after holding on for a few seconds longer, suddenly cried out: "Sthand from under!" dropped and lay senseless in the street. He was brought to the hospital, and on recovery was asked why he did not hang on longer. "Shure, I was afraid the wire wud brake," he feebly replied.

NATURE'S WONDERS REVEALED BY A MICROSCOPE.

At the twelfth annual exhibition of the microscopical department of the Brooklyn Institute some wonderful microscopic slides were shown, of which these are a few of the most notable. The eye of a house fly was one exhibit. Each one of the numerous facets shown reflects a different image. The hair of a mouse was exhibited by a woman, Mrs. Urban, whose choice of a subject is peculiar. How did she catch it? It looks more like a rat's tail. The saw of a sawfly, one of the exhibits, shows how the insect makes a slit in a leaf wherein its eggs are deposited.

NEAT FIVE-ROOM COTTAGE.

An Inexpensive Yet Very Cozy and Comfortable Home.

Reasonable people do not expect that a small and cheaply built house will appear as handsome and pretentious as an expensive dwelling. Yet there is no reason why a cheap house, no matter how small it may be, should not look neat and cozy and be comfortable, also. In country districts a low house is less exposed to the heat of the sun in summer and is more easily kept warm in winter. A pretty one story cottage well built is more desirable than a more pretentious design poorly constructed. The accompanying perspective and floor plan represents a cottage costing about $700, which will meet the requirements of many who wish a convenient house of low cost. The fact has been kept in mind that a client wanting a house costing $700 would be very likely to build on a farm, in a little village or in the very outskirts of a city. He has therefore little to do with the luxuries and elegances of those who are able to spend a larger sum and who, accordingly, are located where there are gas works, water works, etc. What has been kept in mind is the attainment of a maximum of room compatible with safety, health and comfort and a proper regard for beauty in features of construction. Cellar is provided under the kitchen, and the foundation is built of brick. The front entrance is from the porch into the sitting-room. Dining-room and living-room are of liberal size and each well-lighted, and arranged so they may be easily warmed. The door and window casings are neatly beaded, with angle blocks at the corners. The two bedroms are of fair size, and provided with good closets.

The size of the building is 28½x43 feet; the cellar is seven feet deep; and the first story ten feet. The materials and workmanship are of good quality throughout. The outside walls are studded and sheathed and finished with pine siding, and gables and roof shingled. The walls outside are painted and inside are finished with hard plaster. The interior trim is of natural finished white pine.

FIVE ROOM COTTAGE.

For a compact, convenient cottage, with every facility for doing the work of the household with the least number of steps; for an attractive and picturesque cottage, with moderate prices attached, we do not know of any plan more appropriate than this.—E. A. Payne.

CHEAP RABBIT TRAP.

Device Shown Here Is Said to Be an Immense Success.

Select four pieces of ordinary 6-inch fencing board 20 to 24 inches long. Nail them together so as to form a box, closing one end. The top piece should be an inch shorter than the others. Nail the bottom and top boards to the side boards, thus making the opening 6 inches perpendicularly and 4 inches horizontally. A sliding door is then made to fit neatly into the open end and two pieces of lath nailed against the end of the perpendicular boards, projecting one-half inch inside. The door then slides down between the shorter upper board and the projecting edges of the lath. To support the door a piece of lath is nailed on each side of the door and notched at the upper end.

A CHEAP RABBIT TRAP.

(a) Trap set ready for rabbit; (b) trigger; (d) hole for trigger with piece of hoop-iron for catch; (e) top view of door and door slides; (f) lath support for door when trap is open.

The simple cross shown at c supports the door. One end is tied to the door by means of a string and one end is fastened to the trigger, which is the small notched stick shown at b. This passes through the hole shown in d, and when the trap is set supports the door.

These traps are placed in orchards during cold weather. The rabbit in running about the orchard finds the trap, and, seeing that it is a hole which will afford him protection, backs into it, pushes against the trigger, causing the notch to slip off the catch and drop the door. No bait is necessary. The trap must be made of old weather-beaten boards, for the strong odor of new pine will keep rabbits away. The traps should be placed near the rabbit runs where they come into the orchard. It is more successful on cold, clear nights. The Orange Judd Farmer asserts that one orchardist in Central Illinois caught more than 1,000 rabbits in these traps during one winter.

LADY CURZON IN INDIA.

What It Means to Be a Viceroy's Wife—Social Demands on Viceroyalty.

Under the title "The American Girl Who Leads an Empire," Edward Page Gaston writes interestingly in the Woman's Home Companion of the responsibilities undertaken by Lady Curzon:

"It sometimes devolves upon the wife of the Viceroy to give audience to a native Maharajah alone, when it is her duty to advance and meet him on the threshold, and duly wave him to a seat, after which her American tact prompts her to speak of the satisfaction it is to see him in her home, to inquire after the health of her distinguished guest and his family, and to pay him all the usual compliments of the season. As the ladies of the viceroyalty generally make it understood that they can accept no gifts of value from their subjects the exchange of tokens is confined to photographs.

"Two thousand guests are sometimes present at the state balls, when the vice-royal party is conducted by an imposing procession to and from the assembly, which is opened by the quadrille of honor at about ten o'clock. After this Lord and Lady Curzon hold a reception, and the warm climate makes these wearing events upon the hosts and hostess. That the social administration of Lady Curzon will not fall behind those of her predecessors was evidenced by orders for thirty-five thousand invitations, programs and cards of various sorts being given in London previous to her departure for India.

"One of the delicate duties of the lady of the viceroyal mansion is to learn the rules of management governing the native servants, for these have their places as unalterably fixed by caste as persons in higher stations. In the bedchamber service there is not one or two brisk chambermaids to do up a room as in America, but the various items in the almost trifling work are divided among seven or eight men servants, and this is the rule throughout an Indian establishment. Lady Curzon's body servant stands or sleeps outside the door to her room constantly, and when she goes to drive alone another attendant rides in the carriage with her, and at any time would give his life for her protection."

Trouble in the Camp.

"There seemed to be a rather acrimonious discussion going on as I went by headquarters."

"Yes," said the Salvation Army captain sadly. "Brother Jones, who beats the drum, happened to say to Brother Smith, who does most of the preaching, that actions spoke louder than words."—Indianapolis Journal.

STATE LAW MAKERS.

The Elections Committee in the Senate, composed of six Republicans and three Democrats, reported on Friday in favor of retaining Frank W. Cregor as the Senator from Hancock, Rush and Madison counties. The seat was contested by Elmer E. Stoner, Republican. In the House the bill originating in that body providing that a divorced person shall not re-marry within two years passed. The House also passed the bill originating in that body abolishing the State Board of Sanitary Commissioners and creating the office of State veterinary surgeon. A bill providing for the introduction of the Torrens land system was advanced to engrossment in the House after having been so amended as to authorize the people of any county to vote on the proposition to take advantage of the system. The pharmacy bill was advanced to third reading in the Senate after having been so amended as to permit druggists who do not hold licenses to sell patent and proprietary medicines.

The Governor on Monday sent to the House messages vetoing the bill amending the Lake, Laporte and Porter Superior court act so as to provide meeting places for the court at Hammond and Michigan City, and the bill authorizing the purchase of water works in cities under 20,000 inhabitants. He refused to sign the court bill on the ground that it was a step toward the erection of additional courthouses in the counties of Lake and Laporte. The water-works bill was vetoed on the ground that such a law would be unconstitutional. The Republican majority in the House after a noon caucus advanced the bill for the establishment of township councils to third reading. Six Republicans bolted the caucus, but there were fifty-one votes for the bill, with two of its supporters absent. The Senate passed the bill creating a State board of pharmacy and requiring that all druggists be licensed.

The bill known as the Hammond court bill, which the Governor vetoed on Monday, was passed over his head on Tuesday. It provides for Superior Court meetings and buildings at Hammond and Michigan City.

Quelling an Ill-Bred Passenger.

The captain of an Atlantic steamship was at a loss how to induce a passenger to desist from the filthy habit of spitting on deck. Among the passengers was a gentleman well known in Toronto forty years ago, who undertook to stop him if a quartermaster were placed at his disposal. The captain closed with the offer, and the man was directed to fetch a bucket of water and a mop, and to follow the offender up and down the deck. The result was completely satisfactory.

Nausea—"Vomiting spells, dizziness and prostration troubled me for years. Had neuralgia, grew weak and could not sleep. My age was against me, but Hood's Sarsaparilla cured me thoroughly. My weight increased from 125 to 143 pounds. I am the mother of nine children. Never felt so well and strong since I was married as I do now." MRS. M. A. WATERS, 1529 33d St., Washington, D. C.

NOT MARRIED YET.

All Because the Young Man Did Not Appreciate the Situation.

I rode up to a country store, where a young girl stood on the porch swinging a sunbonnet and talking to a mountaineer. I had left her in that position a year before, and her father had told me then his daughter and the mountaineer would soon be married. Talking to the father a few minutes later, I asked:

"Is your daughter married yet?"

"Naw, an' I don't reckon she will be."

"What is the trouble? I saw her talking to her lover just now."

"Yaas—she don't do much else. Thet feller ain't no 'count. He's ben courtin' for three y'ar, an axed Sal ter marry 'im a y'ar ago. I tol' him ter clean out, an' s'posed he'd 'lope with her. I tol' Sal she could hev my bes' hoss ter run away with, but he never did make no propersition. I ain' goin' ter the expense of no weddin' fixin's, an' it looks like he wan't goin' ter run off with her, so it jes' stan's thar. I ain't goin' ter hev no home weddin'; kain't afford no sich nonsense; an' I've hed six gals run off an' git married, and that feller don't seem to hev no appreciation of the sittywation."

As I left the girl was still talking to her lover, while the old man watched them from behind a tree.—Washington Star.

Manila's Lighting Stations.

There is a central electric lighting station in Manila which supplies current for 12,000 incandescent and 260 arc lamps. There are 720 miles of telegraph lines in the islands and seventy miles of steam railways. Manila has also a telephone system. The conductors are all overhead lines carried on poles with porcelain insulators.

BACKACHE is a symptom.

Something makes the backache and that something requires attention or the backache can never be permanently stopped. "I suffered for years with a long list of troubles," writes MRS. C. KLENK, of Wells, Minn. (Box 151), to Mrs. Pinkham, "and I want to thank you for my complete recovery. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a wonderful medicine for women.

WEARINESS OF BACKACHE

"I had severe female complaints causing terrible backache and nervous prostration; was dizzy most of the time, had headache and such a tired feeling. I now have taken seven bottles of your Compound and have also used the Sanative Wash and feel like a new woman. I must say I never had anything help me so much. I have better health than I ever had in my life. I sleep well at night, and can work all day without feeling tired. I give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound all the credit, for I know it has cured me of all my troubles. I would not do without your remedies for anything."

MRS. E. FURTON, of Meade, Mich., writes: "Two years ago I was troubled with constant backache and headache and was very nervous. I resolved to try your medicine and took two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and on taking the third a tumor was expelled. I was a little frightened and sent for the doctor; and he said that it was fortunate for me that it came away. I got quite well after that and have your Compound alone to thank for my recovery."

Multitudes of women suffer constantly with backache. Other grateful multitudes have been relieved of it by Mrs. Pinkham's advice and medicine.

BEDTIME.

Some Ideas as to What Is the Best Retiring Hour.

A physician of courtly old-school manners used to give prescriptions marked respectively for early bedtime and for late bedtime. A discussion arose the other day as to what constituted early and what late bedtime. Some of the ladies maintained that 10 o'clock was the limit between the two, others thought that early bedtime lasted until 11, and a few who believed in beauty sleep pleaded that early bedtime began at 8 and ended at 9:30 o'clock.

So many people are engaged all day, and the dinner hour is necessarily, in city life, deferred to so late an hour, the families do not break up from their quiet evenings until after 10. Society pushes its hours later and later, and the votaries of fashion come near having no bedtime at all, snatching their rest when they can between one gay rout and another. The invalid and the aged person and the child must perforce retire early. For those steady-going persons who regulate their lives by rule, and who habitually rise at an early hour and breakfast punctually at 7 o'clock, 10 is certainly a good bedtime hour. Brain workers would find their account in seeking the repose of the couch and the darkened and silent chamber, with preferably opaque curtains to exclude the light of the room and street lamp alike, at 10 o'clock.

A long sleep rests the mind as well as the body, and prepares one for the work of the next day, whatever it may be. Far better than an opiate or a narcotic is the habit of seeking the pillow at an early hour, and quietly lying still, with closed eyes and relaxed limbs, until sleep, gently wooed, comes with its healing touch and softly weaves its spells of balm.

The good doctor probably meant by early bedtime any hour between 8 and 9:30, and regarded the latter period as between 9:30 and midnight.

Growing children cannot too carefully be enjoined to get plenty of sleep. The boy or girl who has lessons to learn must waken early after a good night's rest, and this is insured only by punctuality in retiring. Eight o'clock is a good bedtime for all young people under 15 and should be insisted upon by parents.—Harper's Bazar.

Wild Rush of Diamond Miners.

A wild rush of miners is reported at Nullagine, Australia, where diamonds have been discovered, and it is feared that many will lose their lives in the struggle. In this country the rush for gain is causing men to break down in health. Nervousness and general debility are the symptoms which Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will cure.

A Colony of Outlaws.

Writers of fiction have frequently pictured the idea of an unknown tropical paradise turned into a general asylum for outlaws and criminals. In the Bonin Isles, not far from Japan, such a refuge has actually been discovered. Men of every nationality, who have made civilization too warm for themselves, having decamped to this ideal rendezvous, leaving the police to record the unsatisfactory result of their investigations as "gone abroad." No rates or taxes have to be paid, and government seems to be entirely dispensed with. The discovery was made by a Japanese vessel which called at the isle. In future the aliens will have less freedom, and consequently less happiness, for the Japanese dominion will have to be recognized. Their dream is over.—Western Morning News.

Steady Company (after a running comment on business success in general)—I must say, Miss Florence, that if there is one thing I particularly admire in a man it is business enterprise.

PULSE OF THE PRESS

Ratification of the Treaty.

The treaty establishes no policy concerning the Philippines.—New York Tribune.

The outbreak of the insurgents at Manila has harmed their cause immeasurably.—Cleveland Leader.

The long delay in ratifying had something to do with encouraging the attack of the Filipinos on our forces at Manila.—Buffalo Express.

The situation in the Philippines is now our own affair, and both houses of Congress will have to legislate upon it.—New Orleans Picayune.

Although the treaty has been ratified, it does not follow by any means that the imperialistic principle will ever go into effect.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The treaty does not prescribe any policy for the United States in respect to the government of the Philippines. That is a matter for the determination of Congress.—Omaha Bee.

What neither party spirit nor executive influence had been able to secure, the followers of Aguinaldo accomplished by their wanton act of incredible folly in attacking our soldiers.—New York World.

Now we can keep our promises to Spain solemnly made. Now we can keep our promises to the balance of the nations having citizens and interests in the Philippines.—Nashville American.

So far as the Philippines are concerned the ratification of the treaty is the beginning of a new epoch. American ideas will find a lodgment in that distant locality, and they will leaven the whole lump.—New York Herald.

The country has reason for profound gratification at this action, because delay would have been the source of infinite trouble and possible complications, the outcome of which none could foresee.—New York Times.

The American people would have been much more likely to have granted the Filipinos their independence had the latter awaited the ratification and then pleaded their cause without a resort to arms.—Rockford Republican Register.

The ratification of the treaty does not make the people of the Philippines citizens of the United States; but it does invest the United States with the responsibility of establishing orderly government in the archipelago.—Philadelphia Record.

The treaty ratified, the war with Spain is over, and the Congress, not the President, can formulate such a policy in regard to the future of the Philippines as the best interests of the United States and the Filipinos may indicate.—Indianapolis Journal.

France Rises to the Occasion.

M. Loubet's election is the final rebuke to military and civil intolerance as exhibited in connection with the Dreyfus case.—New York World.

France has rounded another dangerous point in her political history, and the work has been done quickly, easily and quietly. That is surely a good sign.—Cleveland Leader.

M. Loubet will be much like our American Presidents—plain men from a country district, whose failure every one predicts and whose success history always records.—Philadelphia Press.

The quiet, well-balanced manner in which France has elected a President under circumstances which warranted no little anxiety and excitement, speaks well for the republic.—Minneapolis Times.

Both the character of the man and the manner of his election are significant of greater firmness and solidity in the dominant party in the republic than recent events had indicated.—New York Times.

In M. Loubet's election, therefore, we may confidently reckon France has given us a prompt and emphatic confirmation of the inspiring words of M. Ribot: "There is no need to despair of the French republic."—New York Tribune.

Bloodshed at Manila.

Our forbearance has been mistaken for timidity.—Hartford Courant.

The fate of the treaty was in doubt until the commission of this crime against civilization.—Chicago Tribune.

If there had been no delay or opposition to the treaty there would have been no trouble of Saturday and Sunday's sort at Manila.—Utica Press.

Nothing that could have been done by the Filipinos will so weaken their cause in the United States as an attack on the American flag.—Buffalo Courier.

The Filipinos undoubtedly suffered severely, and it is to be hoped that the costly lesson which they have received in regard to the superiority of our arms will make a lasting impression on Aguinaldo and the followers whom he has deluded.—Boston Herald.

It is a pity that there should be bloodshed between the insurgents and our forces, and the obstructionists in the Senate must bear much blame for it. Agoncillo sent word to Aguinaldo to strike quickly, and fighting was the result.—Providence (R. I.) Journal.

Emile Loubet.

The newly elected president of the French Republic.

MORE REBELS ARE KILLED.

General King's Men Charge and Drive Enemy Before Them.

Early Tuesday morning the Filipino insurgents, with shout and bugle call, opened fire at long range on Anderson's left. Sharpshooters across the river made the headquarters at Macati a hot place, but there was no one wounded. The enemy were concentrating all day at the water works and in front of King's brigade. They finally became so nagging in front of King's position that the general sent two companies of the First Washington infantry over the Pasig river. They swept the country for two miles and then swung over to the river bank, opposite the insurgent trenches, facing the American position at Macati, and opened a flank fire on the insurgents across the river. The two guns of the Sixth artillery, under Lieut. Scott, at Macati, pounded the insurgent position, while the troops from Macati charged and drove the enemy before them. Fifteen Filipino dead were found and four wounded. Two American soldiers were wounded by the explosion of Springfield rifles.

AN EXCELLENT COMBINATION

SUCCESSFUL ENTERPRISE BASED ON MERIT.

The Importance of Informing the Public of the Value of an Article Through the Leading Newspapers.

The few remedies which have attained to worldwide fame, as truly beneficial in effect and giving satisfaction to millions of people everywhere, are the products of the knowledge of the most eminent physicians, and presented in the form most acceptable to the human system by the skill of the world's great chemist; and one of the most successful examples is the Syrup of Figs manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. Unlike a host of imitations and cheap substitutes, Syrup of Figs is permanently beneficial in its effects, and therefore lives and promotes good health, while inferior preparations are being cast aside and forgotten. In olden times if a remedy gave temporary relief to individuals here and there, it was thought good; but nowadays a laxative remedy must give satisfaction to all. If you have never used Syrup of Figs, give it a trial, and you will be pleased with it, and will recommend it to your friends or to any who suffer from constipation, or from over-feeding, or from colds, headaches, biliousness, or other ills resulting from an inactive condition of the kidneys, liver and bowels.

In the process of manufacturing the pleasant family laxative made by the California Fig Syrup Co., and named Syrup of Figs, figs are used, as they are pleasant to the taste; but the medicinal properties of the remedy are obtained from an excellent combination of plants known to be medicinally laxative and to act most beneficially. As the true and original remedy, named Syrup of Figs, is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, a knowledge of that fact will assist in avoiding the worthless imitations manufactured by other parties. The company has selected for years past the leading publications of the United States through which to inform the public of the merits of its remedy, and among them this paper is included, as will be seen by reference to our advertising columns.

Did You Make Your Grain-O This Way?

Here are the latest directions: Use one tablespoonful of Grain-O to two cups of cold water. (Be sure to measure.) After the water gets to the boiling point let boil for fifteen to twenty minutes. Use cream and sugar to suit the taste. If you have not cream use hot milk.

A lady said: "The first time I drank Grain-O I did not like it, but after using it for ten days and forming the habit, nothing would induce me to go back to coffee." This is the experience of all. If you will follow directions, measure it every time and make it the same, and try it for ten days, you will not go back to coffee.

Over Three Score Decorations.

The most decorated man in Europe probably is Count August of Eulenberg, the marshal of the German court, who has sixty-three decorations. This record was not even equaled by the late Prince Bismarck, who had only fifty-four decorations. Count Von Moltke, another much-decorated man, had forty-four. Among living men General Von Hahnke comes after Count August of Eulenberg, with a total of fifty-two decorations. He is followed by Prince Albrecht of Prussia, who has forty-four.

Deafness Can't Be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Nerves Destroyed by Catarrh. Nerves Restored by Pe-ru-na.

MR. ROBERT B. MANTELL, THE GREAT ROMANTIC ACTOR.

Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio:

Dear Sir—The bottle of Pe-ru-na at hand. It is splendid and most invigorating; refreshing to the nerves and brain. It is one of the best tonics I have ever used. It makes me feel like a new man. Yours sincerely, R. B. Mantell.

Catarrh and Nervousness.

A nervous person nearly always has catarrh. Catarrh is one of the ways in which a depressed condition of the nervous system shows itself. Catarrhal people are soon made nervous. The relation between chronic catarrh and nervous debility is most intimate.

Catarrh is chronic congestion of some mucous membrane. The nerves, which should guard the mucous membrane against congestion, are depressed and their function partly destroyed. The nerves that should control the circulation in the mucous membrane are called the vasa-motor system of nerves. Depression of the general nervous system soon leads to depression of the vasa-motor system. Depression of the vasa-motor system of nerves at once causes chronic catarrh.

Any remedy to effect a radical cure of chronic catarrh must operate directly through the nerves, invigorating the mucous circulation.

Mrs. C. C. Filler, of 134½ South Fourth street, Columbus, O., writes: "For ten or fifteen years I have been subject to nervous dyspepsia. I would have spells of quivering in my stomach, with smothering feelings. I was suffering from what is called nervous prostration. My stomach felt bloated and I was constantly weak and trembling. I consulted several physicians, who treated me without doing me any good. I had almost given up in despair when I heard of Pe-ru-na. It was about six years ago that I first took Pe-ru-na. I found it an immediate relief to all my disagreeable symptoms. It is the only medicine that has ever been of any use to me."

Words of Wisdom

At a recent speech in congress Hon. J. M. Robinson took this sensible ground:

I am opposed to a large standing army, as it is against the traditions and history of our country, because it is a power designed to destroy and not build up, because our national history from the beginning of our existence till now has taught us that the bulwark, of our strength is not in standing armies but in citizen soldiers. I am in favor of citizen soldiers, volunteers, and not of standing armies, because the manifold achievements of our nation in the field have come from the loyalty and power of volunteers, who, by their valor in time of war and patriotism in time of peace, have made our nation great and strong. I am opposed to a great standing army because human experience teaches that if our liberties are ever assailed or subverted it will come from the menacing force of the standing army, which till now has been unknown in all our grand progress as a nation for liberty, law, and equal justice.

A Peculiar Accident

The Elkhart Review related that during the cold snap as John Anderson of Cass county, Mich., was returning from Elkhart, he got out of his buggy to get warm at the residence of John Banks, near Heaton Lake, but failed to shut the barnyard gate, and when he desired to proceed found that the horse had broken from its fastenings and wandered out of the yard. He followed on foot, but was unable to find the horse. The next morning the animal was found in a ditch near the lake, the only visible part being his ears. He was dead, of course, and is now frozen in what was then mud, as solid as marble. The buggy was overturned, and it is believed one of the lines caught in some way and caused the horse to turn suddenly, thus throwing him in the ditch, which was very deep.

Mexican War Veterans

The state meeting of the soldiers of the Mexican War was held in Indianapolis, Wednesday, Washington's birth day. There was a good attendance, 72 being present. Lew Wallace, himself a veteran of that war, was in the city and they all heard him lecture that evening. They voted to have the next National meeting on Sept. 14, the anniversary of the taking of the City of Mexico by the Americans, and are trying to have the meeting in Indianapolis. These men are members of the First, Second, Third Fourth and Fifth, Indiana Volunteers. They think an injustice has been done them in not being given a place on the big soldiers' monument at Indianapolis, and also in being given pensions that cannot exceed $8 and $12. This meeting, Feb 22, was on the 52nd anniversary of the battle of Buena Vista.

Hard On The Prosecutor.

[Indianapolis Sun.]

The prosecutor of Tipton county bumped into the real thing when he went to Prairie township to prosecute some boys for disturbing church. Not only was he beaten, but was also shut out from a good dinner. When court adjourned at noon, the father of one of the defendants said: "If it please your honor, now, I would like to make a few remarks before we adjourn. I have got a big basket of grub here—chicken, pie, cake, etc.—and all the jury and witnesses who are on my side are invited to stay for dinner with me."

Weather Fooled Him.

When new general manager of of the B. & O., F. D. Underwood, left Minneapolis it was way below zero. But he was told that at Baltimore, they had warm breezes. So he bought a straw hat and linen duster, and went east. He had not been in Baltimore two days, when the blizzard struck that section, the mercury went below zero and his railroad was snowed under and blocked in the eastern mountains several days. His straw hat may come handy this summer, however.

C. C. Boyer.

Thursday's Daily.

Mrs. Mary Boyer had a letter last evening from her son Carey at Butler, saying his father was in a dangerous condition, He has been unconscious since the night before, and fears are entertained that he will not live. In fact it would not be surprising to hear of his death at any time. It all depends on how much he was hurt internally, though his external injuries may prove fatal. He was thrown from the track about 30 feet. The children may remain till they see how it terminates.

LATEST: A letter from Nellie Boyer to her mother, written at 9 a. m. today says her father has not regained consciousness, and cannot live many hours. The doctor says, the only hope would be to amputate his legs, but they will not do this in his present condition.

More as to Boyer.

Friday's Daily.

It now appears that C. C. Boyer's arm was not broken, but only bruised. Later reports explain that the first train came up behind him and he stepped out of its way onto the other track. The men on the first train saw the other train coming from the west on the same track which he was now standing or walking. They called loudly to him but he could not hear, and seemed to think the wild gestures they were making to warn him were merely friendly greetings. So the train met him, struck him down, broke both legs, and carried him on the cow-catcher some distance. But he was not thrown off to one side, as at first reported. He has not seemed to feel much pain except in his legs.

F. N. Beidler came over from Waterloo today and brings word that J. D. Campbell was at Butler yesterday afternoon, and said Boyer at that hour showed no improvement. Many think he cannot recover, but he was hurt Tuesday morning, and having held out this long, he may pull through. But the deciding point will soon be known.

LATEST: Mrs. Boyer received a card this afternoon from her son, Carey, saying Mr. Boyer is still unconscious and cannot live but a few hours.

C. C. Boyer Dead.

Saturday's Daily.

The death of Mr. Boyer came at one o'clock last night and was as had been almost certain from the first. His legs were in such a bad shape that it was plain that they could not be amputated until he was in better condition, and the amputation of both, under such circumstances, would of itself have been fatal. His son Carey, returned here this forenoon, and goes back this evening He says his father was conscious from the time he was hurt Tuesday morning, until that night at about eleven o'clock. He talked some. said he had no pain, and only complained of a heavy load on his legs. When he became unconscious, he never revived. He will be taken tomorrow, to Waterloo, where the funeral will be at the U. B. church at 2 p. m. and interment in the cemetery there. Nellie remained at Butler, Carey and she will both stay over for the funeral.

At present they have refused to let the line go beyond Auburn or Garrett.

And it came to pass that after he had advertised his goods there came unto him great multitudes from all the region round about and did buy of him. And when his competitors saw it they marveled among themselves saying: "How be it that this man is busy while we loaf about our doors?" And he spake unto them saying: "Verily, verily, I say unto you in this fast age of push and rustle it is easier for a camel to enter the eye of a needle than for a business man to flourish without advertising."—Ex.

—Waterloo is talking of starting up their fair again. It is known that the property was sold some time ago for its debts and is now owned by Wm. Fisher, the traveling salesman. We understand he is willing to enter into an arrangement by which it can be put into the hands of a stock company and revived as a fair. It looks like a pity to have so much property lying idle, and if those who give it thought, feel that it could be made to pay, steps ought to be taken at once, so as to have it in shape this fall.

THE DUTTON MURDER

Witnesses on Both Sides Heard Before Justice Walter.

This, Wednesday morning, the examination was finished. Mr. Sharpless and Mr. Moody were late, but were ready as soon as they came in.

The first witness was the other girl. My name is Laura Wilson. Q. Is that your true name? Ans. It is my maiden name. My home is Canton, Ohio. Have been with Mrs. Fish four weeks. We had dinner at 3:30, and the two men came soon after. Dollie (Sophie Maxwell) let them in. She could not keep them out, as they pushed in. Asked us to drink. We refused. Soon got mad because we paid no attention to them. Said they were going to have a rough time. Compton kicked me, as I sat in chair. I had laid aside my tablet on which I was writing. Third kick hurt me some. I told him to stop that. he said, "You are game," and stopped. Dutton said I'll show you how game I am, and took poker and smashed out the window. Just then Ben came in. Dutton said I'll blow out the brains of anyone. Ben tried to make him stop. Dutton struck Ben with the poker. I ran to Dollie. Ben said you've got to stop this. Dutton struck him again. Ben ran into bedroom, then peeped out a little. Dutton put his hand in his pocket as if to get a revolver, and said I'll blow out your brains. Ben came out. Dutton struck him. Ben had his revolver. We ran into bedroom, locked the door and jumped from the window. Staid out in the lot. All got still. Soon Compton came out and went away. Heard Mrs. Fisher say, my son is killed and she ran down town lickety-split, Doctor came and stopped in. We went in. Saw the body. Ben was washing off blood. Doctor dressed his head.

Cross examination by Sharpless. The men were drunk and wabbly. They both smelled pretty sour of whisky or something. I sometimes drink beer, but never whisky. I used to work at Kenton, Ohio, for an old couple, got $1.50 a week. The woman died, and I wrote to Garrett and Mrs. Fish gave me $2 a week to do housework.

Mrs. Fish examined. Am 46. Ben's mother, but do not live with my husband. My father lives with me. I was in kitchen when trouble began. I went in, but they would not stop. Ben came to the house. I asked him to stop them. Saw Dutton strike my son with poker. At second blow Ben fell over the chair that had been kicked over before. Dutton went to strike again. I ran and said, Oh my God. Tried to go into girls' room, door locked. Ran out as the firing began.

(It was plain she had been so badly scared, she could not tell all she saw. She agreed in the main with the girls.)

I have known Miss Maxwell 4 years. I was keeping hotel in Kendallville. A year ago last winter she and I worked for Phil Watters at Auburn Junction at dining room work.

At the close Justice Walter committed the defendant, Ben Fish to jail, to await the action of grand jury and court. Compton, as prosecuting witness had already given $200 bonds for his appearance, and all the other witnesses will be held to appear at court.

It Is "Our Abe."

Abe Johnson the forger, the timber buyer and all around confidence man has been heard from again in his old role Attorney Ed. Baxter receives his old home paper, the "Republican," published at Corydon, Harrison Co., this state, and happened to see the following article,

"Last Monday morning, early, a fellow arrived in Corydon, having walked in from the Junction. He got his breakfast at one of the hotels and then went to another to secure a room in which to rest, as he claimed to be weary and footsore. In a short time he went to the recorder's office and inquired for a real estate agent and about the sale of some farms, stating that he wanted to buy a number of them. He also went to the bank and said he wanted to deposit a check on an Auburn, Ind., bank, but he made no deposit. He gave his name as A. J. Johnson, of DeKalb county, this state. He answered the description of a man who had been 'buying' land in Kentucky. He was apprised of that fact and shaking the dust of Corydon from his feet left for other parts to seek "suckers."

The Weather in Coffee.

[New York Mail and Express]

Farmer Dunn may as well go out of business as a weather prophet if what a Maine woman says is true, because there will be no need for him. She claims that any one with eyes can keep tab on old probabilities by consulting their matutinal cup of tea or coffee; all you have to do is to watch the bubbles that rise in the tea or coffee after putting in the lump of sugar. If they collect at the center, the day, as a rule, will be uniformly fine, but if on arising all over the surface, they float away to all sides of the cup, rain will certainly ensue.

"My!

How Pretty The New Goods Are"

This is an expression you can hear from nearly every lady entering our store. If this has been their opinion of what they have seen, how much more emphatic will they be when they cast their eyes on the much handsomer lot we are now busily unpacking?

As we've stated before, we are fully determined to make the coming season our busiest one. To do this we have been well aware that any amount of hard work would be necessary. We began our buying much earlier. We have bought very much more heavily and a very much better class of goods.

We are now showing as fine goods as can be found in Fort Wayne, and at less prices than you would be asked there. This not only applies to Dry Goods, but to Clothing as well.

We will not attempt to describe any particular line this week but kindly invite you to call and see the prettiest and most complete stock of Dry Goods, Clothing and Carpets you have ever seen in town. You will find our prices most reasonable.

Glorious News

Comes from Dr. D. B. Cargile, of Washita, I. T. He writes: "Four bottles of Electric Bitters has cured Mrs. Brewer of scrofula, which had caused her great suffering for years. This shows what thousands have proved—that Electric Bitters is the best blood purifier known. It's the supreme remedy for eczema, tetter, salt rheum, ulcers boils and running sores. Candied Potatoes.

Candied sweet potatoes are prepared by boiling them until they are thoroughly cooked, but not mealy. They are then peeled and sliced. A shallow dish or tin is smeared with butter, and a layer of the sliced potatoes then put in; over this sugar is sprinkled, then another layer of potatoes and another of sugar, with a few bits of butter on top. Some cooks add a very little maple syrup just before putting them into the oven. As the potatoes are cooked they need only be left in a fairly hot oven long enough to brown and caramel slightly.

Endorsed by the Governor

West Virginia's chief magistrate recommends Pe-ru-na, the National Catarrh Remedy and Nerve Tonic.

REPRESENTATIVE MEN

are slow to speak for publication. This is because their influence is so great. The endorsement of Governors, Senators and Congressmen guarantees merit. Public words of praise from such prominent officials must be based on positive knowledge. The recognition which the catarrh remedy Pe-ru-na is constantly receiving by men of national fame is very gratifying. Among recent letters from persons of eminence is the following from Governor Atkinson of West Virginia. The governor says:

CHARLESTON, West Va., March 9, 1898.

The Pe-ru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, O.

GENTLEMEN:—"I can recommend your prescription Pe-ru-na as a tonic. Its reputation as a cure for catarrh is excellent, it having been used by a number of people known to me with the very best results."

Very truly,
GOV. G. W. ATKINSON.

GOV. G. W. ATKINSON of West Virginia.

Catarrh is the national disease. Not an American family is free from it. The search for relief and cure is constant. Experiments of all kinds are continually made without result for good. Ignorance of the causes and nature of catarrh is universal. Catarrh is elusive, persistent, penetrating. It may exist in any organ of the body. For this national malady there exists the national scientific remedy Pe-ru-na which for forty years has been doing a grand work.

Pe-ru-na is the unflinching foe of catarrh and overcomes it wherever it may exist. It is the prescription of Dr. Hartman, President of the Surgical Hotel, Columbus, O., who gives personal attention, without charge, to a voluminous correspondence on the subject of catarrhal diseases. Dr. Hartman's books on catarrh are mailed on application. All druggists sell Pe-ru-na.

EDITOR COURIER:—It may be of interest to your readers to know how the people of the great northwest live, and of the avocations followed for a livelihood.

Compared with Indiana, the agricultural conditions are entirely reversed. Instead of wheat for a staple, we have butter. Dairying is by all odds, the principal business of this vicinity, and the production of beef may take second place. Nowhere are the natural grasses so luxuriant, and in so great a variety, and they remain green throughout the year. There being no dry season here, and no time that the snow lays more than a few days at a time, so grazing is continual. Timothy is the king of grasses, growing from five to six feet high on the rich bottom lands, and six tons per acre is not an unusual yield. While clover makes the best pasture all the year around, and is indigenous to this country, growing natural in every nook and corner throughout the Sound country, and is the plant from which our honey bees extract our supply of sweets. Red and alsike clover that would astonish easters people. It has been found that red clover will grow luxuriantly on hill land heretofore considered of no value. Orchard grass also does well on high ground, and alfalfa yields a sure and bountiful return, and gives better returns in milk than any other forage plant. Butter produced in this cool, moist climate is of excellent quality, and commands a good price in the markets. The average price of our creamery butter for the year is twenty-five cents per pound. To show what can be done on a small piece of land, I shall mention a neighbor of mine who has only about ten acres of cleared land, half of which is in permanent pasture, and the other half is devoted to hay and roots. On this ten acres he supports seven good cows and one horse. The horse is not an actual necessity on a dairy ranch here, as the daily trains will carry his products to market. During the fall and early winter his weekly sales of butter amounted to twenty-two dollars, and will average twelve dollars per week for the year. He feeds no chop or bran, only hay and roots in addition to the green pasture. So that it is a common saying here, that ten acres of good land is enough for one family. Land is too difficult to clear, to encourage the making of large ranches. It would frighten an average DeKalb county young man to go into the forest here to clear up a ten acre lot. You could clear one hundred acres of DeKalb county land as easy as you could clear ten acres here. My uncle, Joseph Steckley, and I have been clearing land during the fall and winter. We use a sort of a lizzard sled, and roll on one end of the log and haul it to a deep gulch and roll them in. When the the gulch was full, about one thousand logs on one pile, we would fire them, and a fire like that of a volcano would illuminate the night. Then we would fill up our gulch again. In this way we have removed the logs from about six acres, and how I do wish the DeKalb county farmers had the nice fir and cedar logs that we burned up.

Next in importance to dairying is the lumber interest, which will be good for yet many years to come. Coal and iron are found in considerable abundance and are being mined extensively, and manufacturies flourish. But it is to the agriculturial resources that we must look for the future prosperity of the Pacific Northwest as the small grains give larger yields than in any other section of our country. The yield of oats in particular, is enormous and the quality is of the best. The average summer nights are too cool for field corn. Sweet corn succeeds well if planted early on good soil. Fruit raising is a rising industry, as it has been found that the codling moth will not live within ten miles of the salt water of the Sound. Other fruit pests known to eastern people are almost unknown here. Such perfect fruit is a delight to see. In conclusion I will say, that none should be lured by these pen pictures of mine, to come here to find a life of ease. But should any one with a good supply of muscle, and plenty of courage wish to make a home in this big woods, he will find good neighbors, rich soil and a generous climate, healthful and conducive to longevity, where he can produce all the good things that delight the eve and tickle the palate of man. Wishing you all well, I remain yours truly. JOSEPH A. SHADE.

A Living Mouse Trap.

This is not a puff for a patent mouse trap, nor for a new breed of mice. It is a plain bit of history that will some day fill out a chapter in the "Early Events of DeKalb county." Last evening in the examination of the Dutton murder case, the office of Justice Walter was packed. The attorneys were having three minute spats every thirty seconds. Miss Sophie Maxwell, one of the "girls dressed in yellow" was giving her version of the dreadful occurrence; his honor was dividing his time between instructing the witness as to her rights, and keeping the attorneys on the right side of the line fence, and the interest was getting intense.

Court Reporter Willenar was bending over his writing pad and his skilled hand was rapidly covering page after page, with quail tracks, compared with which the tangles the attorneys had got into were plain and simple. "What happened next?" said Mr. Pomeroy, and the reporter jerked up his left leg in a way to indicate a sharp twinge of the gout. Then he put that leg down and held still and breathless for a moment, but only a moment. Again the leg rose like a flash, and his hands nervously clasped his pants at the knee. The COURIER had seen it all and noticed the sudden shade of pallor come over his face. "It's a mouse," gasped the reporter in a whisper, on answering to a look of inqury. Then began a skirt dance, that in the proper place, would have called down the house. First one hand, and then both hands clasped the endangered leg, and a series of nervous pinchings followed fast and furious. He raised that leg, and holding one hand on the mouse, forced the other by degrees up under his pants, toward the object of his terror. He had now attracted the attention of all, and laughter was bubbling up everywhere. "Order, gentlemen, I must have order in the court" called out his Honor sternly, for owing to the attorneys for the defense sitting between him and the reporter, he could not see the cause of the fun "Your honor will have to get out a restraining order," said the reporter. But just then an extra wriggle of the reporter, threw him in sight of his Honor, and when he drew down and out the limp body of the now dead little beast and threw it on the table, his Honor gave in, and a roar went up, the like of which is not often heard in court. And the incident was over. In the same spirit in which we liberated Cuba—in the interetst of humanity—the COURIER is from this time on in favor of having only male reporters. This court used to have a lady reporter, one in every way qualified for her usual duties. But we tremble to think of what might have happened in an emergency like this. We demand that Willenar have a monument.

Regardless Of Age.

The kidneys are responsible for more sickness, suffering, and deaths than any other organ of the body.

A majority of the ills afflicting people today is traceable to kidney trouble. It prevades all classes of society, in all climates, regardless of age, sex or condition.

The symptoms of kidney trouble are unmistakable, such as rheumatism, neuralgia, sleeplessness, pain or dull ache in the back, a desire to urinate often day or night, profuse or scanty supply.

Uric acid, or brick-dust deposit in urine are signs of clogged kidneys, causing poisoned and germ-filled blood. Sometimes the heart acts badly, and tube casts (wasting of the kidneys) are found in the urine, which if neglected will result in Bright's Disease, the most dangerous form of kidney trouble.

All these symptoms and conditions are promptly removed under the influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. It has a world wide reputation for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

No one need be long without it as it is so easy to get at, any drug store at fifty cents or one dollar. You can have a sample bottle of this wonderful discovery, Swamp-Root, and a book telling all about it, both sent you absolutely free by mail. Send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. and kindly mention that you read this liberal offer in The Auburn Courier, Auburn, Ind.

THE NEW LAW

County and Township Government Bill Has Passed

The law is a long one and quite tedious, even to read. So we give the substance in as brief a form as possible.

1. Within 20 days of the taking effect of the act, the county Commissioner shall meet and divide the county into six "councilmanic" districts of as compact shape as possible, but breaking no township lines. District boundaries shall not be changed oftener than once in six years.

2. One councilman will be elected by the people in each district, and three councilmen at large, by the people of the entire county.

3. The law will go into effect with the other laws, when all are published the coming summer. But the first officers will be elected in November 1900 to serve two years and after that to serve four years.

4. In counties of 35,000 population or less, like DeKalb, the salary of each councilman for one year will be $10. In larger counties it will be $15 to $20 a year.

5. All meetings of the nine councilmen shall be at the county seat. The county auditor shall be clerk of the council and keep a minute of the proceedings. The sheriff or his deputy shall attend at its meetings.

6. The county council shall have power to fix the tax rates for the county taking it away from the commissioners. The council also makes all appropriations of the money to be paid out.

7. Before Thursday after the first Monday in August of each year, every county officer shall prepare an itemized statement of the money needed to carry on his office for a year, and the county clerks must make a statement of amounts needed in the circuit court to pay all its expenses including costs of change of venue to other counties, salary of officers, hire of deputies, and supplies of all kinds. And the Board of county commissioners shall prepare a similar statement of all expenditures they are to pay out, including salaries supplies, building, new or repairs on same, bridges and repairs, ditches, roads, board of health, county attorney, pay of all officers, of county Board of Review, etc, etc.

8. The Council fixes a uniform rate for each township to cover the expenses of making the annual assessments.

9. All these estimates are to be presented to the auditor on or before Wednesday after the first Monday in August, and the auditor must present them to the Council at their meeting on Tuesday after the first Monday in September, with any recommendation he may have to make. The council fixes the rates of taxation, etc, and each ordinance fixing tax rates shall be read in the council on at least two separate days before being voted on.

10. Any money left over after paying the estimated expenses of that department in the year, goes back into the county fund. But if more money should be needed, a special session may be called; and the money appropriated by a two-thirds vote. No Board of Commissioners, nor any other county officer can bind the county to pay anything not authorized by the county council.

The Monitor as a Fighter

Monitors, in a large degree, are vessels in which engineers may take special interest, and I am a great believer in their efficacy when properly used. In the Spanish-American war, their record is considered to have been a poor one, but this, in my judgment, was because they were diverted to uses for which they were never intended. They are purposely designed for operating near the coast, and have neither the speed or coal supply to enable them to make long cruises. A gallant captain of the United States navy stated that if, given the command of the Monterery, he would be ready to fight any battle-ship afloat. I certainly do not advocate the building of the monitors to the exclusion of vessels intended for the high seas, but as coast-defenders I believe they have no superiors. Engineer-in-Chief G. W. Melville, in the Engineering Magazine for March.

EVENTS OF INTEREST

THAT OCCURRED DURING THE PAST WEEK.

Tersely Told Telegraph Tales in Brief Paragraphs—Many Casualties—A Few Crimes—Some Fires—Political and Religious News.

Trade of the Week.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

Business during the past month was greater than ever known in February. The clearing house exchanges were about $7,000,000,000, against $5,567,553,844 last year, and were 54.2 per cent. larger than in 1892. In all the years of weekly commercial reporting there has been no other week in which reports have been so good as this week. During the past week there has been a general advance in wages. At most points an advance of 10 per cent. or more was entirely voluntary. It averaged from 5 to 10 per cent. in tin plate and about 10 per cent. in other cases, and as it affects much over 100,000 hands, it will add greatly to the purchasing power of the wage earners.

The failures for the week in the United States were 186, against 251 last year, and 47 in Canada, against 32 last year.

Have No Prisoners.

The following dispatch has been received by Secretary of War Alger from Gen. Otis in answer to Secretary Alger's inquiry respecting the number of American prisoners held by the insurgents:

Insurgents have not taken nor do they hold a single prisoner of war. They have three soldiers in Malolos, picked up in January, who, without permission, went among them near Cavite and Caloocan. I am looking after them and providing money. Have captured over 1,500 insurgent soldiers since February 4, and hold the majority as prisoners of war. Detrimental reports which reach the United States are manufactured mostly in Hong Kong. Troops here in splendid condition.

Fog Causes Collision.

The heavy fog which overhung Chicago Thursday was indirectly the cause of a head-end collision between two freight trains on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, at Blue Island avenue, which resulted in the death of one man and the injury of two others. The dead: Herman Schomberg, 35 years old, crushed to death and buried beneath the debris of the wreck.

The injured: John Dwyslin, legs crushed and internally injured, probably fatally.

August Turnegessy, shoulder dislocated and head cut; taken to hospital.

Hold a Stormy Session.

A special from Havana says: The Cuban military assembly met at Mariano, Gen. Andrade presiding. The report of the special committee that called on President McKinley was before the assembly. The session was private. It is understood the session was stormy, the discussion being over the acceptance of the $3,000,000 tendered by the United States Government. Seventeen members, it is said, favor accepting the amount, but no final decision was reached and the assembly will meet at El Coreo again soon.

Walla Tonka Was Shot.

Wichita (Kan.) special: Walla Tonka, the Indian ball player, was shot to death on Monday. The reprieve had been granted, but the courier failed to arrive at the Alikehi Court-house in the Choctaw Nation in time to save his life. A dispatch sent out from Antlers, I. T., to the effect that Tonka was not shot is denied. The following message was received from Judge Clayton: "Tonka executed according to law. Courier failed to arrive with my reprieve."

Superior Process for Hardening Steel.

Thomas A. Edison, Jr., claims to have a process for hardening steel plates, which is far superior to the Harvey or Krupp process. A company has been already organized to manufacture it. Six-inch plate treated by this process, Edison says, will resist more than thirteen-inch Harveyized plate. The Government will test it.

Killed in a Snowslide.

Gunnison (Colo.) special: Five men and a woman are buried under an avalanche of snow which came down Granite Mountain near the Magna Charter Mine at White Pine, twenty-five miles from this place. The six persons were all in the boarding house kept by Mrs. Stout, which was crushed by the avalanche and carried with the snow down the gulch.

Killed Baby Sister.

A 7-year-old son of Stephen Bolander, residing near Mohawk, Hancock County, Ind., accidentally shot and killed his 4-year-old sister with a target rifle. The discharge of the weapon entered the breast, causing instant death.

Prince to Command a Fleet.

Emperor William has promoted his brother, Prince Henry of Prussia, to command the cruiser squadron.

For Extraordinary Heroism.

The President has sent to the Senate for confirmation the name of Assistant Naval Constructor Richmond P. Hobson, to be advanced ten numbers, from No. 1 of the list of assistant naval constructors to be No. 8 on the list of naval constructors, for extraordinary heroism.

Filipinos Demand $7,000,000.

Gen. Rios has cabled to the Madrid Government that the Tagalos have refused the $500,000 offered as a ransom for the Spanish prisoners in the Philippines, demanding $7,000,000 for their release.

South African Gold Yield.

A consular report from Cape Town, Africa, says that, reckoning on the basis of the September reports of outputs, South Africa will produce in the current year $76,647,375 of gold, which will place South Africa ahead of all the gold-producing countries of the world.

Baking Powder Combine.

It is reported on good authority that the interests of the Royal Baking Powder Company, the New York Baking Powder Company and the Cleveland Baking Powder Company have been sold to William Ziegler for between $11,000,000 and $12,000,000.

URGENT DEMAND, BUOYANT PRICES.

Call for Supplies for Both Domestic and Foreign Demand.

Bradstreet's says: "Iron and steel and cotton goods have shared in public interest for a few days because of urgency in demand and consequent buoyancy in prices. In the former industry the striking feature has been the continued call for supplies alike of raw and of manufactured material, not only on domestic but even on foreign account, and it is as yet too early to ascertain the effect of the numerous and heavy advances announced upon the export demand. In cotton goods, as in iron and steel and a number of other products, active export demand seems to have been at the bottom of the unquestionable improvement which has occurred in the last three months. The export trade in cotton goods is the largest ever known for the period since Jan. 1. Cereal products remain steady and but little changed in price. Wheat, including flour, shipments for the week aggregate 3,844,359 bushels, against 2,454,771 bushels last week. Corn exports for the week aggregate 2,871,057 bushels, against 1,560,845 bushels last week."

NEW VETERANS' ORGANIZATION.

Call Issued for Organizing Convention to Meet in Washington.

A new association, to be known as the Spanish-American War Veterans' Association, is about to be formed and a call has been issued for a convention to be held in Washington Sept. 4, 5 and 6. The proposed association will have for its objects the wiping out of sectionalism, the promotion of closer fraternal relations, the fostering of a more unselfish patriotism and the corporate effort to secure the enactment of legislation, in State and nation, in the interest of soldiers, the army and navy generally. Gen. Joe Wheeler (chairman), Brig. Gen. J. P. S. Gobin, Maj. E. C. Davis of Atlanta and Maj. Russell B. Harrison, provost marshal of the Seventh army corps, will act as executive committee.

IS AGAINST THE OHIO LAW.

United States Supreme Court Passes on on the Oleomargarine Act.

In the United States Supreme Court an opinion has been handed down by Justice Peckham in the case of the State of Ohio vs. Gen. J. E. Thomas, Governor of the Soldiers' Home at Dayton. The case was a prosecution against Gen. Thomas under State laws for failing to post a placard in the eating room of the home stating that oleomargarine is used there. The court held that the State law was unconstitutional in its application to the Soldiers' Home.

ORLEANIST PLOT UNCOVERED.

Conspiracy Clearly Shown by Papers Seized at Paris.

The Rappet and other Paris papers say that the papers of the royalists which were recently seized show clearly the existence of an Orleanist plot, which had been aided by subscriptions by certain foreign sovereigns. The plot was to be carried out by a general who, it was expected, would soon become minister for war. The Orleanists intended to act as soon as the general took office, but M. Deroulede's action spoiled the plan.

Deserted in Sinking Craft.

The British steamer Garton, from Brunswick for Bremen, arrived at Dartmouth, having on board the second officer and six of the crew of the British bark Galatea of St. John, N. B., from Turk's Island, with salt for Boston, reported to have been abandoned, dismasted and water-logged. The Galatea was abandoned in a sinking condition. Capt. Lewis, the chief officer, the steward, stewardess and three seamen left her in the only remaining boat, the others having been stove in during the gale. The boat was lost sight of in a furious gale, and the second officer considers it impossible for her to have weathered the storm. The same evening the Garton hove in sight and took off the remainder of the crew of the Galatea at a great risk. Capt. Lewis, according to the second officer, took with him all the provisions and left the remainder of the crew on board the sinking ship, although, he adds, there was room for all in the boat.

Farmer Freed of Murder Charge.

William S. Foley, a 28-year-old farmer, was acquitted of the charge of having murdered his mother at their home near Liberty, Mo., in 1897. He is still under indictment, charged with killing his sister, but will probably never be tried on the charge. Foley's first trial resulted in a hung jury. On the second he was convicted and sentenced to be hanged, but was granted a new trial.

Tom Allen is in for Murder.

Tom Allen, an old-time prize fighter, at one time heavy-weight champion of the world, is under arrest at the Four Courts, St. Louis, Mo., charged with murder. Tom Coupry, whom Allen shot during a fracas in the ex-prize fighter's saloon, died at the city hospital. Allen declares that he thought Coupry was going to shoot him and for that reason used his revolver.

Motor Car Makes Good Time.

A steam motor car, designed for use on the Pennsylvania line between Xenia, Ohio, and Springfield, has made a trial trip, averaging a speed of twenty miles an hour. The motor has the appearance of an ordinary passenger coach, the trucks being driven by an engine in the forward part of the car, fuel being fed to the boilers by an automatic device.

Private Shoots His Captain.

Capt. R. S. Carr of Company L, First Kentucky volunteers, was shot at Ashland, Ky., by Private Harry Price, a soldier of his command. Price accosted Capt. Carr and charged him with improper and unfair areatment while the regiment was in Porto Rico. The bullet entered the captain's right shoulder, inflicting a serious, though not fatal, wound.

Society Woman Commits Suicide.

In her home in Kansas City, Mo., Mrs. Clio Findlay blew out her brains with a revolver as she stood before a mirror. Her two sons, returning from school, were the first to discover the tragedy. Mrs. Findlay was the wife of Alexander Findlay, a well-to-do real estate dealer, and was prominent in society. Ill health led to the act.

Will Admit American Fruit.

The officials of the German foreign office have notified the United States embassy that the Government will henceforth admit American oranges, lemons and raisins without examination, and also that all American fresh and dried fruit will be allowed to pass in bond through Germany without being examined.

Big Block of Opal is Found.

The steamer Miowera brings news that a sensational discovery of opal is reported from Opaiton, Queensland. The find is said to be one of the biggest blocks of opal ever discovered, its value being estimated between £7,000 and £10,000 ($35,000 to $50,000).

Epidemic of Meningitis.

Texas is passing through an epidemic of meningitis. The death record in Fort Worth is thirty for the week. Reports from the country towns give a similar situation. Many schools have been closed on account of the ravages of this disease.

Postoffice is Robbed.

The Covington, Ky., postoffice was robbed of stamps and money reported to amount to $20,000. The work was evidently done by men who had secreted themselves in the stamp department, as it was possible to do, provided the watchman, who is charged with looking after the carriers' door, under the main stairway, neglected his duty. This door is never closed. Through it thieves could enter and secrete themselves behind mail sacks and see the stamp clerk put away his stamps and cash when he closed for the night. The robbery was first discovered by finding the large door where the mail wagons load wide open when the first employes reached the building in the morning. The thieves evidently escaped that way.

SUDDEN DEATH OF HERSCHELL.

Came from England to Act with High Joint Commission.

Lord Herschell, one of the high joint commissioners from Great Britain, died at Washington. He fell on a slippery sidewalk and broke one of the pelvic bones several weeks ago, and this finally caused his death. Lord Herschell was lord chancellor of Great Britain and was sent to the United States, because of his eminent attainments, to take a leading part in the negotiations designed to settle all existing differences between the United States and Canada. During the wintry weather, when the sidewalks were slippery, he fell heavily as he was about to get into his carriage and broke one of the pelvic bones. He seemed to be progressing favorably toward recovery and was in good health comparatively, when he was suddenly stricken with heart failure.

RIVAL TO BIG STEEL TRUST.

Ohio Capitalists Preparing to Purchase Thirty-five Mills.

The National Steel Company is to have a formidable rival if the project now under way is consummated. Youngstown, Ohio, capitalists are organizing a company with $20,000,000 capital to purchase thirty-five rolling mills in the country. If the effort to secure these properties succeed the Brown Bonnell Coal and Iron Company, Mahoning Valley Iron Company and Andrews Brothers will go into the deal. The intention is to erect a steel plant at Youngstown that will contain the latest machinery and every appliance for production at the lowest possible cost.

Study Affects His Brain.

John W. Collins, a medical student from Dallard, Pa., is dead, having committed suicide by shooting himself in the head at St. Louis. He left a widow and one child. Mrs. Collins said her husband had been studying night and day to complete his course at the American Medical College and she thought his brain had been affected by overwork.

Vetoes in West Virginia.

Gov. Atkinson of West Virginia has vetoed the labor lien bill, which allowed a laborer or employe a lien on material or property for unpaid wages, even when held by an innocent purchaser, and a bill taxing express companies $500 a year for a charter, $200 on every agent, 2 cents on each package handled and 2 per cent of the gross earnings.

Cripple Creek's February Output.

The Cripple Creek February gold production was limited by severe weather to $1,257,250, or 31,550 tons. Of this amount 8,250 tons, worth $643,500, was smelted; the remainder was treated by mills and plants. February dividends reached $378,000, a gain over January of $176,000, and over the previous highest record of $107,000.

NO FEAR OF TREATY.

The United States Is Not Worried by Spain's Crisis.

The Situation in the Spanish Cortes leading up to the resignation of the Sagasta ministry and threatening the life of the peace treaty is said by Washington officials to be the direct result of bad management on the part of the sponsors for the treaty. It is said that there was no requirement, either domestic or included in the treaty itself, for the submission of the convention to the Cortes for ratification. On the contrary, the text of the treaty says that it should be ratified by the Queen Regent.

It is further said that this very point was discussed by the peace commissioners at Paris, the Spanish commissioners desiring to require the ratification of the Cortes, but finally taking the other course, perhaps with a view to avoiding the very trouble which has overcome Sagasta.

Leaving aside the desire of the American people to be regular and correct in all attitudes, it is a question whether the Government would not actually profit by the loss of the treaty, provided this loss could be charged to the action of the Spanish Government, as would be the case if the Cortes refused to ratify it.

The United States, it can be stated on the highest authority, would refuse to surrender the Philippines and, on the other hand, would be relieved from the treaty obligation to pay the Spanish Government $20,000,000 on account of the cession of the islands. Cuba would retain her present status and all that would be lacking would be a recognition by the Spanish Government of the legality of that status.

BITTER STRIFE IN SAMOA.

Acts of the Provisional Government Stir Up Discord.

Advices received from Apia say that affairs there are still unsatisfactory. The provisional government, it appears, is interfering with native and British subjects and also with the servants of British subjects, and is taxing the Malietoa people $2 and the Mataafa people $1 each.

Dr. Raffel, the German president of the municipal council at Apia, has, at the instigation of the British consul, apologized for boycotting the British cruiser Porpoise and for insulting the chief justice and Malieton's lawyer while they were guests on board the vessel. A landing party from the Porpoise, ready with machine guns, was, therefore, not sent ashore, though a plan to make an attack on Mulinuu had been all arranged.

There is much indignation at the act of the provisional government in keeping in exile prisoners whose only offense is loyalty. The German consul continues to protect the Germans from the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, but Mr. Grovesmuhl paid $55 for contempt of court when the court advertised the sale of his property. Grovesmuhl remains at his consulate, fearing arrest and having to serve a sentence of 100 days' imprisonment. It is stated that he is also afraid of being arrested on the charge of drunkenness.

Mr. Moore, an American citizen, who is said to favor the Germans, wrote threatening letters to Chief Justice Chambers. He was found guilty of contempt of court, but was discharged after making ample apology.

SURE PROOF OF TREASON.

Paris Police Seize Letters Written to High Officers.

The Paris Aurore says that the correspondence seized by the police at the headquarters of the League of Patriots and elsewhere includes six letters written by relatives of high military officers. The writers say that officers of certain regiments have been sounded and have expressed their readiness to engage in a movement to upset the republic. One general stipulates that he shall receive the title of prince as the price of his becoming a royalist when the monarchy is restored.

The Government has now searched the headquarters of three more leagues—the French Fatherland, of which Coppee and Lemaitre are the leading spirits; the Rights of Man, which is a revolutionary organization, and the League of National Interests and Defense. The official searching party also visited the residence of Baron Jules Legoux, direct representative of Prince Victor Napoleon, and president of the plebiscitary committees of the Seine. The police seized a large number of documents of the League of the French Fatherland, including the list of members and correspondence. The desks and other repositories have been sealed for future examination.

STATEMENT OF PUBLIC DEBT.

Increase of Over $5,000,000 During the Month of February.

The monthly statement of the public debt shows that at the close of business on Feb. 28, 1899, the debt, less cash in the treasury, was $1,157,904,391, an increase during the month of $5,279,641. This increase is accounted for by a corresponding decrease in the cash. The debt is recapitulated as follows:

Interest-bearing debt	$1,040,735,270
Debt on which interest has ceased since maturity	1,231,670
Debt bearing no interest	385,040,964
Total	$1,427,007,904

This amount, however, does not include $555,528,513 in certificates and treasury notes offset by an equal amount of cash in the treasury. Cash in the treasury is recapitulated as follows:

Gold	$264,091,476
Silver	507,531,887
Paper	50,936,486
Bonds, deposits in national bank depositories, disbursing officers' balances, etc.	85,791,120
Total	$908,350,971

Against the above total there are demand liabilities outstanding amounting to $639,247,458, leaving a net cash balance of $269,103,513.

FIGHT OVER ARMY ENDED.

House Adopts the Reorganization Bill by a Big Majority.

The Senate bill for the reorganization of the army was passed by the House by a vote of 203 to 32. No attempt was made to amend the bill, and it was discussed but a few minutes.

The provisions of the bill are as follows: In time of peace the enlisted strength of the regular army is limited to less than 29,000 men. Until July 1, 1901, the President can increase the regular army to 65,000 men. One hundred additional cadets are to be appointed. The President is authorized to enlist 35,000 volunteers for two years and four months. There are to be twenty-seven regiments of infantry and three of cavalry among the volunteers. One brigadier general may be named for each 4,000 volunteers. One major general for each 12,000 volunteers. Post canteens are abolished.

FEBRUARY RECEIPTS ARE BIG.

Heavy Increase of Revenue Over the Record of 1898.

The comparative statement of the Government receipts and expenditures shows that for the month of February the receipts aggregated $37,179,332, as compared with February, 1898, of about $9,500,000. The expenditures for the month were $43,918,929, leaving a deficit for February of about $6,000,000. The receipts for the eight months of the present fiscal year were $325,414,187, against $274,557,960 for the same period last year.

The House spent most of the day Friday in general debate upon the army appropriation bill, finally closing that order of business. After a session of nearly eight hours the Senate passed the river and harbor bill by the decisive vote of 50 to 3. The measure was under consideration throughout the day, and on several of the committee amendments a determined fight was made, but in every instance the opposition availed nothing. During the afternoon Mr. Sewell (N. J.) delivered a speech in support of the Hull-Hawley army reorganization bill.

After a long contest in the Senate on Monday the compromise army bill was passed in the evening by a vote of 55 to 13. Afterward the Senate took up the sundry civil bill and completed its reading, all the committee amendments being agreed to except those relating to the District of Columbia. The House was in session seven hours and sent to the Senate two more appropriation bills—the army, which has been under consideration for several days, and the fortifications. The former carried about $79,000,000 and the latter approximated $4,700,000. The final conference report upon the Indian appropriation bill was also adopted. Mr. Hager (rep., Iowa) asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the Senate joint resolution authorizing the President to appoint Oscar Deignan, one of the heroes of the Merrimac, a naval cadet at Annapolis. The resolution was adopted. A bill was passed appropriating $5,000 for the investigation of leprosy in this country under a board to be selected by the surgeon general. Mr. Corliss (rep., Mich.) stated that there were about 300 cases in the United States.

The House spent practically the entire time of the seven-hour session on Tuesday passing the public building bills favorably acted upon by the committee of the whole ten days before. Sixty-one bills in all were passed, carrying $9,352,000, $750,000 of which, however (the amount appropriated for the New York custom house), is to be repaid from the proceeds of the sale of the old building. A joint resolution was passed to authorize foreign governments desiring to make exhibits at the commercial exposition to be held at Philadelphia in 1899 to bring into this country foreign laborers under contract to prepare the exhibits. A frenzy of bill passing was on in the Senate. The bills passed were principally public building measures, and at times during the day and night the scenes in the Senate were remarkable. Bills carrying an aggregate of $8,000,000 or $10,000,000 were passed, and many more that had not been passed by both houses of Congress were placed as amendments on the sundry civil appropriation bill. Finally, at a late hour in the evening, an amendment to the sundry civil bill was adopted, appropriating nearly $4,000,000 for the preliminary work on the buildings which had been authorized.

The last possibility of an extra session of Congress disappeared Wednesday when the House passed the Senate army reorganization bill. The bill passed 203 to 32. The decks were also cleared of many other important matters. The general deficiency appropriation bill, carrying $21,089,000, was passed under suspension of the rules, without a word of criticism. The Senate amendments to the river and harbor bill were non-concurred in and it was sent to conference. The conference reports on the omnibus claims bill, the naval personnel and many other less important measures were agreed to. The Senate bill making Dewey a full admiral was passed. The naval appropriation bill, which ordinarily consumes the time of the Senate for several days, was passed by that body after less than five hours of debate. One of the first acts of the Senate when that body convened was the consideration of the bill carrying $20,000,000 with which to pay Spain for relinquishment of the Philippines in accordance with the treaty of Paris. Mr. Allison (Iowa) reported the measure from the Committee on Appropriations and asked for its immediate consideration. The bill was laid before the Senate and in half a minute was passed without a word of debate. The Senate concluded the day's session by pronouncing eulogies upon the late Representative Dingley.

In the House on Thursday two public building bills attached by the Senate to bills for public buildings in other cities were agreed to, one appropriating $250,000 for a building at Los Angeles, Cal., and the other $75,000 for a building at New Brighton, Pa. A number of conference reports on minor bills were adopted. Mr. Payne (Rep., N. Y.), the floor leader of the majority, moved the passage, under suspension of the rules, of the bill appropriating $500,000 for the Pan-American exposition to be held at Buffalo, N. Y., in 1901. The bill was passed, 141 to 16. Mr. Southard followed this motion with a motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill to appropriate $500,000 for the Ohio centennial exposition to be held at Toledo. The bill was passed, 120 to 19. Mr. Mercer (Rep., Neb.) moved to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill appropriating $1,000,000 for a new building for the department of justice in Washington. At Mr. Cannon's request an amendment was adopted limiting the cost of the building to $1,000,000, and as amended the bill was passed. During almost the entire session the Senate was engaged in routine business. Three score or more of minor bills were passed, the calendar being cleared entirely of private pension bills and of measures correcting military and naval records. Two measures of national importance were passed—the fortifications appropriation bill and the bill providing a code of criminal laws for the district of Alaska.

Told in a Few Lines.

A monument to George Washington, to cost $25,000, is to be erected in Chicago.

The former Spanish gunboat Baracoa, sunk in the Mayari river, Cuba, has been raised.

Alfred Nading, a prominent farmer living north of Richmond, Mo., was found dead in his bed by his family.

Gen. M. P. Miller, who commanded the United States forces at the capture of Iloilo recently, will be retired in a few days, having been forty-one years in service.

Senator Mills of Texas, who will retire from the Senate on the 4th of March, is rapidly getting rich and will probably soon be a millionaire. During his whole career in Congress Mr. Mills has been poor, but a short time ago oil was discovered on his property in Corsicana and the wells are now producing great quantities of oil.

A recent suit brought in Louisville to recover a Kentucky coon dog occupied the attention for an entire day of a judge, six attorneys, the plaintiff and defendant, the jury (which included two Baptist ministers) and a room full of witnesses. During the hearing of the case the dog slept under a table in the custody of the sheriff.

STATE LAW MAKERS.

The lower branch of the Legislature on Friday passed the Senate bills appropriating $100,000 for the completion of the State soldiers and sailors' monument and $120,000 for a State hospital for epileptics at Columbus. Both bills were passed over the protests of the Committee on Ways and Means. The Governor announced that he would veto the bill to establish the hospital for epileptics.

The bill designed to enable Indianapolis to grant a franchise to the new street railway company was called up in the House Saturday morning. It was so amended as to give the common council power to provide for certain things not enumerated in the bill, but not to be inconsistent with its provisions. The House passed the general appropriation bill, and advanced the bill for reform in county government to a third reading. The opponents of the latter bill were very active, and fear that they might defeat it in the absence of several members caused an adjournment at noon until Monday. The Senate passed the bill providing that the State shall issue bonds to the University of Vincennes on a claim which originated soon after the State adopted the present constitution. The claim, exclusive of interest, which is not demanded, aggregates nearly $300,000. The bill reducing the number of truant officers in a county to one was passed, as was also the bill providing for the appointment of a board of park commissioners for Indianapolis. The attorneys who appeared for E. E. Stoner and Frank Cregor in the contest from the Madison and Hancock Senatorial district put in claims for services that aggregate $2,000. The committee on elections refused to recommend its payment.

The Senate on Tuesday passed the bill under which it is proposed to settle the street railway controversy in Indianapolis. By this bill all franchises to operate street railways in the city are wiped out and the city is left to make a contract for a thirty-four year franchise with the reorganized Citizens' company. It is provided in the law that if the city fail to contract with this company the franchise shall be sold at auction in January, 1900, to the highest bidder for a period of not more than thirty years.

The bill for the condemnation of land for a waterway between Lake Michigan and Wolf lake, in order that a harbor for the city of Hammond might be formed in the latter, was killed in the Senate Wednesday afternoon by a vote of 27 to 19. The principal objection to the bill was that it placed the cost of making the waterway upon the adjoining land owners and that the city of Hammond alone would reap the benefit. Two years ago the bill passed both houses and was vetoed by the Governor.

The following bills have been signed by the Governor:

Authorizing depositions to be taken to probate wills.

An act to regulate the manufacture and sale of commercial fertilizers.

An act concerning public offenses and their punishment.

AT NIGHT.

Would that I owned the castles,
All of my livelong days.
Castles that rear their turrets
There in the grate fire's blaze.

Peopled with lads and lasses,
None of them past sixteen—
Age of the great romances,
Greatest the world's ere seen.

Lads, every one a gallant,
Courtiers of sturdier heart
Wedded to love and honor,
Daring the Fates to part.

Each lovely lass a princess—
Princess of joy and grace—
Gleans from a heart that's melting
Lighting each fairy face.

Then 'twould be worth the living—
This life—for millions of days.
Were but the world we live in
That of the grate fire's blaze.

JUANITA.

A Story of Old Mexico.

The little town of San Carlos is so much like most other little Mexican towns that it hardly needs any careful description. Lying as it does in the heart of that vast wilderness of Old Mexico, a tiny patch of green on the face of the sun-scorched earth, it seems insignificant to a degree, and naturally it is not down on the map—such towns rarely are. Its few fields, bravely struggling against the heat and drought, are but sparsely watered by a little creek which flows from a ravine close by, and which seems to disappear into a thirsty earth a few hundred yards farther on. San Carlos itself is composed merely of a few gray abode houses clustered together around a square little plaza, and the remnants of what had once been a tiny chapel, built hundreds of years before by the old Spanish fathers, and still standing, a crumbling, time-worn monument to their memory.

Yet primitive as was the little town, here Juanita had lived all the happy eighteen years of her life, and right here she was contented to stay until she should be laid away beside her sleeping grandfathers and great-grandfathers in the little graveyard beside the chapel, for she loved the dear old place; and—possibly because she knew nothing of the great world beyond—she never even thought of leaving it. Then, too, there was another and still stronger reason. Her father, old Don Jose, had promised her to the son of his oldest and dearest friend, who had fought with him years before in the war with the hated Americans and who had been wounded in the battle of Cerro Gordo before the famous old City of Mexico itself. Now secretly—this was just what the young people had desired. Pedro and Juanita had grown up together from childhood. They had been constant companions, and were they not the handsomest couple in the whole broad valley? Had not Juanita all her father's lands as her dowry, which, united to those which Pedro owned, would make them the largest land owners in the village? It was certainly a most desirable match, and the two old men congratulated each other, as old men will who have seen their fondest hopes fulfilled, and emptied many a sparkling cup to the health of Pedro and his fair young bride.

But now Juanita was sorely troubled.

Everything had gone along smoothly as ever until one day something had happened which bid fair to upset all their plans for the future. On a certain bright morning there had ridden up to the door of her father's hut one of a band of Americans who were prospecting in the gray mountains that lay away over to the west. He was a fine looking young fellow, and for a man who had been prospecting for two years under the fierce sun of old Mexico he was remarkably fair, and then his blue eyes had a frank expression about them which was far different from the ever-suspicious glance which characterized the men of that quaint country. He wore the usual dress of men of his occupation, loose blue flannel shirt and corduroy trousers tucked in at the top of his heavy boots, a red handkerchief knotted carlessly around his neck and huge Mexican spurs dangling from his heels.

Juanita had been standing in the little opening on the opposite side of the house and had not seen him until he was almost beside her, so that it appeared to her as if he must have suddenly sprung from Mother Earth.

Harding had seen her about the same instant she had seen him, and as he doffed his wide sombrero and asked in imperfect Spanish to see the don, unconsciously his pulse quickened. Juanti was really a very beautiful Mexican girl, by far the most beautiful creature he had seen during the whole course of his stay in that dismally arid country, and the expression on the girl's face flattered him not a little. Still he had almost forgotten her when he had finished bargaining with her father for provisions for himself and his men, which he did at last succeed in getting only at the payment of a fabulous sum, and when he turned and saw her standing where he had left her he started and would have spoken had he not felt the piercing little black eyes of Don Jose fastened upon him. As it was, the old man detected the start and ordered his daughter hastily into the house.

Ever since that time Juanita's thoughts had been in dire conflict with one another, and late that night when all was quiet in the village she had crept noiselessly into the little chapel, and, kneeling before the time-worn image of the Holy Mother, had prayed, with tears streaming down her cheeks, that she would direct her and help her to forget. But far up among the hills on the great range that overlooks San Carlos the prospector was standing alone, whistling softly to himself and gazing down into the wide plain at his feet. Some little distance behind him his companions lay sleeping, and on a flat rock which answered for a table, some one had overturned the coffee pot and a dark, oozy stream was slowly running down the side. One of the men moved a little in his sleep. Harding started and looked around at him. Then as the moon rose slowly above the peaks behind him he turned, knocked the ashes from his pipe, wrapped himself up in his blankets, and without more ado was sleeping soundly.

Nearly a week passed and the feeling of restlessness which for a time had possessed Juanita had nearly been forgotten when again Harding rode into San Carlos. Poor little Juanita! All her attempts to forget him had been in vain then, for as she saw him come into the plaza her heart gave a great bound for joy and she flushed under her olive skin to the tips of her dainty fingers. The flush suited her dark face and heightened its beauty, thought Harding, as, dismounting, he asked if Don Jóse were in. As luck would have it he had gone over to see a friend, and the two fell into conversation. She was shy at first, but the evident ease of her companion finally set her last fear at rest, and when the old don did return they parted the best of friends and with an understanding that they were to meet again down by the old well hidden away in the little ravine outside the town. After an hour's talk with her father Harding again left the house and, swinging himself into the saddle, rode carelessly out toward the hills.

A mile or so from the town he made a slight change in the direction he was taking and so little by little headed for the ravine.

Just as the sun went down Harding reached the well, and after turning his pony to nibble the juicy blades of grass which grew around it, threw himself down to wait. He had been there perhaps two or three hours when the bushes were parted gently and Juanita came toward him. She had slipped away, she said, while her father and Pedro sat smoking, and had come as she had promised, but she must hurry, for the time was short and her absence would be noticed. Little by little, between questions and promisings, she told him all her brief life history, of Pedro, of her father's wishes and lastly of her own new love for him, and when at last she could say no more she stood looking up at him, her eyes full of the love she had just confessed, until he took her in his arms and kissed her.

In the same instant they were startled by a sound behind them. Don Jose, his face pale with fury, stood scowling at them. Chokingly he ordered the girl away, and when she was gone he turned to Harding. "Curse you," he said, "you shall pay for this—Santa Maria! du Americano!" and disappeared as quickly as he had come.

There was no mistaking that, and the young fellow knew that if he stayed where he was his life would not be worth the waiting. His first fear was for Juanita. Loosening his revolvers in his belt, he mounted his pony and rode slowly toward San Carlos. Some moments had passed in this way and he had almost reached the mouth of the ravine, when he saw a figure coming swiftly toward him. An instant later he recognized Juanita. The poor child was almost exhausted from running.

"Go! go!" she sobbed; "they are going to follow you. Don Jose and Pedro, they will kill you if you stay! Ah no, not now," she cried, as Harding held out his arms to her, "they will find me here with you and then"—and then, as the impulse seized her, she flung herself into his arms and sobbed as if her heart would break.

She had not been a moment too soon, for even as he spoke the sound of galloping hoofs reached them, as riding furiously, their two pursuers dashed into the ravine.

With one arm supporting the trembling girl, Harding coolly unslipped his revolver and waited. The Mexicans were within thirty yards before they saw him, and then as they opened fire with their uncertain aim, he slowly raised his own weapon and pressed the trigger. With a bitter curse on his lips one of the men pitched forward from the saddle and fell to the ground. One more shot came from the remaining man before the revolver spoke again, and Harding heard a smothered cry at his side as the riderless horse plunged past him and vanished up the ravine. Then he put up his revolver and turned again to Juanita.

* * * * *

She was strangely quiet as she gazed up into his face and smiled. A quickly spreading stain over her fair young breast told him the reason at a glance. That last bullet of Don Jose's had found a mark, and as the shouts of alarm reached them from the village, whither the horse had gone, the light faded slowly from Juanita's eyes and they closed forever.

For some moments Harding did not move, then he laid her gently down beneath a lonely little willow, kissed once the fair bloodless lips, and mounting his pony rode out of the ravine past the dead bodies of the two Mexicans, and with his head sunk deep on his breast turned his horse's nose toward the distant mountains, on whose summits the last beams of the waning moon still lingered.—H. An Insulated Cat.

Jacob Titus, of Spring Valley, has an insulated Maltese cat which has been shocked by trolley, telegraph and telephone live wires, but does not mind it.

On Sunday evening the cat was chased by a Newfoundland dog. She sprinted for the nearest telegraph pole. There was a streak of Maltese up the pole and then the cat was secure on a cross tree thirty-five feet from the ground, walking with impunity on all sorts of live wires. For more than three hours the cat defied electrocution and the dog got tired of waiting and ran away. The insulated cat kept a sharp watch and slowly descended to the ground. The hair on one of the cat's paws had been singed. That was all.—New York Press.

Raising Ducks Without Water.

Ducks do not need water to thrive. There are many duck-raising plants in this country where thousands of the fowl are bred each year for market, and where there is not even a puddle for them to flounder in. One of these farms is credited with an output of 20,000 ducks a year.

THE LATE PRESIDENT FAURE'S HUMBLE BEGINNING.

IMITATION OCEAN TRIP.

The Paris Exposition Will Have a Bogus Steamer Voyage.

Because of the great novelty of the proposition, the projectors of the "Mareorama" have been assigned by the directors of the Paris exposition to a most prominent site, in the very shadow of the Eiffel tower, as a location for the proposed amusement feature. The word "Mareorama" is a new one, which has been coined for this special occasion. It means a panorama of the sea. But as it is designed it will be none of the old-time panoramas, where one takes a position on an elevated platform and views a stretch of canvas with a somewhat realistic foreground which encircles him. On the contrary, a sensation, new and novel in every particular, will be revealed to the visitor. Nothing more or less than a perfect illusion of an ocean trip is what is in store for him. Not a trip of a few minutes, but a voyage, a cruise as serious and as attractive as if he were really on the deck of a bona fide steamer going at full speed.

Entering the doorway he finds himself on the gangplank leading up to the deck of what is apparently a full-fledged ocean steamer, apparently tied up at the wharf. The reproduction is accurate in every detail. The smoking funnels, lifeboats, ropes and pulleys, ventilators, port holes, masts and spars and the uniformed crew, with the members working under the direction of the captain on the bridge all serve to increase the illusion.

Great confusion prevails just before the announced departure of the boat. Deck stewards and cabin stewards are busy looking after the comfort of the guests, spectators or passengers, whichever they happen to be in this instance. These petty officials are rushing around looking after baggage, getting chairs and doing a dozen other like errands. After a while the gangplanks are withdrawn and stowed away, whistle signals are blown and gongs sounded and the boat pulls out, leaving the city of Marseilles, which is the starting point, disappearing in the distance. The scenery of the vicinity is accurately reproduced and finally the boat reaches the high seas. Things have been all rosy up to this time, but now the sun's light is noticed to be gradually diminishing and a spot darker than the rest of the horizon appears. A storm is approaching. The roar grows louder and louder until it breaks in all its genuine fury. The waves dash over the deck and lightning plays through the rigging. The sailors run wildly back and forth and into the rigging, where sails are furled and others are at the same time engaged in making fast the more exposed pieces of deck furniture. All this time the deck of the sham boat is plunging up and down and rolling and tossing in exactly the same manner as a boat on the seas. A ray of light is now seen and soon the atmosphere has cleared again and all is rosy once more. The boat rocks to and fro now with pleasant undulations.

The itinerary of the trip includes stops at Algiers, Naples, Venice and Constantinople. At each landing there will be attractions for the amusement of the patrons of the Mareorama, and these features will be characteristic of the places stopped at and the landings at each place will be marked with some lively scenes as above described. The maneuvers of dropping the anchor, putting out a gang plank and in some instances the launching of a boat will be gone through with great accuracy and faithfulness of detail, as well as other episodic spectacles by numerous actors. When Naples is reached myriads of small boats appear, containing natives, who offer for sale fruit and trinkets and at the command of the officer some of them will execute the famous tarentella. Further on Arabs and Almees will entertain the voyagers. The incidents en route will be varied and interesting, including a meeting with a naval squadron, a sunrise at sea, ship on fire and rescue of the crew and other effects. The mechanical portion will also be interesting. The ship will be in a tank, which is floating within another tank, and the rocking motion will be given from the outside by means of pistons. The pivots on which the deck works are arranged in a circle and are controlled by means of levers from the bridge. This machinery will make the boat roll and pitch exactly as if it were in the trough of the sea. The illusion created by these movements, combined with the brilliant light effects and the moving panorama on either side, will be enhanced by the breeze fraught with salt water which will sweep the decks. The ceiling of the panorama will be arched, to appear to the eye just as the sky does. Upon this ceiling the sun will rise and set, the moon and the stars will appear and even the clouds and lightning are to be reproduced in the storm scene, which will represent every feature of a furious tempest at sea, minus only the danger. Passengers who cannot stand the movements on deck can go below into a cabin at the center of the boat, where the motion is but slightly felt, and can see the panorama through the portholes on either side.

The sea breeze will be furnished by huge ventilators, and the air passing first through a layer of varech or seaweed will be impregnated with the fragrance of the ocean winds.

ON THE DECK OF THE MAREORAMA.

Founded on Tobacco.

Since so many of the wise have declared it less injurious to smoke a pipe than a cigar or the insidious cigarette, pipes are growing in popularity. There is a club about to form in Philadelphia which will permit its members to smoke pipes only. Every week a meeting will be held, and new brands of tobacco will be discussed, and the merits of this or that mixture will be considered. Those who have taken the matter in hand declare that in less than a year the clubroom will be fitted up with pipes from every quarter of the globe, and the rooms will not only be a cozy comfort, but will be of great historical value. Several of the proposed members have collections of pipes in their possession at present which will form the nucleus of the new club's collection. The person who at the end of the first month submits the most readable and valuable essay on pipe-smoking and tobacco will be chosen president. This competition will be open to all.

The World's Tunnels.

If all the tunnels of the world were placed end to end, they would reach a distance of 514 miles. They number about 1,142.

The little good poetry in the world has resulted in a flood of doggeral that creates the suspicion that every man and woman on earth believes that he or she is a genius.

INFLUENZA.

Nature and Symptoms of the Grip and Its Treatment.

Influenza, or the grip, is an acute infectious fever which usually occurs in widespread epidemics. It travels, as cholera formerly did, in waves over the world, running generally from the east to the west. It attacks a very large proportion of the population, especially at the beginning of an epidemic; then in recurrent years it seizes upon those who have previously escaped, and the epidemic does not finally die out until nearly every one has suffered its miseries.

Medical writers usually distinguish three forms of influenza, according as the nervous, the digestive, or the catarrhal symptoms predominate; but all constitute one and the same disease, and one form may easily pass into another in the course of the same attack.

In a typical case influenza begins suddenly with a general ill feeling, headache, pains in the muscles and in the back, loss of appetite, and a sense of extreme weakness. There may be a hard chill, or a succession of slight chills, or a general chilly sensation, and soon a high fever declares itself.

The eyes are often congested and sensitive to light, the nose runs, there is pain at the root of the nose and over the eyes, and all the symptoms of a severe cold in the head are experienced. The tongue is heavily coated, swallowing is difficult or painful, and the voice is hoarse or whispering. Often there is more or less jaundice. The pulse is very rapid and weak, especially when the patient stands.

A peculiar symptom in influenza, one that often serves to distinguish it sharply from an ordinary cold, is a marked depression of spirits; the patient is plunged in despair, and no amount of argument or raillery has any effect on his misery. In some severe cases of the so-called nervous form of the disease this melancholy is so extreme as to lead to attempts at suicide.

In the gastric form of influenza we find a loathing for food, nausea and vomiting, and severe bowel troubles. In the respiratory forms, bronchitis and especially pneumonia are frequent and dangerous complications.

In the treatment of grip we must first remember that we are dealing with no ordinary cold, but with a severe disease calling for as much care as scarlet fever or pneumonia. The patient must not only stay in the house but in bed. All cases of grip, whether mild or severe, need a physician's oversight.—Youth's Companion.

WILL LEAD THE LIBERALS.

The Party of Gladstone Has a New and Very Mediocre Head.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the new leader of the Liberals in the British House of Commons, is a very ordinary individual so far as talent and political ability are concerned. He has been thirty years in Parliament, has served as Secretary of War, Secretary of the Navy and Secretary of Ireland, to use American terms, and yet has never made the slightest impression as an executive, as a statute writer or as an orator. His father was a rich Scotch merchant, who sat for the universities of Glasgow and Aberdeen, but had never entered either. The son, with a Cambridge degree, became a pet of Mr. Gladstone, who held the father in strong friendship; and one of the Bannermans of Manchester, an uncle on the mother's side, bequeathed the nephew a fortune and a name. He had everything in his favor—education, leisure, freedom from cark and care, ambition even, connection with the Ashburnhams, marriage into the family of Gen. Bruce, inherited opinions long detached from need of defense, and Gladstone for a patron, yet all that even the precincts of Westminster know of the announced leader-elect of the minority in the House of Commons is that he has held various offices, and that he is "safe."

Solomon was so busy prescribing advice that he probably hadn't time to take much of it.

LABRADOR'S QUEER FOLK.

The White Men Who Live There of Their Own Choice.

It seems strange that with freedom to come and go civilized men should choose to dwell in a region so terribly bleak and sterile as Labrador. Yet of the 8,700 inhabitants of that great peninsular, 3,000 are of the white or mixed race. They mainly are descendants of English sailors, some of whom were shipwrecked and more of whom probably left their ships without leave. Finding themselves stranded on this lonely shore, they made the best of their lot, marrying Eskimo wives and living after the manner of the country. In later times some Newfoundlanders chose rather to settle in Labrador than make the uncomfortable trips to and fro yearly from St. John's for the annual codfishing off the Labrador shores. These brought their wives and children with them and introduced a new strain of civilized life.

All of these people live in little settlements strung along the coast, on islands or in fiords, from Battle Harbor south to the Gulf of St. Lawrence. They dwell in houses of stone or logs. In winter they wear hooded fur garments like the Eskimos; in summer the ordinary garb of Newfoundland fishermen. The women dress in gray or blue woollen stuff, with a gaudy gown for best. On their heads they wear a knit hood or a bright-colored handkerchief, and, it may be, at out-of-door work or abroad on the water, a man's sou'wester.

Against the walls in their houses are pasted such pictures as they have been able to clip from the few newspapers that fall in their way, advertising lithographs that have come with goods to the trading stores, and pictures of thes ort issued by tract societies. On the table or shelf in the living room is always a Bible, religiously read on Sunday when the cod are not biting or a fare of fish to be dressed and flaked. It is a devout and sober-minded community, that of the whites along the coast of Labrador. Their religious ministrations are provided by the Moravians, who have several missions in Labrador; their temperance is assured by stringent laws forbidding the landing of any liquors in Labrador, and these are made effective by a thorough patrol by the Dominion revenue steamships, which deal inexorably with smugglers of strong water.

Horses Suffer from Catarrh.

Horses are very subject to nasal catarrh, and it is a widely prevalent belief among coachmen that if a horse goes into a fresh stable, and especially if a horse which has been out at grass goes into a stable with other horses, it will be most likely to develop a cold. So, too, it is noticed, will horses bought at a fair, and this is popularly attributed to the draughts to which they have been exposed. As it is admitted, however, that any other horses which may have been in the stable generally catch this cold from the newcomer, surely it is more reasonable to suppose that the latter has in like manner received the infection from some of its neighbors while on sale. A medical friend of the writer's lately made an interesting experiment. He has two horses, and has been in the habit of turning one out for the summer months. When he brought it in again for the winter it used invariably to develop a severe cold. Coachmen will tell you that this is due to the unaccustomed warmth of the stable, which makes the animal "nesh." Last year, however, before bringing in his horse, the doctor had his stable thoroughly disinfected and lime-washed, and put no other horse into it. The one which came in from grass then remained perfectly free from any symptoms of catarrh.—London Spectator.

Many Murder Penalties.

Here are some of the ways in which society rids itself of those whose existence has become a menace to its safety:

In Austria all the executions are public and by the gallows. In Bavaria they still use the guillotine, but its work is performed in private. In Brunswick the axe is employed, just as it was in the Middle Ages, though with this difference, the public is excluded. In China, sword or cord, public; Denmark, guillotine, public; Ecuador, musket, public; France, guillotine, public; Great Britain, guillotine, private; Italy, capital punishment abolished; Netherlands, gallows, public; Oldenburg, musket, public; Portugal, gallows, public; Prussia, sword, private; Russia, musket, gallows or sword, public; Saxony, guillotine, private; Spain, garrote, public; Switzerland, fifteen cantons, sword; public; two cantons, guillotine, private; two cantons, guillotine, public; United States, other than New York, gallows, mostly private.—Philadelphia Press.

Cabby's Revenge.

A stipendiary magistrate in a town in Yorkshire who was not given to err on the side of leniency, once had before him a cab driver who was charged with furious driving. After some severe comments on the man's conduct a heavy fine was imposed.

A few days after the trial, the magistrate, who had been detained rather longer than usual in the court, was hurrying along to catch his train, when, seeing an empty cab handy, he hailed the driver and directed him to proceed to the station, telling him that he was pressed for time. The driver, however, heedless of the hint, kept to a very gentle trot.

"I say, I say, my man," exclaimed the fare, with his head out of the window, "drive faster than this."

"It can't be done, sir," replied the driver. "Ye see, if we drives faster we're had up afore the beak, and we gets fined; so we has to be careful."

He did not alter his pace and neither did the "beak" catch the train.—London Titbits.

The Death Rate of Babies.

Only four and one-half per cent of the babies born annually live to the end of the alloted three score years and ten of man's existence. Yet of the other ninety-five and one half per cent, nearly 20 per cent. die unnecessarily. The facts came out in a paper on "Unnatural Death," read at the recent meeting of the Sanitary Institute of England.

The author told his harers that about one million babies were born annually in England. Thirty thousand of the million would die violent deaths from accident, 30,000 would die unnecessarily from tuberculosis and 120,000 more from other absolutely preventable causes, such as small-pox, measles and scarlet fever.

Only 45,000 would be allowed to live out their natural lives, and nearly one in twenty would die because the machine was worn out. One-fourth of all the diseases which destroy life are absolutely preventable, and fifteen years would at once be added to its average duration if the practice of hygiene were placed on a level with its theory.

Dr. Hill attributed the greater number of the diseases over which the individuals affected by them have personal control to mistakes in eating and drinking.

THE DRAMA IN ANAM.

It is Taken Seriously and is Designed to Instruct.

In Anam, as in China, the drama is taken very seriously, and is designed to give instruction to the ignorant, who are unable to write or read. Virtue triumphant is the customary conclusion of a play; the virtue of the east, be it understood, which is frequently regarded as vice in the west. According to their lights, however, the Anamite theatrical productions are eminently respectable and praiseworthy, and they are watched with great attention by the spectators, who are always admitted gratis to the entertainments. As in India, an Anamite play may continue uninterruptedly for several days, and the actors, as they become tired, are replaced by another set, who carry on the same story to its long-drawn-out conclusion. To European ideas the Anamite play would seem nothing but a monotonous and dreary infliction. Elocution, for example, is represented by noisy, screaming and unmodulated vociferations; the costumes are ragged and unrepresentative, and there is no thought of letting down a curtain when the scenes require to be shifted.

The actors, who begin their performance by bowing before the spectators, salute and curtsey every time they cross the stage, and the prompter runs after them wherever they go. Sea voyages are represented upon the Anam stage by an individual who pulls an oar, and he may show horseback by a trotting action accompanied with the cracking of a whip. Heroic deeds are cried out in a stentorian voice, and comical things are said in a low tone. Combats are simulated by contortions and mock struggles, and the actors who are not playing quietly await their turn at the back of the stage near the orchestra and in view of the audience. The author of an Anamite play is so little considered that he does not sign it, and no acknowledgment of him is made by the audience should the play prove a success. Women do not play in Anam, but form a special corps of singers who assist by their voices to swell the general vociferation.

Fish Saved His Life.

George Wilcox owns a farm near the junction of the Tioughnioga and Chenango rivers, and has a spot in the stream which passes his place that he guards carefully. It contains a large black bass that once saved his life. Wilcox found the fish living near the hole it still occupies.

He fed it bread crumbs and at last it learned to come to the surface for its food when he whistled. One day Wilcox was entertaining a party of friends at his farm, and they decided to take a swim as they did when boys. The party had been in the water a short time, when they noticed the fish swimming about peculiarly. It hovered over one spot, frantically diving, and then leaping from the surface of the water, as though in distress.

One of the party peered into the crystal depths and saw Wilcox lying on the bottom. He was at once brought to the surface, but it required fifteen minutes to restore him. He had not been missed, and had it not been for the fish, death would have been inevitable.—New York Press.

As It May Be.

Father of the Girl—My dear young man, I have called to ask you if you would accept the hand of my daughter.

Young Man—Indeed!

Girl's Father—Yes, sir. I have reason to believe that she cares for you, and I know you can make her happy.

Young Man—What are your prospects?

Girl's Father—I am sixty-five years old, and have the gout, that may take me off at any time, I own 300 shares of the Sure Thing copper mine and an equal number in the Bustville Railway. I am worth a quarter of a million. Do you have confidence in me?

Young Man—Well, this is sudden, but I will think it over. Come around Tuesday some time between 10 and 10:30 and I will give you my answer.

Girl's Father—Very well, sir. Good morning.

Young Man—Good morning.—Detroit Free Press.

Practical Philanthropy.

A young Philadelphian went to a millionaire friend and asked pecuniary aid to start him in business. "Do you drink?" asked the millionaire. "Once in a while." "Stop it! Stop it! Stop it for a year, and then come and see me." The young man broke off the habit at once, and at the end of the year came to see the millionaire again. "Do you smoke?" asked the successful man. "Now and then." "Stop it! Stop it for a year, then come and see me again." The young man stopped smoking, but he did not go back again. "He'd have told me," he said, "that now that I have stopped drinking and smoking I must have saved enough to start myself in business, and I have."—San Francisco Wave.

A Long Head of Hair.

The woman who possesses the longest head of hair in the world is said to be Mercedes Lopez, a Mexican. Her height is five feet, and when she stands erect her hair trails on the ground four feet eight inches. The hair is so thick that she can completely hide herself in it. She has it cut very frequently, as it grows so quickly, enabling her to sell large tresses to hair dealers every month. She is the wife of a poor sheep herder

AUBURN WEEKLY COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....MARCH 9, 1899.

The Right Ring.

We have a letter from our old-time friend and fellow worker, Dr. James W Squires of Churubusco, that has the right ring to it. After detailing how he and the editor differed widely as to political matters, and yet have always been friends of the closest kind. Now, since the Spanish and Philippine wars have been the subject of discussion, he is highly pleased with the course the COURIER has taken, and especially what we said in regard to the foolish and unpatriotic actions of congressmen, in both houses, and in both parties, as to the almost criminal delay in taking action on the treaty. After quoting our item, he adds:

"Mr. Barns, I taught my first term of school under you and I appreciate your efforts then in behalf of the schools of DeKalb county. I have appreciated you as a man ever since. But I appreciate you now as American citizen. Had all the editors Congressmen and Senators and demagogues taken this stand from the first there would be no trouble now in the Philippines; many lives would have been saved and millions in money. Three cheers for the United States flag, the United States Government, the U. S Army and Navy and for J. A. Barns. I have two sons in Cuba and a third in the service, now at Anniston, Alabama."

We feel very grateful to the Doctor for these kind words, and pleased at the patriotic sentiments which go with them, and for a liberal sum on subscription. For the Doctor, and all his brothers, have always been paying readers of the COURIER. Altogether, we repeat, this letter has the right ring to it.

The Beautiful Snow.

The heaviest snow fall of the year came on Saturday night after a drizzly rain. Saturday morning it lay on the ground about ten inches deep on an average. But the wind, which must have blown from nearly every point of the compass, had driven it against the windows on every side of the houses, and drifted the same way. Being somewhat damp, made the labor of clearing the walks a heavy one. Fortunately the snow plow was brought out and run along the principal sidewalks, and enabled people to get about But teams had hard work and the wagon wheels filled full between the spokes and made a heavy load to carry. But it was a genuine sugar snow, and will also do a world of good to the suffering wheat and young grasses and clover. After all, it was the best thing that could have happened, and as for mud, it cannot get much worse than it was.

Fell in the Snow.

Charlie Reed who lives with his brother in the residence on North Van Buren that was built by Sam Buss just before he moved to Chicago, is subject to fits, and this morning while going along the street was taken with a fit and fell over into the deep snow, and must have had quite a struggle. John Blany found him lying there in bad shape, and he and two of the Greenbergs who live at the same place, dug him out of the snow and carried him home. He was perfectly limp and helpless and his clothes filled with snow. He would likely have perished had he not soon discovered.

Commissioners.

The Board put in a day's work yesterday confirming the incorporation of St. Joe, which is now an incorporated town, and can proceed to organize a town government the same as in Auburn, Waterloo and Butler. The rest of the day was taken up with the regular routine work of looking over all accounts of the various county officers Today is to be given to settlements with trustees, if they come in, which they do not always do. Tomorrow is the day for considering liquor licenses. We are told there is to be the same fight in Richland township as before.

C. S. Stoy Dead

Ott Baxter came over from Butler this morning and brought word that C. S. Stoy died this morning in a hospital at Indianapolis. He had been for some time troubled with an abscess on the brain and this we believe caused his death. He had been at Indianapolis since Mr. Spencer became State Pension agent, Mr. Stoy being a clerk in the office. The funeral will be at the Butler on Wednesday March 8 under the auspices of the K. P. order of which he was a member.

Pneumonia

COURT NEWS.

Work began early Monday forenoon, Judge Hartman taking up such cases as were ready. Milo Husselman is court room bailiff and calls the court and dismisses it like a veteran of two wars. G. W. Maxwell of Corunna is grand jury bailing and knows right where to take hold. But few attorneys were present, this first day. Ott Baxter of Butler, W. H. Leas, C. M. Phillips, Cen. Blair and Wm. XX McDonald of Waterloo, and Gengler and Mountz of Garrett. The grand jury is at work. They are: S. R. Rickel, Darius Haag, Elijah Saylor, H. W. Magginnis, B. F. Cornelius, and J. R. Shilling.

Other attorneys here are Shuman of Angola, Sharpless and Baker of Garrett, and last but not least, "Yankee Bill Myers" of Leo, who had a case here today. Judge Hartman instructed the grand jury and appointed B. F. Cornelius their foreman.

A great many cases have been called up and motions heard, etc, and some have been disposed of.

In the case of Mason vs J. M. Hook and others, a judgment was rendered against the latter for $359 94.

The case of Sheets vs Rader has been called up, but not finished.

– Surveyor Krontz vs the Board of Commissioners was called up and then left off the docket by agreement. It may be called up again by either party.

The case of Partridge vs Hirsch has been dismissed.

The case of Barnet vs Tilden Purdy has been dismissed, as it appears the plaintiff's present residence is unknown and she has not appeared to prosecute the case.

The divorce case of Esther vs Ed. Smith has been dismissed at her cost.

The case against Bass, the receiver of the Consolidated Railway Company of Fort Wayne has been called up. Barrett and Morris have added Judge Roby to be their assistant. The plaintiff is represented by Judge Colerick

In the McCurley divorce case, he defaulted and we presume she will get a divorce.

In the attachment case of Mrs. pfefferl vs Small, the latter defaulted, as he did also in an attachment case brought against him by G. A. Bishop and H. P. Stroh.

Vernier's $10,000 damage suit against editor Higley has been stricken off the docket at Vernier's request, so he can file a new one. We do not believe he is serious about filing a new one. It looks as if the matter would drop.

Susana Evans wished to have Archibald Evans declared of unsound mind. But since the case was filed, he has died. That ends it.

J. F. Housel gets judgment against M. F. Shutt of $684.04.

Durfee vs Stroh to correct a return of an order of sale, came up yesterday. Roby as attorney for defendant asked to have others made defendant. It is set for March 20.

Barbara Miller asks a divorce and an allowance from her husband John E. Miller, will be tried soon.

The grand jury is investigating the Garrett murder case. They are an earnest set of men, and have been complimented several times since their meeting on Monday. Their names are B. F. Cornelius, Darius Haag, J. R. Shilling, H. W. Magginis, S. R. Rickel and Eglijah Saylor.

BUTLER.

About 15 inches of snow last Sunday, falling on a sea of mud effectually "tied up," Sunday exercises at the churches. It was about impossible to make a move without shoveling a road ahead as one proceded.

The latest word from our former well known Townsman, C. S. Stoy was that he was alive and that was about all.

Edward W. Fosdich, at this writing (Monday morning) is still alive, but gradually growing weaker with no hopes of his recovery.

Frank Bills another of our old citizen is gradually nearing the shores of the dark river.

W. L. Blair and family have all been suffering from severe colds and effects of the grip.

One of Butler's popular young ladies was entertaining her best fellow in the parlor a few evenings since while the lady of the house was busied in an adjoining room with the little daughter. The fire in the stove in the parlor snapped unusually loud, when, the little one exclaimed, "Oh, Ma he is popping the question." The young man was sensibly embarassed.

Mrs. J. A. Campbell, has been trying a tackle with the grip the past week.

The meeting at the U. B. church continues in interest and several additions to the church has been made.

An Opera Company, held the boards at the old opera house all of last week playing generally to empty benches.

The wife of Rev. Dustman of the Lutheran church was buried Thursday. A Rev. gentleman from Middleburg, Ind., presided at the funeral.

Successful New Telephone.

M. Dusand of Geneva has sent the Paris Academy of Sciences a description of a new telephone with which he has successfully experimented. From a distant laboratory he was able to send messages that could be distinctly heard in a large room by an audience of 1,000 people.

Samuel Grosh Dead

Our people were surprised yesterday morning to hear of the sudden death of Samuel Grosh for it had not been known that he was sick. He died about one o'clock in night. The funeral will be at the M. E. church tomorrow, at 11 a. m. and interment in Woodlawn.

The County Council

Any county officer, including the commissioners who shall incur a debt or expense on behalf of the county, for any sum in excess of the amount that had been appreciated in that department shall be liable on his bond to any person injured thereby, and shall be fined not more than $1000 and imprisoned in the county jail not more than six month The same restrictions are on the court.

No judgment against the county can be enforced, except out of money already appropriated. But in case of such judgment, the county council may be compelled by mandamus to meet and vote the necessary tax to raise money to pay it.

The county council cannot appropriate money for any other purposes than those provided for in other laws than this, except the amounts this law provides as pay for members of the council.

On the first day of each month, the treasurer shall report to the auditor the amounts of money collected by him during the preceding month. And such part of the money, as belongs to the county, shall be avaible for use in paying the county expenses.

The county commissioners must settle with the treasurer in January of each year.

The county council has power to borrow money for the use of the county, but not to exceed 2 per cent of the assessment of the county. But no bonds may be used to pay current expenses. Bonds or orders draw 6 per cent.

The council and not the commissioners, make the tax rates of the levy each year.

Hereafter, the commissioners cannot allow pay for things voluntarily furnished, and they will have no power to pay anything for the relief of any poor person, unless he is an inmate of the poor farm. Nor can they pay for medical services for any poor person who is not in the county poor house. And they cannot pay any per diem or mileage to justices, for making such reports as are required of them by law. And they cannot pay for the dockets or other supplies used by justices.

No sale of real estate, or purchase of any, of the value of $1000 or more shall be made by any officer, except the commissioners.

Each county officer shall prepare a written statement of any supplies or materials he may need and present the same to the council and the Board of Commissioners shall prepare on Tuesday after the first Monday in October a list of all the things so reported as needed by the county. Then they must advertise in two papers of opposite politics, and then let to the lowest responsible bidder. (It will be seen from this clause, that great care has been taken, that bids for printers' supplies and work, may go to Indianapo- and other outside parties and the home printer be left sucking his thumb. And all notices published are to be "brief", which means that the printer will get but a trifle out of them.)

All bills against the county must be itemized and each county officer must, when his part of the goods reach him, check off the items to see if he is getting all his bill calls for. And even then, the commissioners must satisfy themselves that every item claimed in the bill has been delivered. (This clause is aimed to stop cases like that when Stroh O. K'd a bill of $12 for a docket he never received)

The county surveyor, or any engineer or or superintendent of work done for the county, must certify that such work has been actually done.

In case the county sells bonds, the auditor must give notice of the amount and of the indebtedness of the county, and the amount of its assessment.

When bids are to be made, the auditor furnishes blanks for use of the bidders. And no varitation from this printed form will be permitted.

All warrants drawn to pay for any salary, any service, or any article shall be drawn against that fund appropriated for this purpose and no other,

Any money paid out contrary to these provisions may be recovered by the county.

(As we understand the new law the the judge of the circuit court will appoint the first set of county councilmen, this summer, after the law goes into affect, and these seven men will act until their successors are elected at the election in November 1900. The Judge also fills any vacancy that may occur.)

The county commissioners are to have a regular session the first Monday in each month.

NOTE: We see in looking over our synopsis of this new law, that we said in the first paragraph "six" councilmanic districts It should have read "four" as that is the number in the law These four with the three at large will make the entire council seven, instead of nine as we had it.

First Weather Prophecy.

The first attempt at scientific forecasting of the weather was the result of a storm which during the Crimean war, November 14, 1854, almost destroyed the fleets of France and England. As a storm had raged several days earlier in France, investigations were made, which showed that the two were in reality one storm, and that its path could have been ascertained and the fleet forewarned in ample time to reach safety.

From an Ohio Minister.

I have used Dr. Warner's White Wine of Tar Syrup for sore throat, weak lungs, coughs and colds; it surpasses all other remedies I have tried. With many thanks to the doctor for his valuable remedy, I remain.

CLUB NOTES.

The L. L. C. met with Mrs. Tillie McCord last Saturday. It was the third Guest Day of this club for the year, and the last on the printed program.

The weather was very disagreeable, but notwithstanding that fact nearly every member and guest was on hand, about sixty ladies being present. The session was opened by the President, Mrs. Willis. The secretary called the roll to which every member gave in response, a quotation from Riley. This was an entertaining part of the program, the quotations embracing as they did, all grades of emotion, from grave to gay, from Riley ideas of higher philosophy to his "Cure for Corns." This was followed by the only paper for the afternoon by Mrs Nellie Hartman late of Auburn, but now of Roann, who still retains her membership in the club and expects to give the work assigned her by the committee. This paper was entitled, "An Original Story." Visions of tragedies, of bloodcurdling adventures, of hairbreadth escapes, or thrilling love-scenes, a la The Duchess floated before the minds of those present as the title was announced but instead came the sweetly told tale of every day life, of the removal from the old home of childhood to a new one among entire strangers, the "tearing up" as the writer expressed it. "In more senses than one," the "settling down," the severing of social ties, and the forming of new ones. The descriptions of the new surroundings, and the new neighbors were all told in a bright, chatty style, that left no doubt in the minds of the hearers, that it was indeed an Original Story, and one from a page in the life of the writer. All felt pleased with the breezy little "story."

The next exercise was a "Dictionary Test" which was in charge of Miss Lilly McTighe. She gave a list of twenty words to each member and to such guests as would take part; each one was asked to write opposite the words the definition, and synonyms, as she in her judgment might think was right. After a certain length of time these slips were taken up and the coerect list of definitions read by Miss McTighe. The surprise of the ladies, when they discovered that many of these words had definitions they never dreamed of, created a great deal of amusement. Miss McTighe asked all that had ten of the twenty, correct to rise, about a dozen did so She asked how many had eleven, five or six responded. "How many had twelve." The writer recalls four as responding. Mrs. Garwood, Mrs. Schasb, Mrs Ford and Mrs. Barns. Pineapple sherbet and maccaroons were served by the ladies who had asked the privilege of entertaining the members and their guests that day. They were Mrs. Tillie McCord, Mrs. Ford and Mrs Barns assisted by Mrs Guild who had been invited to help. After the current events the club adjourned to meet with Mrs. Mollie Robbins on next Saturday. The members and guests parted with regret, for although all was dark and dreary without, within was warmth jollity and good cheer. The pleasant rooms were in direct contrast with the outside world, and made all loath to leave their cheery influence.

The Reading Club met with Mrs. Barns on Thursday of last week. The session was mostly of a business nature, although the social part was not neglected.

The business of the Art Loan was finished up, and the ladies were indeed pleased to be able to hand over to the treasurer of the Auburn Military Band, the neat sum of $123 09. Resolutions were passed thanking all who had so willingly and cheerfully helped in this noble enterprise. Election of officers for the new year then took place, resulting as follows: President, Mrs. Dr Buchtel; Vice President, Mrs. Tillie McCord; Secretary, Mrs. Rose Shull; Treasurer, Mrs. C. H. Yesbera; Critic, Mrs. J. A. Barns. The club will meet with Mrs. Zent next Wednesday afternoon, at which time the reading of the book, "When Knighthood was in Flower" will be resumed Miss Nelle Jones of Reading, Mich., was a welcome visitor.

The Up-to-date Club held a very pleasant meeting with Lizzie Snell on South Main-st., Friday evening. Games of different kinds, more especially fortune-telling was the leading feature of the evening's entertainment Great sport was enjoyed with "Planchette." A delicious lunch was served in three courses. The club will meet with Leah Little next Friday evening.

We have learned that a new club has been organized in our town, and been named the "M. M's." Translated it means "The Merry Maids." Miss Helen Ralston entertained them last Monday evening, although not a member They report a very enjoyable evening.

The Culture Club met with Mrs. Shaffer. In answer to roll call each one was to give an original response. All were good, but the one by Mrs. Trout is too good to pass by so we give it.

An original response is wanted,
And from me it will have to be granted;
For too many duties we cannot shirk,
And my name is on the list now for back work.

But if today you will refrain,
From off that list to call my name;
An effort I will make ne'er again to ask
To be excused from future tasks.

And will be prepared one week from today,
If nothing prevents me I will also say,
And promise also present to be,
For if you remember, the Club meets with me.

The lesson was conducted by Mrs. Raitt. The lesson in German literature treated on the works of Lessing, Wieland, Goethe, Herder, Schiller and other prominent authors of that time. A prize was given by the leader to the one having the best prepared lesson, and it was voted to Mrs. John Hebel. After the lesson, a reading was given by Mrs. Shaffer, "The Old Log Cabin" by Daniel Webster. Mrs. Sophia Hebel gave a sketch of Alice Cary. This told of her life work, also gave her last work which was written on her death bed. A light lunch was served, after which the club adjourned to meet in one week with Mrs. Trout.

This club is doing excellent work and every lesson furnishes a surprise, and those of the members who absent themselves do not know what they are miseing.

Birthday Anniversary.

I suppose one of the most pleasant occasions during the life of Susannah Eckert of Fairfield township, occurred at her home March 4. Widow Eckert was not married on that date, and I suppose has no anticipations, how is that mother Eckert? ha, ha, ha. No it wasn't a marriage, but a birthday party. Mother Eckert was seventy years old on the above date, and though she has arrived at the three score years and ten, yet she prepared with her own hands as good a dinner as I ever ate, or as good as any body else ever ate

Quite a number of the old neighbors were present, several others invited who could not attend on account of muddy roads. Among those present were: Adam Weirich and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Crossley, Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester Shumaker, Grandma Chnesmith from Clay Center, Kansas, Mrs. Emma Helwig, Mr. Andrew Smith, besides two brothers of Mother Eckert viz Messrs Eli and Andrew Cox and their wives. Mr. Eli Cox is in his seventy fourth year and Mr. Andrew Cox in his sixty-fifth year. There were quite a number of other friends and relatives present among whom were Miss Nettie Dillman, Miss Maud Shumaker, five grandchildren and the two sons and their wives viz, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Eckert and Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Eckert. After dinner a portion of Scripture was read and prayer offered by Rev. E E. Campbell, Mother Eckert's pastor, After singing "There is a fountain filled with blood," Mother Eckert made a few remarks thanking her old neighbors for their kindness during the past years, of help in sickness sorrow and death in her family intimating that she had been surprised at their exceeding neighborly spirits, to which it was remarked that Mother Eckert proved a good neighbor herself and thus has good neighbors. Mother Eckert has had an unusual amount of trouble during her life, but wisely determined not to let any trouble ride through her brain without paying its fare and in spite of many troubles she is a cheerful old lady, devoted to her church, consecrated to the Master's work, whose presence is a benediction to her friends and relatives May the blessings which now attend her continue till called from earth to glory.

An Innovation in Sleeping Car Service Introduced by the Baltimo & Ohio Railroad.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad has introduced a new feature in its sleeping car service on through trains between Newark, Ohio, and Baltimore, Md., and Chicago and Pittsburg, in augurating what will be known as the "Ordinary sleeping cars in addition to the regular Standard sleeping cars.

One of these cars will be attached to No. 8 leaving Newark at 10:22 a. m. next day.

Also on train No. leaving Chicago at 3:30 p. m arriving Pittsburg at 6:40 a. m. (Central Time), and returning on train No. 5 leaving Pittsburg at 7:20 p. m, arriving Chicago at 10 00 a. m.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad is the first line to introduce this service in the eastern territory for special accommodation of the traveling puplic. In these "Ordinary" sleepers the Pullman rate is reduced one-half, so that passengers have the choice of paying the higher Pullman rate and occupying Standard car or take advantage of the cheaper rate and occupy the "Ordinary" sleeper. These latter cars are available to passengers holding either first or second class tickets.

These sleepers are new, have been especially constructed for this service and differ from the Standard sleeping cars only being less elaborately furnished. The seats are upholstered in rattan, and the sleeping berths, when made up, have all the comforts and conveniences of the Standard case.

OBITUARY.

Chester O. son of George M. and Cora E. Ditmars, was born near Auburn Ind., Oct. 7, 1895, and departed this life March 2, 1899, at the early age of 3 years, 4 monts and 25 days. Little Chester had always been a great sufferer and all that loving parents and kind friends could do, was of no avail.

God created him in His own image, loviest of His works,
A casket in which to enshrine a precious jewel;
An immortal soul:
And now in His own good time He has come,
And broken the casket of clay, and hidden His treasure
In His own bosom where it shall dwell forever more.

Little Chester leaves to mourn his death, a father, mother, a little brother, four grandparents, besides a host of friends. Their sorrow cannot be measured in words and they will have the deepest sympathy of all in their great affliction which has come upon them. Cherished son, loved brother and dearest grandchild, we now say to thee good by.

There is no flock however well attended,
But one dead lamb is there;
There is no fireside however well defended.
But has one vacant chair.

The funeral service was conducted from the home, one mile and a half south of Auburn, Sabbath. at 2 p. m. Interment took place in Woodlawn cemetery. J. D. Brosy officiating.

OBITUARY

Esther Fretz, nee Showalter, was born August 20, 1833, in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, and died March 1, 1899, at the old homestead near Sedan, DeKalb county, Indiana, aged 65 years, 6 months and 11 days.

When about seventeen years of age she yielded her heart to Christ and united with the church of God, of which she remained a consistent member until the Lord called her from labor to reward. She was joined in marriage to Christian Fretz, March 29, 1853. On April 20, 1862, this union was suddenly broken by the death of her husband, leaving the care of a family of five small children entirely upon her. Her husband preceded her to the spirit world thirty seven years ago, since which she has remained a widow. She leaves four sons, an only daughter and seventeen grand children to follow her to her resting place from that sacred home where, since 1853, she has wrought a life history of unusual strength, perfect fidelity to womanly principles and great grace. Funeral services were held at the U. B, church at Shower's Corners, Rev. Butler and Moorman officiating.

OBITUARY

—Mrs. Daisy L. Welch Frick was born in DeKalb county, Indiana, June 30, 1876. Died in Auburn, Indian, March 1, 1899, aged 22 years, 6 months and one day. She was the daughter of C. C. and Sarah C. Welch, one of a family of six children. She resided with her parents until April 30, 1896, when she was married to Clarence Frick. One child was born to them, who with her husband, parents, four sisters and one brother, still survive. At the age of fifteen she joined the Christian church and maintained her relations until three weeks since, when under the ministrations of Rev. Brosy, who kindly gave her the comforts of his pastoral calls in Auburn, where she had resided for the past two years, she and her husband joined the Lutheran church. She died in the full faith of the Christian religion. Her illness was of a lingering nature, during which she has been a patient sufferer. Funeral services were held by Revs. Brosy and Butler, in the U. B. church at Waterloo, where the worn body was tenderly buried by many friends.

OBITUARY

Samuel Grosh was born near Shelby, Richland County Ohio, Dec. 9, 1844, and on May 5, 1870, he was united in marriage with Isabelle Updike. To this union were born four children; Lillian, Leonard, Perry and Nellie. In 1880 he united with the M. E. church at Auburn of which he remained a faithful member until death called him to be with his Saviour, whom he had served. Mr. Grosh was for a long time connected with the south end flouring mill. He was always an industrious man, always found busy, but never too busy to lend a helping hand to the needy, and never to busy too welcome people to his home. And many children came and shed tears over his remains. He was the children's friend. The funeral was at the M. E. church March 7, conducted by the pastor, Rev. T. M. Guild and interment in Woodlawn.

An Unconscious Joker.

A little girl in the Punxsutawney public schools, when asked by her teacher what town in Pennsylvania was chiefly noted for its slate industry (referring to Slatington), surprised the amiable pedagogue by answering: "Harrisburg." "No, no," said the teacher, laughing; "how did you get that idea?" "Why," answered the bright little pupil, "I heard papa say that Quay, Martin and Magee were the great slate makers, and that the slates were made in Harrisburg."—Punxsutawney Spirit.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

A REPUBLICAN ON M'KINLEY.

In paying his compliments to the President in the House of Representatives, Mr. Johnson, a Republican from Indiana, explained that it mattered not to him whether his views were popular. He was only concerned as to whether they were right. Mr. Johnson says that the leading Republican newspapers, instead of fiercely attacking Secretary of War Alger, should "lay their ax to the root of the evil and censure the gentleman who, to reward him for his political services and disbursements in the campaign of 1896, appointed him to his present position and has maintained him there ever since, notwithstanding his incompetency and against the righteous complaints that have been made against him."

With regard to the famous Boston speech, Mr. Johnson thinks it the most disingenuous that ever fell from the lips of an American President. "This address," he said, "divested of its verbiage, considered apart from its platitudes and the ostentatious profession of virtue with which it was interladen, was nothing more or less than a carefully devised and studious misstatement of the issue between the chief executive and those of his own party who are opposed to his wretched policy in the Philippines."

Having compared the President with Mr. Pecksniff, who was accustomed to roll his eyes piously to heaven and exclaim, with great ostentation, "My friends, let us be moral," and who was the father of two daughters, one of whom he named Charity and the other Mercy, Mr. Johnson addressed himself to the "open door." He said:

"What else is upon the program of these gentlemen? The open door in the Philippines, making it totally impossible forever to discriminate in tariff duties there in favor of the products of the American farm and the American shop. What is the other sacrifice that is required? That the annexation of Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines, absolutely sure to come at an early day, for they have registered it in their vows, shall precipitate the sugar, tobacco and hemp and other cheap products of these islands and Hawaii upon the American market in free and unrestricted competition with the agricultural and laboring elements of our own country. This policy, sir, would have been free trade in William Jennings Bryan. What is it in Mr. McKinley?"

The elaborate and exhaustive treatise of the Republican Johnson upon the life and character of the great and moral Imperialist has left the Democrats but little to say. He has done their work for them and done it thoroughly and well.—New York News.

Alger Is Stubborn.

Alger says he will not resign. It does not follow that he will remain Secretary of War. Rumors of the President's dissatisfaction with Alger are prevalent at Washington and there is talk of offering the portfolio to Roosevelt. It is not at all certain that Roosevelt would accept Alger's position. The Governor of New York is ambitious and has the presidential bee buzzing loudly in his bonnet. But Alger is making a lot of trouble for McKinley and will be a great hindrance in the presidential campaign of 1900.

Alger is a stubborn man. He cares not how much trouble he makes for his friends. He heeds not the protests of the people and he will hold on to his position until he is absolutely kicked out.

Concerning the rumors of his resignation, Alger says: "The constantly recurring reports of my purpose to resign from the portfolio of the War Department are baseless. There is not a word of truth in such stories. I have no intention of resigning and will not resign. I shall serve out the remainder of my term of four years as Secretary of War. I will make the inspection trip to Cuba, which I believe to be in the interests of the Government. The details of the journey have only been tentatively arranged. I may add that no amount of newspaper comment and criticism in regard to the trip to Cuba will deter me from carrying out my plans."

These remarks may be considered as a notification by Alger to McKinley that he is not going to be shoved out of the cabinet as was Sherman. It is a declaration to both friend and foe that he is in the cabinet to stay, and that there will be a merry war when his resignation is demanded. But it looks as though Alger would have to go.

Controlling Labor's Pay.

John Locke said: "The lessening the quantity of money makes an equal quantity of it exchange for a greater quantity of any other thing." Hume said: "It is the proportion between the circulating money and the commodities in the market which determines the price." Ricardo said: "That commodities rise or fall in price in proportion to the increase or diminution of money, I presume to be a fact that is incontrovertible." Mill said: "That an increase of the quantiy of money raises prices and a diminution lowers them is the most elementary principle in the theory of currency, and without it we should have no key to any of the others." Sir Robert Giffin said: "Viewing a long period dynamically, it is beyond all question that commodities are comparatively steady (in value), and only the money changes." This is quite enough to establish the fact that the quantity of money in circulation fixes the value of labor and its products; and, as I have already shown, the Rothschilds now exercise that power in the United States. The Democratic party, in the Chicago platform, propose to place that power in the hands of the people. And they propose to do this by remonetizing silver, thus more than doubling the amount of primary money, and by retiring the bank notes and replacing them with greenbacks.

Roosevelt as a Possibility.

It is more than likely that the anti-McKinley wing of the Republicans will look for their most available timber in a man who has a popular record as a war hero, who is a reformer with a record, who personifies the demand which exists irrespective of party limitations among champions of world policies in trade and politics and opponents of isolation and who has never owed preferment to boodle methods. Theodore Roosevelt may yet have the incumbent on the anxious seat.—St. Louis Republic.

Doubtful Credit to Gold Democrats.

The Republicans in 1896 did not declare for the gold standard; they said that the gold standard must be maintained until other nations would join with us in restoring bimetallism, and then pledged themselves to do what they could to get other nations to help us to get rid of the gold standard, and if men voted that platform because the platform did not express their desires six and a half millions of people voted for independent bimetallism, thirteen and a half millions voted for the double standard and against the gold standard, and a hundred and thirty-two thousand voted for the only party that in all the history of this nation ever declared the gold standard to be a blessing; that is political history. The gold Democrats shall have either the credit or discredit, the fame or infamy, of being the only party that in twenty-three years of experience under the gold standard ever declared that that standard was good. And if you test the gold standard sentiment of this nation by the votes received by that party, then, my friends, I want you to remember that the gold Democrats carried just one precinct in the United States, and lest you may give them too much credit, I want you to know that was a small precinct in Western Kansas, where they only had six voters, and it was not unanimous there, because, my friends, the gold ticket received three votes, Mr. McKinley received one and I received one; that was the only precinct in the United States, and I believe the papers said that in honor of that distinction that one of the gold candidates on the Presidential ticket sent to that precinct a jug of whisky, and one little jug of whisky was enough to give several drinks of whisky to all the gold men of the precinct. Now, you see, my friends, upon what a foundation the Republican stands when he tells you of the indorsement, that the gold standard received in this country. It was not indorsed, and, as I said, as soon as the election was over Mr. McKinley recognized the mandate of the people by sending a commission to Europe to ask other nations to help us get rid of this blessing, which they describe the gold standard to be.—From W. J. Bryan's Grand Rapids speech.

Why Times Are Better.

They tell us that the times are better in this country, and after they get through telling us that times are better they tell us of the increase in exports and by the flow of money to the United States. Now, Republicans, if you are going to try to prove that the rise in prices and in prosperity based upon such a rise is due to Republican legislation, you must not admit that it is due to the increase in the volume of money—whether it comes from new gold mines or whether an increase in export of products and an increase in the importation of gold—because according to our theory, no matter where the money comes from, whether it comes from across the ocean or whether it comes out of the gold mines of the Klondike or out of the silver mines of the United States, an increase of money will make times easier and prices higher and people more prosperous. But, my friends, the difference between us and Republicans is that they praise a dear dollar to the laboring man and rejoice in higher prices to the producers of wealth, and after taking advantage of every accidental circumstance, and claiming that it grows from Republican legislation, content themselves with temporary and accidental benefits, rejecting a permanent restoration of the level of prices by the restoration of a double standard of money throughout the world.—From W. J. Bryan's Grand Rapids speech.

Reaching the Public Ear.

Doubtless it is a very grave infraction of military discipline for soldiers or officers to ventilate their military grievances in the newspapers instead of submitting them to their superiors and seeking redress in the regular and appointed way. There is something to be said, however, on the other side of the question. When the channels of communication from rank to rank are closed, or when complaints presented in due form to the proper authorities lead to no action of any sort, the aggrieved soldier or officer turns to quarters where he can secure immediate and often effective consideration. He knows that this is insubordination, and that he risks punishment more or less severe, but the original wrong is usually righted.—New York Times.

The Taxpayer Pays the Freight.

We "needed" the Hawaiian islands to "protect" the Nicaragua canal. We "need" the Nicaragua canal to give us quick access to our Hawaiian possessions. We "need" the Philippines to make the Hawaiian islands available to us as a half-way station. We "need" a cable to connect us with our Hawaiian and Philippine possessions. We "need" an army and navy to take care of these distant possessions of ours.—Terre Haute Gazette.

Disgraceful Doings at Springfield.

It is becoming apparent to the most superficial observer that all the energies of the Republicans in the Legislature are being devoted to the strengthening of the Tanner machine. The thing is so transparent that there is hardly a denial of it. The interests of the people count for nothing. There may have been Legislatures that were equally corrupt or even more so, but there has never been one that was more shameless.—Peoria Herald.

THE TEXAS RANGERS.

UNIQUE MOUNTED POLICE OF THE LONE STAR STATE.

Organized by Gen. Sam Houston, in 1836, They Have Fought Mexicans, Indians and Bandits—Their Great Service in the Civil War.

Few bodies of men have had more thrillingly interesting experiences than that unique and picturesque organization—the Texas Rangers. The organization of the Rangers dates back to 1836. The hardy Texans were then at war with Mexico for the freedom of the republic of Texas from Mexican rule. When the Alamo had fallen and the frightful massacre there had occurred, Gen. Sam Houston organized among the settlers in the territory a troop of 1,600 mounted riflemen. They were the original Texas rangers. They did wonders in the face of the army under Gen. Santa Ana in the battle of San Jacinto. When the republic of Texas was organized in December, 1837, the rangers were retained as a sort of standing army for the frontier of the unique republic. During the seven years before Texas was admitted as a State in the Union the rangers repelled a horde of murderous Mexican marauders from beyond the Rio Grande, fought into submission the fierce Apaches, Comanches and Kiowas dozens of times, and administered justice on a wholesale plan to a great number of the red-handed outlaws and ruffians who flocked into the new republic from all parts of the United States.

The Texas rangers became so much of an institution for the protection of life and property of the settlers and lonely ranchmen of the territory that when Texas became a State 1,200 of the rangers were retained as mounted police along the Mexican border and for holding in check the almost intractable Indian tribes of the Southwest. Until the civil war broke out the Texas rangers were kept constantly in the field. At times there were reserve rangers to the number of 3,000 among the frontiersmen, who were called out many times to aid in quelling an Indian outbreak and to drive out or slay a band of Mexican marauders. After the war the rangers were gradually reduced from 1,000 to 300 men. For several years there has been no regular force in service, though the Rangers at times turn out to round up some lawless band.

There is still, however, in the office of the adjutant general of Texas at Austin a list of 1,800 equipped and experienced men who are amenable to calls for immediate duty as rangers by the Governor. The list is revised every year, and only the most hardy may serve. There is also a list of reserve rangers to the number of 6,000. The stock men and owners of the big Texas ranches all employ some men belonging to the rangers on their account.

When the civil war broke out Gen. Con Terry, an old ranger, organized the famous body of men known as Terry's Texas Rangers, composed almost entirely of former rangers and frontiersmen. They fought from Bull Run to Appomattox, and lost 75 per cent. of their muster roll. Gen. Sherman's memoirs comment upon the bravery of the rangers at Shiloh. Soon after the close of the civil war the Texas Legislature provided for calling out 1,200 rangers to protect the frontiers against hostile Indians.

In the summer of 1847 the rangers followed the Comanches, numbering over 3,000, ceaselessly for two months. Several times there were engagements of several hours' length. Then when the Comanches had been temporarily subdued the even more hostile Apaches on the west had to be attended to for three months more, but in this the United States troops were the leaders. In October a half dozen bands of Mexican bandits, who had burned, murdered and marauded along the Rio Grande while the rangers were engaged with the Indians 300 miles away, had to be searched out amid vast stretches of arid wastes and trackless foothills and fought under all imaginable hazardous circumstances. In one week twenty-two rangers were killed by the intrenched half-breed bandits to the number of 300. Altogether the campaigning against Comanches, Apaches and marauders lasted ten months, and there was not a rest day—no time when the rangers felt secure from danger—in all those months. In that campaign of 1847 fourteen out of every 100 rangers were killed. Seventeen per cent. more were wounded by poisoned arrows and bullets, so that they became invalids for life.

A Desperate Charge.

Statistics in the office of the Adjutant General of Texas give some idea of the constant dangers and the almost constant campaigning that these hardy men have experienced along the Texan frontier. In 1852 600 rangers were engaged in a fight with over 2,000 Cherokees. The latter were intrenched near where Denison, Texas, now flourishes. Scouts reported the size of the Indian body to the rangers, and said that if a certain hill seven miles off to the left could be gained in the face of the terrible odds against such a movement the rangers would master the situation. The desperate chance was accepted. With a whoop of defiance to the Indians the Texans rode forward. Exactly 137 men fell dead in the charge. But the hill was taken and held until the United States troops came a few hours later to take the brunt of the battle.

Conditions had so far changed in Texas by the year 1880 that the rangers were no longer needed for defense against hostile Indians, as Indian raids had ceased. But the force, now reduced in numbers, was still active in the suppression of desperadoes along the border, some of them raiding Mexicans, others native products, and all more troublesome from the fact that increased vigilance on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande tended to confine the operations of such persons to Texas. The rangers made, in the years 1889-'90 579 arrests, mostly of desperate criminals, among them 76 murderers, 160 cattle thieves, and 25 robbers and burglars. Although Mexican outrages had decreased in numbers, and the Indians had entirely disappeared from the State, the rangers, from December, 1890, to November 30, 1892, made more than 900 arrests.

Any unmarried man over 18 years of age is eligible as a ranger, but it is an exceedingly difficult matter to get into the organization. Courage, physical soundness, first-class horsemanship, precision with firearms and steady habits are the requisites for membership. The term of enlistment is one year. The ranger furnishes his horse, accoutrements and arms, and the State furnishes food for the men, forage, ammunition, medicine and medical attendance. The pay of the captains is $100 a month, of sergeants $50 a month, and of privates $30 a month. The force is made up of young men, sober, well ordered, and, as a rule, fairly well educated. The rangers of to-day attend to business in the same thorough fashion as their predecessors, and in small bands of six or eight men they pursue and capture the worst desperadoes of the border counties.

A TYPICAL TEXAS RANGER.

Effect of an "H."

A cockney whose name was Ogton, which he, following the usage of his class, pronounced Hogtown, settled at the beginning of the present century in the city of New York, where he did business as a trader. His prefixing of the "h" was the occasion of a post-office story, which Dunlap, the author of the "History of the Arts of Design," tells.

Before the clerks of the postoffice knew Ogton, he called day after day to inquire if there were "any letters for John Hogtown."

"None, sir," was the invariable answer.

"Very strange!" said he, feeling uneasy about the goods he had ordered from England, and the bills of exchange he had remitted.

One day after the usual question, "Any letters for John Hogtown?" his eye, following the clerk, noticed that he was looking among the letters beginning with H.

"'Ollo!" cried he, "what are you looking there for? I said John Hogtown."

"I know it, sir, and I am looking for John Hogtown; and there's nothing for you."

"Nay, nay!" shouted John; "don't look among the haitches, look among the hoes." And among the O's were found a pile of letters addressed to John Ogton, which had been accumulating for many a week.

A Big Saving.

"Yes, I'm going to save money enough at the start to insure the financial success of my extravaganza in the Philippines."

"How will you do that?"

"By leaving the ballet behind."

"But you'll need a ballet."

"Yes, and I can pick a native ballet right off the streets with absolutely no expense for costumes."—Cleveland Plain Dealer

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Religion.—Religion is a matter between yourself and God.—Rev. G. W. Stone, Unitarian, Kansas City, Mo.

Rational Beliefs.—The two rational beliefs are Calvinism and Universalism.—Rev. I. P. Coddington, Universalist, Rochester, New York.

Knows God.—He who knows Jesus Christ knows God, and he only does.—Rev. Dr. Behrends, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, New York.

A Strong City.—God with man makes him a strong city; man without God is a ruined city.—Rev. W. H. Carwardine, Methodist, Chicago, Ill.

The Mind.—The mind has no conception of what it is to be tired or impaired, but it knows when its instrument is.—T. B. Wilson, Theosophite, Kansas City, Mo.

Church of Christ.—Pure hearts and clean hands upbuild the cause and Church of Christ.—Dr. Alfred Farlow, Christian Scientist, Kansas City, Mo.

Immortal Man.—If man be not immortal, then God has planted falsehood in the very center of our being.—Rev. J. F. Carson, Presbyterian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Necessary Agency.—Every agency, whether civic, religious or educational, doing the work of Christianity, is necessary.—Rev. Reuben Thomas, Congregationalist, Boston, Mass.

The Supreme Interpreter. — The church will hold Christ as the supreme interpreter. In him is the interpretation of nature, of man, of God.—Dr. G. H. Combs, Kansas City, Mo.

National Idea.—The American national idea is personal liberty; the liberty of the individual man, because he is man.—Dr. Conaty, Roman Catholic, Catholic University, Washington, D. C.

Capital Punishment.—Our capital punishment is a social crime, inherited from the dead, and is a confession of the weakness and pusillanimity of society.—Rev. B. Fay Mills, Evangelist, Boston, Mass.

Human Glories.—How fleeting human glories are and how short is the duration of earthly happiness. The true happiness is founded on Christ in devotion to his religion.—Cardinal Gibbons, Roman Catholic, Baltimore, Md.

To Be Truly Great.—A man to be truly great and to have all his noblest powers aroused needs to feel that thrill and throb of the long yesterdays and the quivering pulsations of the great to-morrows.—Rev. Geo. B. Vosburg, Baptist, Denver, Colo.

Theosophists.—Theosophists are as much fatalists as are Mohammedans. There is an iron law of remorseless necessity, of unchanging and unchangeable force. There is no possibility of setting fate aside; the only thing you can do is to submit.—Dr. Dille, Methodist, Oakland, Cal.

A Character.—Three things will build up a character, the refusing to do wrong, the acceptance of the Divine Providence and the practicing his will. These will make a character conforming to the will of God, and such conformance is heaven, and abideth forever.—Rev. Wayland Hoyt, Baptist, Minneapolis, Minn.

Detraction.—Some sins may be peculiar to certain professions, to certain times, to certain places. Detraction presents itself to all professions, in all ages and in all places. It is evil in itself and in its motives. Envy, jealousy, hatred, pure malice; these are the motives of detraction.—Father Dubolse, Roman Catholic, San Francisco, California.

The Power of the Church.—There is in the church a power which tells men what to believe in a very dogmatic way. This power is infallible, being the voice of the Holy Ghost. Freedom of conscience is a gigantic error; God has a right to regulate what men should think, and man is amenable in his thought only to God.—Rev. Dr. Breen, Roman Catholic, Rochester, New York.

A MOST POPULAR GARMENT.

The New Features of This Year's Shirt Waist.

The ever-comfortable shirt-waist has such a hold on the feminine heart that it promises to be worn the coming season almost to the exclusion of everything else. Our illustration combines charmingly all the new features that distinguish this year's waists from those of last season, namely round-cornered collars, huge pearl buttons to fasten and lengthwise tucks. The vogue of the lengthwise tucks has probably been brought about from the desire for change, for certainly crosswise effects have been run into the ground. Another craze for white waists is assured for next summer, with all-over Swiss shirt-waists for a novelty. The shape of the new waists differs very little from those of last year, except in the matter of smaller sleeves.

THE NEW SHIRTWAIST.

Worthy of Note.

Turin held an international exhibition last summer which will remain noteworthy through the receipts having exceeded all expenditures by $120,000. No sooner was the result known than the Italian Government sent in a tax bill, demanding 10 per cent. of the profits.

SOLDIER AND ADVENTURER.

Col. Funston, Who Led a Charge at Manila, Has Had Many Experiences.

Col. Frederick Funston, who led the three companies of the Kansas regiment in their gallant charge against the Filipinos at Manila, is one of the youngest colonels in the United States army. He is 28 years old.

Col. Funston was born in Kansas and is the son of an ex-Congressman from that State. He was graduated from the State University of Kansas, and then became a newspaper man at Fort Smith, Ark. While there he saw hard fighting during the Indian outbreaks, joining the troops on several occasions and remaining with them through a winter campaign. After leaving Fort Smith he joined a government expedition to Death Valley, in Southern California, sent out to make a geological investigation. Death Valley is said to be the most desolate waste in this country. The expedition suffered every kind of privation for nine months, in which time Colonel Funston took the record of the highest temperature ever measured by any government, which was 165 degrees Fahrenheit.

Returning from this expedition, he took a commission from the government to explore Alaska, and for two years he wandered about alone. After a rest of several months he went to Mexico and Central America on a private venture, it being his object to get options on land for coffee plantations. The project needed more financial support than he could secure in the West, and for this reason he visited New York. The support, however, was not forthcoming, and Funston became assistant secretary of the Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad.

The routine of this post was monotonous to him, and three months later he surprised his friends by enlisting as a private in the Cuban army. His promotion in that service was rapid. Soon he was made lieutenant, then captain, then major, and finally he was put in command of all the artillery force east of Havana. During the eighteen months he spent in Cuba he was in twenty-three battles, had his left arm mutilated by a shell, received a Mauser bullet in his left lung, and was sick of the fever for two months. Once while leading a battery to a point of vantage he had his horse shot under him. The horse rolled on Funston's right leg, crushing the thigh. His campaigning had by this time rendered him a physical wreck, and not feeling able to continue in the service he asked to be retired. His request was granted. On his way to the coast, however, he was captured by the Spanish. He was condemned to die, but later, being put on parole, escaped and came to New York.

COL. FREDERICK FUNSTON.

When war was declared against Spain he was commissioned by Governor Leedy, of Kansas, as Colonel of the Twentieth Kansas Regiment. Later General Miles sent for him to take a place on his staff. Colonel Funston insisted on keeping his regiment, but he spent several weeks with General Miles at Tampa, giving him the benefit of his knowledge of Cuba. His regiment was stationed at San Francisco for two months. Six weeks before it sailed for Manila the Colonel met a beautiful young woman of high social position in Oakland, whom he married the day the transport sailed for the Philippines.

AMERICA IN HISTORY.

Things the English Schoolboy Learns About the Revolution.

The American school history has been the main bar to friendliness with England, by reason of its comments on the wars of our independence and of 1812. I was very curious when I first visited England in 1889 to see how the revolutionary war was treated in English school histories, but the only history I found, in a little village school that I visited, dismissed the matter with a mere statement that in a certain year we separated from the mother country and set up a republican form of government. The geographies paid scarcely more attention to our country, and I came away with the impression so many Americans have, that the English schoolboy is taught far less about our country than its importance should warrant. Within a month I have come across a "School History of England" for boys of what we would call high school age, and have been more than astonished at the manner in which the writer, Cunningham Geikie, treats the subjects which have so long remained open sores with us, largely, because we have supposed that the English were either willfully ignorant of the wrongs we suffered at their hands or at least were unrepentant. I found that this history, one of a well-known series of school books, condemns the policies of England's governments, at the times of our ruptures with them, more severely and in harsher language than I remember ever to have seen in an American school book. After enumerating the burdens, just and unjust, which Grenville forced upon us, the historian goes on to declare the insanity of the king and the illness of Pitt at a later date (1766). He says that the members of the government were ill fitted to take Pitt's place, and one especially, Charles Townshend, chancellor of the exchequer, "wanting in prudence and self-restraint, was destined to be the evil genius of England at this crisis."—From "Anglo-Saxon Affinities," by Julian Ralph, in Harper's Magazine.

Youth and Brains.

Mr. Armour is a great believer in young men and young brains. He never discharges a man if he can possibly avoid it. If the man is not doing good work where he is, he puts him in some other department, but never discharges him if he can find him other work. He will not, however, tolerate intemperance, laziness or getting into debt. Some time ago a policeman entered his office. In answer to Mr. Armour's question, "What do you want here?" he replied: "I want to garnishee one of your men's wages for debt." "Indeed," said Mr. Armour; "and who is the man?" Asking the officer into his private room he sent for the debtor. "How long have you been in debt?" asked Mr. Armour. The clerk replied that he had been behind for twenty years and could not seem to catch up. "But you get a good salary, don't you?" "Yes, but I can't get out of debt." "But you must get out, or you must leave here," said Mr. Armour. "How much do you owe?" The clerk then gave the amount, which was less than a thousand dollars. "Well," said Mr. Armour, handing him a check, "there is enough to pay all your debts, and if I hear of your again getting into debt you will have to leave." The clerk paid his debts and remodeled his life on a cash basis.—Success.

Care of the Eyelashes.

The ancients made an art of the cultivation of the eyelashes. It was recognized that, besides adding expression to the eyes, the lashes preserved them from the dust, cold wind, and too glaring light, all of which tend to irritate and often inflame the eye. It is therefore not a vanity to endeavor to obtain them and then preserve them from falling out. A little pure vaseline applied to the eyelashes every night will aid their growth and strengthen them.

The Longest Head of Hair.

The woman who possesses the longest head of hair in the world is said to be Mercedes Lopez, a Mexican. Her height is 5 feet, and when she stands erect her hair trails on the ground four feet eight inches. The hair is so thick that she can completely hide herself in it. She has it cut very frequently, as it grows so quickly, enabling her to sell large tresses to hair dealers every month. She is the wife of a poor sheep herder.

Society Women

and, in fact, nearly all women who undergo a nervous strain, are compelled to regretfully watch the growing pallor of their cheeks, the coming wrinkles and thinness that become more distressing every day.

Every woman knows that ill-health is a fatal enemy to beauty and that good health gives to the plainest face an enduring attractiveness. Pure blood and strong nerves—these are the secret of health and beauty.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People build up and purify the blood and strengthen the nerves. To the young girl they are invaluable, to the mother they are a necessity, to the woman approaching fifty they are the best remedy that science has devised for this crisis of her life.

Mrs. Jacob Weaver, of Bushnell, Ill., is fifty-six years old. She says: "I suffered for five or six years with the trouble that comes to women at this time of life. I was much weakened, was unable, much of the time, to do my own work; and suffered beyond my power to describe. I was downhearted and melancholy. Nothing seemed to do me any good. Then I made up my mind to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

I bought the first box in March, 1897, and was benefited from the start. A box and a half cured me completely, and I am now rugged and strong." —Bushnell (Ill.) Record.

The genuine package always bears the full name. At all druggists or sent postpaid on receipt of price 50¢ per box by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co, Schenectady, N.Y.

A Doomed Child.

Some east end boys have the acrobatic fever very badly since Barnum's visit, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. They turn flip-flaps, and they do things on swings, and when an anxious mother investigated the other day she found her hopeful trying to cross the backyard on the clothes line. A lot of boys stood around anxiously watching him. When they saw George's mother they all motioned her to keep quiet.

"George," she called, whereupon Master George promptly tumbled to the ground; "what are you doing?"

George got up and dusted his trousers.

"That's what teacher says is the nequinocturnal act," he replied with a broad grin.

"The equinoctial act—what's that?"

"The son crossin' the line."

Whereat all the boys roared with delight and George's mother went back into the house with a sad feeling at her heart.

She was afraid her dear boy was growing up a humorist like his unfortunate father.

Within Range.

"How did this happen?" asked the surgeon as he dressed the wound in the cheek and applied a soothing poultice to the damaged eye.

"Got hit with a stone," replied the patient.

"Who threw it?"

"My—my wife," was the reluctant answer.

"Hum! It's the first time I've heard of a woman hitting anything she aimed at," muttered the surgeon.

"She was throwing at the neighbor's chickens," explained the sufferer. "I was behind her."—London Tit-Bits.

Our Naval Station at San Juan.

The United States naval station to be located at San Juan, Porto Rico, will be of the utmost importance as the key to the situation when the Nicaragua Canal is constructed. Plenty of Sand.

The great divine was delivering the funeral oration of the two brave explorers who had died while penetrating the trackless desert.

"We must remember," he concluded, "that these two courageous men were utterly isolated from the rest of mankind at the time of their death. Imagine them in the heart of Sahara, their food and water supply exhausted, they themselves near to death, but, never once, if I may be permitted to use the expression, did their sand give out!"

Guernsey New Year Custom.

In the island of Guernsey it used to be the practice of the children on the last day of the year to dress up a figure in the shape of a man, and, after parading it through the parish, to bury it on the seashore or in some retired spot.

The Worlds Institute here has been invited to exhibit at Paris in 1900 their wonderful "Banning Method" of treatment. It has cured in last four years over seven hundred residents of this city of seemingly hopeless cases of spinal disease, deformity, rupture and other chronic diseases. Has won forty-three medals and diplomas, and only award Worlds Fair, Chicago, 1893.—Fort Wayne Gazette.

It is estimated that from 1801 to 1888 the world has produced 12,700,000,000 tons of mineral, of which 10,601,000,000 tons were of coal, 1,275,000,000 of iron, 612,000,000 of gold quartz, 49,000,000 of silver ore, 80,000,000 of copper and 80,000,000 of lead ore.

Don't give them tea or coffee. Have you tried the new food drink called GRAIN-O? It is delicious and nourishing, and takes the place of coffee. HAS SCALPS BY THE SCORE.

Old Indian Fighter Whose Life Has Been Spent in Killing Red Men.

One of the most peculiar characters of the far West is Jackson Farley, Indian fighter and Government scout, who now in his 92d year is living quietly on his ranch in Mendocino County, California. Farley, who has killed more Indians and coyotes than any other man on the Pacific coast, went to California from Virginia when a young man, partly for adventure and partly to avenge the murder of his best friend, who was massacred by the Indians while crossing the plains. It would be difficult to estimate the number of Indians who afterward fell victims to his rifle in consequence. During the period between 1849 and 1865 he made constant warfare upon the Indians of Mendocino, Humboldt and Trinity Counties. A careful count of the grewsome Indian scalp trophies of Farley's valor would render an estimate for a startling total. Chairs bottomed with Indian hide and razor strops cut from the back of some unduly ferocious "buck" are among his trophies, and together with countless tomahawks, bows, arrows and skins from bears and panthers make an uncommonly striking feature of the interior of his cabin.

Farley settled among the lonely mountain ranges of Mendocino County and his life for considerably over half a century has there been spent. His only companions have been dogs.

During hs life in the wilderness Farley has probably killed 100 Indians, the most of whom he afterward scalped. In 1856, when the first Indian post was established in Mendocino County, Farley entered the Government service. Acting as a special scout for the soldiers, he made excursions into the interior, from which they drove the Indians into the reservation as they would have driven as many wild hogs or cattle. It was immaterial whether the redskins were hostile or not. All Indians were considered legitimate game for these agents of the government.

MAY BE AN EMPEROR'S BRIDE.

Isabelle of Orleans, Who May Wed Franz Joseph of Austria.

It has been reported that when the season of mourning for his assassinated wife, Elizabeth, is over, old Franz Joseph, Emperor of Austria, will marry again. The line of the Hapsburgs is almost extinct. The present heir to the Austrian throne is Archduke Franz Ferdinand, nephew of the Emperor, and should he die—which is a threatening possibility in view of his sickly condition—the throne would pass away from the Hapsburg family, which has occupied it for many centuries.

Franz Joseph has ever been a good judge of female beauty, and it is not at all surprising that he should select as his future bride one of Europe's most charming young princesses. She is Isabelle of Orleans, who, although barely

ISABELLE OF ORLEANS.

20, has already become famous for her beauty in European courts. She is a daughter of the late Louis Philippe, count of Paris, and a sister of the present Duke of Orleans.

The Ruling Passion.

Everything, even a magnificent cathedral, has to be regarded from the point of view of the beholder. A London paper says that two country girls, who acted as if they might be enjoying a holiday from domestic service, were lately observed walking down the aisles of St. Paul's Cathedral.

Under the great dome one of them stood and gazed around her with an air of such wonder that her silence conveyed the impression that her probably limited vocabulary did not furnish her with words to convey her impressions.

"Oh, dear, Sarah!" she presently exclaimed, "wouldn't this place take a long time to sweep out!"

A Deep Lake.

The deepest lake in the world so far as known is Lake Baikal, in Siberia. While 9,000 square miles in area, or nearly as large as Lake Erie, it is 4,000 feet to 4,500 feet deep, so that it contains nearly as much water as Lake Superior. Its surface is 1,350 feet above sea level, and its bottom nearly 2,900 feet below it.

Individual Consumption of Air.

It is computed that when at rest we consume 500 cubic inches of air a minute. If we walk at the rate of one mile an hour we use 800; two miles, 1,000; three miles, 1,600; four miles, 2,300. If we start out and run six miles an hour we consume 3,000 cubic inches of air during every minute of the time.

OBITUARY

—Jane McIntyre Bateman, was born Feb. 2, 1823, at Ancram, Dutchess Co., New York State, and died at her home in Sedan, March 8, 1899, aged 76 years, 1 month and 6 days.

She was married to Andrew Bateman, Sept. 6, 1842, to this union two children were born, the eldest, Charlie, lost his life at the battle of Cold Harbor; Wilbur lives on the old home stead near Sedan.

She buried her husband in the year 1896. from this loss she never fully recovered and was only waiting to meet him again in the heavenly home. She and her husband came to Sedan in the spring of 1874. She united with the Christian church in her early girlhood and after removing to Sedan united with the Lutheran church. She leaves an only son Wilbur, five grandchildren and one great grandchild, to all of whom she was greatly attached, and by them greatly missed.

She was taken with a stroke of paralysis on the 3, of March, from which she died. Her last hours were without pain, and she seemed to sleep away.

Resources of Alaska

(Fort Wayne Sentinel)

A resident of Alaska for twenty-one years, Gov. John G. Brady, says that if the people of the territor had nothing fact but what is taken from the sea they built would be richer than the inhabitants seen of northern Europe. The value of Alstan askan fish products last year was $4,000,000, and the total since the purchase and by the United States is $67,000 000. Bass, red snappers, flounders, crabs and clams are plentiful and the cod, halibut and herring have hardly been touched. Heavy forests of spruce, red and yellow cedar and hemlock extend for 650 miles along the coast. Barley, oats, flax and hardy vegetables mature perfectly. Stock cattle, horses and poultry flourish. Grass is abundant, and in time Alaska should export butter and cheese. Copper, coal and iron are found in large quantities, and traces of gold are widely distributed. The territory for which the United States paid $7,200,000 is worth hundreds of millions, and its possession has not in the slightest degree been a national embarrassment.

THE constantly recurring monthly suffering gives women the blues!

How hopeless the future appears, month after month the same siege with menstrual pain!

Comparatively few women understand that excessive pain indicates ill-health, or some serious derangement of the feminine organs.

DESPONDENT WOMEN

A million women have been helped by Mrs. Pinkham. Read what two of them say.

MRS. LIZZIE COLEMAN, of Wayland, N. Y., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—For years I suffered with painful menstruation and falling of womb. The bearing-down pains in my back and hips were dreadful. I could not stand for more than five minutes at a time when menstruation began. But thanks to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, my sufferings are now a thing of the past. I shall gladly recommend your medicines to all my friends."

MISS C. D. MORRIS, 3 Louisburg Square, Boston, Mass., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I have been using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has helped me wonderfully. I was troubled with headache, backache and that weak and tired feeling. I cannot say enough in praise of your medicine for it has done me so much good. I shall recommend it to all my friends who suffer."

Despondency is a disease. Nervousness and snappishness come with it. Will power won't overcome it. The feminine organs are connected by nerves with the brain and all parts of the body. These organs must be healthy or the mind is not healthy.

All low-spirited or suffering women may write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., and receive her advice free of charge. Don't wait until your life is wrecked by neglect and suffering. Get advice in time.

It is a rock-base cement, which sets, and it hardens with age. It can be re-coated and re-decorated without having to wash and scrape off its old coats. CHURCHES AND SCHOOLHOUSES

The interior walls of churches, schoolhouses and all public halls should never be coated with anything but the durable and pure Alabastine. So evident has this fact become, that hundreds of tons are used annually for this work. The genuine Alabastine does not rub or scale off. It is cleanly during the long period of its usefulness. Every owner of a building should use it. Ask your paint dealer or druggist for card of tints, and write for free copy of our paper, Alabastine Era, to Alabastine Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.

REJECT THE "JUST AS GOOD."

The dealer who tells you that he can sell you the "same thing" as Alabastine or "something just as good," either is not posted or is trying to deceive you. In offering something he has bought cheap and is trying to sell on Alabastine's demands, he may not realize the danger to himself as well as to you. Beware of all new substitutes. Dealers risk a suit for damages by selling and consumers by using an infringement. Alabastine Co. own the right to make and sell wall coatings adapted to mix with cold water.

They Beat Yankee Bill

John W. Baxter and his cousin C. E. Baxter went over to Spencerville yesterday to try a case on a note. It came up before Squire Bartlett, and was his second trial since he was elected last fall. They had a jury, and "Yankee Bill" of Leo was counsel for the defense. This "Yankee Bill," is a nickname for Nelson Myers, an oldtime petifogger, whose strong hold is not so much his knowledge of law as knowledge of the citizens in the vicinity. For this knowledge gives him a chauce to pick out a jury in a justice court to beat the best attorneys, and especially attorneys who are strangers in that vicinity and do not know which jurors are Yankee Bill's sworn friends and comrades. This game was tried on the Auburn attorneys, for the trial had not fully started before they found that "Yankee" had his men on the jury as usual, and though the jury had been sworn, they made a fight to reorganize it and did so, getting a jury that was a much fairer one. Then the case went on. "Yankee" fought for all he was worth, but being shorn of his jurymen he was at so great a disadvantage that he was easily beaten. And so his client has to pay the note of $160.

The two attorneys, having finished their case started home in the dark. The mud was inexpressibly bad and the team did not care whether they kept the road or not. As a consequence, when they came to turn the little short corner at Concord, the team turned too soon and the rig went up with the near wheels on the bank and was upset, the two attorneys coming over as flat as they had laid out "Yankee" himself. They righted things and came on, but it was a long and dreary journey.

Discovered by a Woman.

Another great discovery has been made, and that too, by a lady in this country. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly, and could not sleep. She finally discovered a way to recovery, by purchasing of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night; and with two bottles, has been absolutely cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus writes W. C. Hamnick & Co., of Shelby, N, C. Trial bottles free at H. B. McCord's drug store. Regular size 50c and $1.00. Every bottle guaranteed.

Harness Stolen.

Last night some sneak thieves stole a good set of double harness from A. M. St. Clair northeast of town. He discovered his loss this morning and found the tracks of horses, evidently ridden by the thieves. They tried to fool him by starting off north and then coming around to the south again. He followed them south to where they had staid all night in an old house near Brandon's, and there they had evidently put the harness on the horses and hitched onto a wagon and driven on south. After crossing the B. & O. there were so many new tracks that he could trace them no further, and had to give it up.

My First Days At School.

II

In my former article I said our school house was not situated on a public highway, but on a roundabout by way, and approached by a crooked path through the woods, and no teams ever passed by. But in winter when snow was deep, the householders would sometimes bring the children on sleds, turn about and reach the highway by going back the same way they came in. The house was situated on a narrow space between two cultivated fields, and woe to the unlucky urchin that invaded the sacred precincts of either of these fields or threw down the fences. The fence at the rear of the house came up within a few feet of it. This fence was built upon the brow of a steep hill, so there was no play-ground there. Between the front door and the fence, a space intervened partly occupied by a monster oak stump, about which the ashes of many a term of school had been thrown. I can see its black charred top sticking out of the ashes as though it were yesterday that I had been crowded into its soft covering by the larger pupils, as they thronged this narrow space at recess or close of school. The house occupied a level space about sixty feet wide and half that space in length, and stood on the east side of this space. To the left or south rose a steep hill perhaps forty feet high, and to the right or north descended another hill fully as high, terminating in a small stream, or "run" as we called it, extending on north perhaps two hundred feet, where a large cold spring of the finest sulphur water, that ever quenched thirst of a tired-at-play school boy. This run had its rise at the large springs at the still-house. In winter these hills and runs formed one of the most royal, natural toboggan slides to be found any where in that vicinity, and the young folks from adjoining districts often came there to visit our school, but mainly to slide down hill with the girls. My own home was about a mile and a half from the school house, so that if I got my chores done and wood chopped for the day and got to school before it had commenced, I was unusually lucky. Some mornings when the hill was slippery, I would get up early, hurry my work along, and try to get to school in time to get a few slides down the hill before the unwelcome sound of the school master's ferule rapping on the window sash warned us that the fun was up, and that 9 o'clock had arrived and school must commence. I would hastily grab my cab and "wamus," and strike out for school taking the shortest possible route over fences, across fields, through the woods, until when about a half a mile from the school house I could hear the merry sounds of the forty or fifty sliders, ringing above every other sound. Reaching the school house, a busy scene was presented, some sailing down the long declivity alone with the speed of a race horse. Here and there, a company of from three to a dozen would come down at a break-neck speed on a flat rail, or a board, or broken bench. Each pupil would vie with the other in having the best sled or board with which to slide, but about the best thing that could be obtained was a wide smooth shingle. The small lad would seat himself on one of these wide shingles, raise both hands and feet, dextrously balance himself and fly down that long hill like a bird on the wing. Collisions were common, and often a rail or a long board with ten or a dozen pupils of both sexes and ages, ranging from six to sixteen would strike the stump I mentioned, and a strange mingling of arms, and limbs, red cross barred flannel dresses and under garments, hats and pants would bound in every direction. A minute or two afterward a lot of disveleled and disrumpled boys and girls would be tidying themselves apparently none the worse for the sudden and unexpected catastrophe. A half hour of this kind of exercise, especially if the weather was slightly moderate, would do up the clothing of the skaters, in a shape that would take nearly a half a day to dry by the old "ten-plate stove, (not "tin-plate," as the typo made me say in my last article.) Complaints from parents called a halt, and one evening the school master gravely informed the half hundred pupils that sliding down hill must be stopped. The next morning I was among the early arrivals, and the sliding did not stop. In a few minutes the firm, forceful form of the schoolmaster was seen in the distance. Sleds, shingles and benches disappeared like magic. No one had thought of sliding, to all appearances. In a few minutes the teacher was among them with a smooth, slim water beech sprout about six feet long. Extreme quiet prevailed that forenoon, and but few wet places on the benches were noticed, where sliders' wet pants had heretofore left their impression. I have filled my space, and "Lesson" must be put off for another article. J. A. C.

From Old Kaintuck.

CAMPBELLSVILLE KY, Feb. 24, '99.

EDITOR COURIER:—In compliance with your request I write you a few lines, perhaps they may intesest your readers.

I left home February 15, by way of Lake Shore to Fort Wayne, at that place took the Wabash to Indianapolis, and from there L. & N. to this place, all the way down, the further south, the more snow. When I reached here, contrary to my expectation, I found that we had a mild winter in the north in comparison with here. The citizens of Lebanon declaring that the government theremometer having recorded 39 degrees below zero, and the people of this place and also of Greensborough, say the thermometers showed the same low temperature, even as low as 42 degrees. Yesterday it was damp and cold and snowed, and today the roads are frozen hard enough to carry a team, and threatening snow, and it is not much of a "Sunny South." This is the county seat of Taylor county, population 1,500 to 1,800. It is a large county and has many stone pikes running through it.

The mail carriers and stage coaches coming and reminds me of the old-time mail stage route of Auburn to Fort Wayne, of my boyhood. Four mule or four horse teams come in here with great loads of tobacco, staves or heading and some few with grain. There is no end to saw mills through this country, but will soon have to be idle or go elsewhere, as the timber is fast being exhausted.

The business of this town consists of twenty stores and groceries, one bank, two hotels and no factories, but enough lawyers to make it mighty interesting. They have a well here that Dr. Swarts ought to buy and move up to his sanitarium. It is the finest kind of mineral water and only waits for the right person to come and make himself rich. The people are very religious and clean talkers, and polite to a fault. The churches are the best buildings and the ones here are very good. The Methodist church an old two story brick structure built before the war, will soon be replaced by a new one, and was used by northern soldiers for a hospital. I attended Sunday School, (something I had not done for a long time,) and church morning and evening, being called upon at the hotel, and invited to attend church with them. The sermons were most excellent, nothing critical, but practical.

Yours respectfully,
H. C. SHULL.

Mrs. Esther Fretz.

Mrs. Esther Fretz, south of Sedan died yesterday at 6 p. m. while sitting in her chair. She had been a great sufferer for a year or more, and for four months past had not been able to lie down, but had to be propped in a chair. We have not learned the disease, but it was something from which the resulting dropsy has caused her great suffering. The funeral will be at 11 a. m. tomorrow at the Showers church near her late home. He age was about 65. The two absent sons, who have been with her more or less since she became helpless, have been sent for. Henry way in town today and thinks they will reach here this evening. They are Frank at Rochester, and Dr. Calvin Fretz at Deedsville down the Wabash road.

House Burned.

This morning, the house occupied by Lew Rohm, north of town on the Waterloo road, between Mr. Shull's and Cal. Husselman's, caught fire, and was burned to the ground. The contents generally, were saved except the cook stove. It caught as is supposed from a defective flue. The building belonged to Mr. Husselman and he at once started out to get lumber and material for a new one, and we presume the work is already started. It don't take Cal. long to get a thing started. There was no insurance.

Four Years Old.

Saturday's Daily.

Today, the Daily COURIER is four years old, its first number having been issued March 4, 1895. We had contemplated starting a daily for some time, but feeling there was a deal of risk to run and that the proper support of a daily would in a town the size of Auburn, require the substantial backing of its citizens, we hesitated for a time. But, finally, urged by leading business men and citizens, we begun its publication, and started Auburn's first daily paper. It has been well received and sustained, at least as well as we had expected. Its hold on popular favor is shown by the list of names which includes the best citizens of Auburn. And the size of our list has been well maintained, and its average today, is greater than at any other time, except when the county trials were on, and also a few weeks in the Spanish war. It is now increasing. To all our patrons, we wish to express thanks for constant support. We have given you a clean, reliable paper and the cream of the local news. This we shall continue to do, and so we enter on our fifth year with bright prospects and a full confidence in the future of the Daily COURIER.

Resources of Alaska

(Fort Wayne Sentinel)

A resident of Alaska for twenty-one years, Gov. John G. Brady, says that i the people of the territor had nothing but what is taken from the sea, they would be richer than the inhabitants of northern Europe. The value of Alaskan fish products last year was $4,000,000, and the total since the purchase by the United States is $67,000,000. Bass, red snappers, flounders, crabs and clams are plentiful and the cod, balibut and herring have hardly been touched. Heavy forests of spruce, red and yellow cedar and hemlock extend for 650 miles along the coast. Barley, oats, flax and hardy vegetables mature perfectly. Stock cattle, horses and poultry flourish. Grass is abundant, and in time Alaska should export butter and cheese. Copper, coal and iron are found in large quantities, and traces of gold are widely distributed. The territory for which the United States paid $7,200,000 is worth hundreds of millions, and its possession has not in the slightest degree been a national embarrassment.

—Before the discovery of One Minute Cough Cure, ministers were greatly disturbed by coughing congregations. No excuse for it now. Fischler & Son and H. B. McCord.

Thursday's Daily.

—I. N. Hadsell, of St. Joe transacted business in the city today.

—Mrs. Henderson, of Spencerville is visiting relatives in the city.

—Miss Lulu Rempis of Waterloo is a guest of the COURIER family.

—D. S. Ober is still improving. We hope to hear of his final recovery.

—The Pope, who was believed to be in a critical condition, is improving.

—Rudyard Kipling, the author, who had been dangerously ill, is getting better.

—The Dispatch took out that "newspaper law" pretty promptly, border and all.

—Read our letter from H. C. Shull in Kentucky. It contains abundant information.

B. F. Fretz, of Rochester, arrived here today, to attend the funeral of his mother tomorrow.

—Surveyors began on the electric line yesterday, at the Steuben line, and are coming south.

—As will be seen by a marriage notice we publish Rev. Henry Arlen is starting out in business nicely. He is making an excellent impression on our people no matter where he meets them. And all are pleased with his sermons.

—MARRIED:—At six o'clock last evening, March 1st, at the residence of M. E. Griswold on North Main st., Daniel J. Richard of Fort Wayne and Miss Ethel Jeffries of Allen county, Indiana. Rev. Henry Arlen officiating.

—Mr. and Mrs. B. N. Wilson were called to North Fairfield, Ohio, last night by the sudden death of Mrs. Wilson's father, Mr. Beldin. Mr. Beldin had many friends here having spent last year here with his daughter. He has been a sufferer for a number of years.

—Mrs. S. S. Potter has read every issue of the Daily COURIER during its four years, except one day. This means over 1,240 papers. We compliment her good judgment and friendship. We have a large number of names that have been on our list from the first day, March 4, 1895.

—The Dispatch had yesterday nine and one half inches written up of the Dutton murder examination. The COURIER had 42½ inches of the same. We trust all COURIER subscribers will lend yesterday's paper to any unfortunate neighbor, who wants to read a full account of this terrible tragedy. As usual, it is found only in the COURIER.

—G. S. McCord, being called on to take charge of the funeral of Mrs. Fretz near Sedan, at 11 a. m, tomorrow, and of the funeral of Mrs. Frick at 2 p. m. found himself obliged to get help. Wm. Ettinger of Waterloo will be called in to take charge of the latter. It would be a good plan for people to consult the undertaker before fixing the date of a funeral.

—Geo. W. Kirkpatrick was here to day on matters relating to the guardianship of his niece, Bertha Kirkpatrick, now living at San Diego California. She is the daughter of Francis Kirkpatrick who died several years ago when she was a child. Her mother is a daughter of Aaron Ober, and several year ago she moved to Anderson Co., Kansas, and about two years ago to San Diego.

—Dr. Broughton was here yesterday from Waterloo. He says they will have a meeting soon, to talk up the proposed hospital. He is enthusiastic as to the benefits of such an institution, both to the unfortunate patients, and to the members of the medical profession. We believe now it will be accomplished and the trend of public opinion indicates Auburn as the location. The COURIER, as usual, takes the lead in any available improvement in Auburn.

—Rev. J. D. Brosy and Rev. Geo. Engelman were called over to Garrett yesterday to officiate at the funeral of Mrs. Bert Seydell. The services were at the Reformed church there, the sermon in English being by Mr. Brosy, and in German by Mr. Engelman. The interment was at the cemetery of Union Chapel northwest of Garrett. Mr. Seydel, we believe is a brother of Mrs. Wm. Sheffer of this place. The family is well known and highly respected and the bereaved relatives have the sympathy of all.

—Indianapolis Sun:—You may talk about Ananias, but the country editor who told these stories puts that individual to shame. In one place he gives an account of a woman who left a lamp burning in the kitchen all night and tried to blow it out next morning, but couldn't, as the blaze was frozen. She broke it off and threw it in the woodshed. It thawed out, the next day, and set the building on fire. The other one is about a Montgomery township man who took a dozen drinks at Fort Branch, and on the way home his breath froze in chunks. He put them in a bucket, and when he got home melted them and had a "quart of pretty fair whisky."

Dewey has been made full admiral. The only naval heroes to receive this title were Farragut and Porter. Our other admirals are vice admirals, and then rear admirals, and there they have generally had to stop.

—There was a surprise on Wm. Bailey last evening by the people of the church of God and the neighbors, that being his 34th birthday. They had a fine time, including an abundance of candy, popcorn and cigars. Mr. Bailey was presented a fine rocker and other testimonials of esteem.

—I. O. Bachtel has suffered for several days with the earache, or some similar trouble. It became almost unbearable and he got no rest night or day, till by means of hot applications, it was developed into a bad gathering. Dr. Swarts opened this, and he was at once relieved though his face and eyes still show evidence of the suffering he passed through.

—For frost bites, burns, indolent sores eczema, skin disease, and especially Piles, DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve stands first and best. Look out for dishonest people who try to immitate and counterfeit it. It's their endorsement of a good article. Worthless goods are not imitated. Get DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. Fischler & Son and H B. McCord.

—It pays to advertise in the COURIER. Today Mr. Gabriel lost a bunch of keys, and sent a "lost" notice to the COURIER. The item was just being taken by the compositor and had begun to feel the subtle influence of the COURIER advertising forces, when Mr. Gabriel telephoned in that we had done enough. We might turn off the influence. He had found the keys.

—Geo. D Weaver who lives one and a half miles north of town on the Ashley road, will have a sale of his personal property and farm implements on Friday March 17, beginning at 10 a. m. Don't forget the date.

—J. Sheer, Sedalia, Mo, conductor on electric street car line, writes that his little daughter was very low with the croup, and her life saved after physicians had failed, only by using One Minute Cough Cure. Fischler & Son and H. B. McCord.

—During the recent bad roads, when the ground was freezing between the spokes on the wheels, one of our town teamsters weighed his wagon. It showed 1960 pounds, but its weight at other times was 1000 pounds. He was hauling 960 pounds of mud. Now let us have good roads.

—Laporte is up in arms against the new law that gives the county a "superior court" at Michigan City. As the county is already a circuit by itself, and as the new law will give the county two judges, with two court houses and other expenses doubled, it looks like a foolish law.

Chance for Office.

The new township law gives Judge Hartman the selection of a lot of new officers. He must appoint three in each of our fourteen townships, or 42 in all. Two of them will be of one political faith, republican probably in this case, and the third one a democrat Then he will have to appoint the seven men on the county council, thus giving him the appointment of 49 new officers in DeKalb county. We will all be officers shortly if this thing keeps on

The township officers receive $5 a year or $210 for all. The county officials get $10 a year, or $70 for the seven. This adds a salary list of $280 on the county. If good results, the extra expense will not be felt. If no good results, taxpayers will have a right to kick.

INCURABLE DISEASES

Many diseases considered incurable are catarrh under other names. Simple catarrh in the head is called incurable. Consumption is catarrh of the lungs, and its victim is, no doubt, past help in the more advanced stages; but great numbers of people die of consumption needlessly. It is certain that every phase of catarrh, including many cases of consumption, are cured by the right treatment. Pe-ru-na, Dr. Hartman's great prescription, attacks catarrhal diseases scientifically and cures them. Dr. Hartman explains it fully in his books which are mailed on application. Here is a letter from Mrs. Harmening, Mazo Manie, Wis., who is one of many cured of consumption by Pe-ru-na. She says:

Pe-ru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, O.

DEAR SIRS:—"I cannot praise your remedy too highly. Last winter I had la grippe and hemorrhage of the lungs followed. All the doctors around here told me I had to die of consumption. Then I thought I would ask Dr. Hartman for advice, which I did. He prescribed Pe-ru-na for me, and I took it according to his directions and was cured. I advise everybody that is troubled with lung disease to take Dr. Hartman's treatment. I am sure they will not regret it if they do. I am now enjoying good health, and can thank Pe-ru-na for it."

Resources of Alaska

(Fort Wayne Sentinel)

A resident of Alaska for twenty-one years, Gov. John G. Brady, says that if the people of the territor had nothing but what is taken from the sea they would be richer than the inhabitants of northern Europe. The value of Alaskan fish products last year was $4,000,000, and the total since the purchase by the United States is $67,000,000. Bass, red snappers, flounders, crabs and clams are plentiful and the cod, halibut and herring have hardly been touched. Heavy forests of spruce, red and yellow cedar and hemlock extend for 650 miles along the coast. Barley, oats, flax and hardy vegetables mature perfectly. Stock cattle, horses and poultry flourish. Grass is abundant, and in time Alaska should export butter and cheese. Copper, coal and iron are found in large quantities, and traces of gold are widely distributed. The territory for which the United States paid $7,200,000 is worth hundreds of millions, and its possession has not in the slightest degree been a national embarrassment.

The Best Salve in the World.

John Gilbert, in his cell in the county jail there, confessed to brutally murdering his wife and four small children near Enterprise, Kan. When Gilbert, for whom a reward had been offered, was arrested he feigned not to know of the crime, and at first shammed insanity. Finally, hard pressed by Sheriff O'Connor, Gilbert confessed the crime, going into details. Gilbert said he was badly in debt and had been trying to leave Enterprise for a long time. He could not take his family, he said, and offered his wife a divorce. "She kept nagging me about the children," said Gilbert. "I told my wife if she would give me $10 I'd leave and never bother her any more. During the night I got up and went out into the yard. Coming back, I picked up the hammer and hit the baby in the head. My wife ran out into the road and was going over to the neighbor's. I ran after and caught her. She said she'd come back if I'd behave, and I thought I would then. But when we got in, why, the baby was thrashing about on the bed, and when I saw it I couldn't hold myself, but hit my wife on the head and pounded her till she couldn't move, and then I killed the children."

Nearly Killed by Safe Robbers.

As a result of an encounter with two burglars, whom he surprised while they were attempting to crack a safe in the office of Scannell & Woley at Lowell, Mass., Officer John F. Healy is suffering from three bullet wounds and a terribly battered head. Healy had just reached Scannell & Woley's, when a man suddenly shoved a revolver in his face. Officer Healy reached for his own revolver and as he did so the burglar fired, but the bullet went wide. The officer's weapon refused to act. The burglar fired again, the shot taking effect in the officer's left leg. Healy threw aside his revolver and, with his night stick, felled the burglar. This blow, however, did not incapacitate the man, and when the officer jumped on him a desperate struggle ensued. Almost immediately a man came out of the office and fired three times, two shots taking effect in the officer's body. The second man drew a slungshot and struck Healy over the head. The burglars relieved Healy of his handcuffs, club, revolver, watch and $50. They then made their escape.

Rescued After a Rough Experience.

William Davis has at last succeeded in reaching Norfolk, Va., aboard his sloop yacht Nellie. He started from Norfolk for Cuba with a crew of four and a party of sportsmen aboard. The blizzard caught them at Harbor Island and the 80-mile gale scared the crew into semi-mutiny and they declared they would go no further. One of the crew attempted to get ashore on a sledge made of bed slats. When about half-way to shore he broke through the ice, but at the peril of their lives Charley Rose of North Carolina and Mr. Green of the firm of Green & Pearson, Madison, N. J., who were of the Nellie's party, managed to get him ashore. The rest of the crew succeeded in getting ashore, but the captain remained aboard. Meantime the blizzard had increased in violence and the Nellie was blown out to sea. The sufferings of Capt. Davis were terrible. He finally succeeded in reaching Hog Island, where he was cared for and from whence he made his way to Norfolk.

LIBERAL BRANCH THE VICTOR.

Court Rules Between Factions of the United Brethren Church.

The United States Court of Appeals at Cincinnati rendered a decision involving the title to the large publishing house at Dayton, numerous colleges and thousands of churches held in the name of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ. The case grew out of a division in this church many years ago, since which time one division has been known as the liberals and the other as the radicals. The decision rendered by Judge Lurton was from a unanimous court and it sustained Judge Taft in giving the property to the liberals as against the radicals. It is stated by the liberals that they have been compelled to spend about $20,000 in defending these suits from the radicals for church property in different States. In some of the States decisions have been rendered in favor of the radicals, but the decision by a Federal court of final jurisdiction in such cases ends this litigation, which has been going on all over the country for almost ten years.

NEW INDIANA LAWS.

MOST IMPORTANT PRODUCT OF SIXTY DAYS' LEGISLATION.

The General Assembly Writes Many Good Laws Upon the Statute Books of the State—Busy Session Without Junkets or Parliamentary Delays.

Indianapolis correspondence:

The Legislature which completed its work recently was so attentive to business during the session that there was no hurry during the last days of the session. Few law-making bodies have adopted laws from which greater benefit has been expected. The reform measures are specially important to the whole State, as they completely change the methods of county and township governments. Many measures of great importance have been considered. The usual number of inconsequential bills cumbered the dockets of both bodies and the committees. It may be added that the Legislature has been impressed with the responsibility devolving upon it. It has indulged in no junkets and no day has been wasted for lack of a quorum.

The Sixty-first General Assembly passed county and township council bills after a hard fight. The councils are intended to govern the tax levies and to supervise the expenditure of public money. The power of the township trustee is restricted by the township council, and of the county commissioners and county officers by the county council. A source of great money waste has been the building of bridges by county commissioners. Some of the boards have let contracts without competitive bidding and under cover. One of the laws enacted requires specifications to be on file a certain time, open to all bidders and the public. Hereafter the public is bound to know what is being done. Another law compels county auditors to publish statements of all allowances made by judges or county commissioners.

Other laws relating to township government and of special interest to the farmer, provide for the election of road supervisor by the people instead of allowing the trustee to appoint. This was done to remove the temptation of the trustee to select a good friend, to the detriment of good roads. Another important road law amendment provides that land owners shall be allowed $1.25 a mile to cut weeds and brush by the roadside. Hitherto they have been allowed $1.25 a day and in some places the road fund was consumed by lazy workers, who required several days to clear the road of weeds and briers. Still another law compels land owners to mow weeds and brush along partition fences. This will do away with the condition of one side "clean" and the other "dirty." Another law does away with the appointment of road superintendents by the county commissioners. The work of the superintendents is to be done by the road supervisors in their respective districts.

Southern Indiana farmers took a decided interest in seeing the commercial fertilizer law enacted. For some years worthless material has been marketed for manure. The law makes the professor of chemistry at Purdue analyze all fertilizers before they may be sold.

Pre-eminent as the law which labor interests expect to redound to their welfare is that of Senator Hugg regarding contributory negligence. Heretofore in Indiana when an employe's leg was cut off on a railroad, before he could secure damages he must prove that the railroad was guilty of negligence, and also that he himself was not negligent. The old law put a double burden on the laborer. Now the corporation must show that it was not negligent, and if such was the case, that the laborer was to blame.

The powers of the factory inspector were enlarged and a department of inspection was created. Henceforth there will be closer supervision in small factories. Fire escapes are made necessary in certain public buildings and factories.

A radical change in the tax law in which owners of small homes are especially interested is the $700 exemption of mortgage indebtedness. It is intended to throw the tax on the mortgage holder entirely, for it provides that, in order to get the exemption, the mortgage holder must be named. The $700 exemption will be taken advantage of by everybody and a radical change in the tax duplicates is expected. Some hidden mortgages will be unearthed, but holders of mortgages of Indiana property who live outside the State will escape, and much property will go untaxed. The effect of the law cannot be definitely stated. The Governor deposited it with the Secretary of State without his approval.

The anti-convict labor law of 1897 was modified at the State prison and the public account system will be inaugurated. The change was agreed to by representatives of organized labor, although in some sections of the State labor cried out against it.

Weekly payment of wages is made compulsory, and it is made unlawful for an employer to assess a fine against an employe. The assignment of wages is prohibited. This law is expected to put a stop to abuses in the gas belt and in the mining districts. It does not apply to common carriers or to employes in interstate commerce.

Some marked changes were made in the laws governing public school education, most of them in the line of the Geeting bill, which was defeated in 1897 because of opposition from the sectarian colleges. Under the township high school law, high school privileges will be extended to the farmers' children where there are fifteen students in a township asking for high school instruction. Then there is the law making educational requirements for the county school superintendents, and still another giving the applicant for teacher's license the right to send manuscript to the State school superintendent for examination, and, if license is granted, to teach in any county of the State without further examination.

Aside from the county and township reform bill, the assembly was worked up to the highest pitch over the reorganization of the State Board of Education. Party lines were cast aside. The sectarian colleges demanded that the presidents of the three State colleges be taken off the board, and in their stead be placed appointees of the Governor, while the State Teachers' Association and the State Board of Education resisted this, and secured a reorganization which adds to the present board three members, one to be a county school superintendent and the other two citizens, possibly representatives of some of the sectarian colleges, the three to be appointed by the Governor. While this is not all that was demanded by church schools, it is predicted that the additions to the board will be of their party, and will make known the alleged shortcomings of the State college presidents, or, rather, their system, and that the fight will hardly be renewed in 1901.

The compulsory education law was amended to reduce the number of truant officers and to exempt from its provisions children of 13 and 14 having regular employment and being dependent upon it for their own or their parents' living. Many legislators were anxious to repeal the entire law.

Another change in the school law provides that all contracts between teacher and school corporation shall be written. Township trustees have been in the habit of making verbal contracts. Still more important is the law regarding transfer of school children from one corporation to another, providing that trustees shall pay $1.50 a month tuition for the grades and $3 a month for high school. This law is intended to stop indiscriminate transfers. When a child leaves his corporation to attend school in another, the trustee must pay for it. Another law authorizes Kosciusko County to vote a levy to assist in building a school at Winona.

An anti-lynch law was finally enacted, much as the Governor and Attorney General recommended, with the exception that the $5,000 damages recoverable by the relative against the county was stricken out. The first bill was killed containing this provision. The law places a great burden on the Sheriff for letting a prisoner get out of his custody, removing him from office. Arrests may be made on the filing of information. Along the same line was a law allowing county commissioners to give a $500 reward for the capture of an escaped murderer or lyncher.

A source of great benefit to the State may be the law allowing the Attorney General to prosecute in the name of the State for an injunction without giving bond. This power can be used against gas waste or against bold breaking of the gambling laws.

The commissioner of fisheries was made the commissioner of game also, and constabulary power was given his deputies when they find violations of the law with their own eyes. A law was enacted preventing the pollution of streams and the killing of fish by dumping strawboard refuse and such like into them.

The powers of the State Board of Health were increased over county health officers and $6,000 was appropriated to be used as the board sees fit to suppress contagious diseases. A pure food law was passed.

The pharmacists were placed under a State board which licenses them, and unlicensed druggists or storekeepers are only permitted to sell certain medicines specified in the law.

A State entomologist was created to fight San Jose scale and other pests in our orchards.

County boards of charities were created to consist of six persons to serve without salary, not over four to be men. They oversee county charities and are amenable to the State Board of Charities.

The principal modifications of the election law are that voting machines are authorized and men who sell their votes or for money refuse to vote may be disfranchised for ten years. Also any political party may have one challenger and one poll-book holder at the polls.

Aside from Indianapolis street car legislation, the principal law and the only one of general import in a street railroad way, requires the heating of cars from November to March.

Insurance legislation was enacted to make it possible for companies to organize under Indiana laws and be on as solid a financial footing as Eastern companies. The tendency of all the insurance laws was to put companies more nearly under the supervision of the State Auditor and to require them to deposit with the auditor good securities.

In the way of fees and salaries of county officers the principal change was putting commissioners on salaries instead of per diem. The next General Assembly was anticipated by the passage of a law creating a commission of three persons who are to study fees and salaries between now and 1901 and report to the Assembly changes needed in various counties.

There has been no temperance legislation, though a great fight was made to stop drug store liquor selling. One anti-trust bill became a law. It is said to be directed principally at the trust of plumbers' supply houses. The Winsfield trust bill was postponed. Efforts to reduce railroad fare failed. Large appropriations were made to build additional room at the insane hospitals and the Jeffersonville reformatory. The insane in jails and poor farms will be cared for.

Children's Cast-Off Clothing.

While great quantities of men's second-hand clothing are sold, there is proportionately but very little children's second-hand clothing. The small boy is likely to wear his clothes more than a man does his clothes to begin with. It would not, for example, pay a dealer to buy, to sell again as clothing, a pair of boy's trousers that had to be patched. New trousers can now be bought so cheap that the price that could be got for the patched second-hand ones wouldn't pay for the handling, and the work of repairing. It does pay, however, to repair men's trousers that need patching, for there are always to be found for these purchasers at prices that yield some profit.

But while children's second-hand clothing is rarely seen hanging about with the men's clothing in second-hand stores, all dealers will buy it when it is in good or fair condition, and there are some dealers that make a specialty of it, and seek fine clothing that has been cast off when but little worn. There are customers for the comparatively limited supply of children's second-hand clothing that is offered.

Quite Safe There.

A quaint-looking member of the Quaker persuasion recently administered the following apt rebuke to a certain country parson more celebrated for his passionate love of fox-hunting than for his pulpit powers.

"Friend, thou'rt clever at fox-hunting, I believe?"

"There are few men in the countryside who can excel me at the sport," observed the parson, proudly.

"Nevertheless, friend, if I were a fox I would hide where thou wouldst never find me."

"Pray where would you hide, sir?" was the interested query.

"I would hide in thy study, friend."

Enjoyed Herself.

My friend's colored maid came in one day after her regular weekly outing, looking as if she had enjoyed herself.

"Well, Susan," said my friend, who is sympathetic, "I suppose you saw all the pretty things in the stores down town?"

"No'm; not 'zactly. I ben lookin' at de handiwork ob de Lawd."

"Indeed? So you took a little trip to the country to see the fields and flowers?"

"No'm; no, indeedy. I ben at de dime museum. They has a hairy boy there and a two-headed man."—Lippincott's Magazine.

In Paris a young woman drove to the Bois, alighted from her coupe, seized her coachman's whip and advanced before an eager crowd to administer a whipping to a journalist who had not flattered her vanity. The journalist caught the whip, broke it, and lifting the fair one in his arms covered her with kisses. Then he went and wrote it up.

CONGRESS

In the House on Thursday two public building bills attached by the Senate to bills for public buildings in other cities were agreed to, one appropriating $250,000 for a building at Los Angeles, Cal., and the other $75,000 for a building at New Brighton, Pa. A number of conference reports on minor bills were adopted. Mr. Payne (Rep., N. Y.), the floor leader of the majority, moved the passage, under suspension of the rules, of the bill appropriating $500,000 for the Pan-American exposition to be held at Buffalo, N. Y., in 1901. The bill was passed, 141 to 16. Mr. Southard followed this motion with a motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill to appropriate $500,000 for the Ohio centennial exposition to be held at Toledo. The bill was passed, 120 to 19. Mr. Mercer (Rep., Neb.) moved to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill appropriating $1,000,000 for a new building for the department of justice in Washington. At Mr. Cannon's request an amendment was adopted limiting the cost of the building to $1,000,000, and as amended the bill was passed. During almost the entire session the Senate was engaged in routine business. Three score or more of minor bills were passed, the calendar being cleared entirely of private pension bills and of measures correcting military and naval records. Two measures of national importance were passed—the fortifications appropriation bill and the bill providing a code of criminal laws for the district of Alaska.

Friday was the last day of the congressional session. Sessions in both houses were prolonged through Friday night. During the day the army bill brought Senator Foraker to the front with his amendment to prohibit the granting of franchises in Cuba and led to debate participated in by half the Senators on the floor. The overwhelming vote by which the amendment was passed after the provision for the withdrawal of the troops had been stricken out indicated a decided opinion that will have weight in the labors of the colonial board. The bill was passed as amended. The river and harbor bill from conference led to filibustering, headed by Senator Carter, to secure an appropriation for irrigating the arid west and threatened the passage of the bill. There was considerable debate on the sundry civil bill, which was finally passed. A bill providing for a Government exhibit at and to encourage the Ohio centennial and northwest territory exposition to be held at Toledo, Ohio, and appropriating $500,000, was passed. The following bills were passed: To incorporate the National White Cross of America, amending the internal revenue laws relating to distilled spirits, authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee river at Sheffield, Ala.; authorizing the Washington and Gettysburg Railroad Company of Maryland to extend its line of road into the District of Columbia. A bill providing a site for the Washington public library building. In the House the army bill was passed with all the Senate amendments.

STATE LAW MAKERS.

The Senate bill for the reorganization of the State Board of Education by the appointment of three additional members of the board by the Governor, one of whom shall be a county superintendent of schools, passed the house on Friday. It ends a five years' fight between the State and non-State colleges. The Winfield anti-trust bill, which passed the Senate two weeks ago, was killed by the House. This action makes it impossible to enact any anti-trust law this session. The Governor signed the bill to reorganize the present system of county government by providing for the establishment of county councils, also the bill to authorize machine voting and the bill to enable the city of Indianapolis to grant a new street railway franchise.

Both houses spent Saturday mostly in passing humorous resolutions. Very little business remained for this session. The Noel anti-lynching bill passed the Senate. It provides that lynchers may be prosecuted on information, and declares that when a prisoner is taken from a sheriff and lynched it shall be prima-facie evidence that the sheriff was negligent, and proceedings to remove him from office may be brought by the Attorney General. The Glossbrenner primary election bill was killed in the Senate.

The sixty-first session of the Legislature came to an end at 9 o'clock Monday night. The bill for general and specific appropriations for State purposes was signed by the Governor at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. During the day the Governor's veto of the bill to pay the claim of the Vincennes University, amounting to $120,000, was sustained by the Senate, the body in which the bill originated. A long telegram was received from the Legislature of Texas expressing its appreciation of the action of the Indiana body in directing the return of a flag captured from the "Texas rangers" during the civil war.

The Assembly adjourned with the legislators in both houses singing "America" and playing jokes upon each other in the happiest manner possible. The total appropriations for the main institutions are approximately as follows:

WEEDS.

We call them weeds, the while, with slender fingers,
Earth's wounds and scars they seek to cover o'er;
On sterile sands, where scarce the raindrop lingers,
They grow and blossom by the briny shore.

We call them weeds; did we their form but study,
We many a secret might unfolded find;
Each tiny plant fulfills its heaven-taught mission,
And bears the impress of Immortal Mind.

We call them weeds; the while their uses hidden
Might work a nation's weal, a nation's woe;
Send thro' each wasted frame the balm of healing,
And cause the blood with youth's quick pulse to flow.

Weeds—yet they hold in bonds the mighty ocean;
Their slender threads bind firm the sandy shore.
Navies may sink amid its wild commotion;
These humble weeds ne'er their work give o'er.

And who shall say the feeblest thought avails not
To bind the shifting sands upon life's beach?
Some heart may treasure what we've long forgot,
The faintest word some soul with power may reach.

STOPPED IN TIME.

At the time of which I am writing I was living in seclusion in a small town about 35 miles north of London. I was engaged in rather a large literary undertaking—in fact, I was writing a novel. So engrossed was I with my task that I had no time to read even the newspaper and was quite ignorant of what was going on in the world. It was a little after 8 o'clock one evening in April that I finished the second volume of my work. I put on my hat and coat and started off for an evening stroll. I had no sooner stepped into the street than a boy accosted me with a bundle of papers under his arm and the request, "Buy an evening paper, sir?" I bought one, put it in my pocket and resumed my walk.

After my return I opened my paper leisurely—nay, lazily. Presently my eye caught the following paragraph heading, "Impending Execution of the Clinford Murderer."

There is a morbid fascination for most people in an execution, and so, yielding to the feeling, I proceeded to read the paragraph:

"The murderer of the unfortunate James Renfrew will be hanged tomorrow morning at 8 o'clock. The wretched man, whose name—Charles Fenthurst—is now in everybody's mouth, still persists in his plea of innocence."

Here I became deeply interested. The name Fenthurst was most familiar to me. I had formed a deep friendship for a man of that name. He was a good 15 years my senior and had died about two years previously. I knew he had a son named Charles, a young fellow who had emigrated to South Africa early in life and who was generally supposed to be working at the diamond mines. Could this be the same man? I read on.

"It will be remembered that at the trial the stronges circumstantial evidence was brought to bear upon Fenthurst. The murder took place in a house on the outskirts of the small town of Clinfold. It was proved that Fenthurst was in the habit of frequenting Renfrew's premises, and that apparently he was expected on the evening in question. He was seen near the place soon after the crime was committed, and several other proofs of a strongly condemnatory character were also laid against him. He has persisted from the first, however, in maintaining that he was absent from Clinfold at the very time the murder took place. This was about seven o'clock in the evening. At that hour, he says, he was returning from London, where he had been spending part of the day. Only one witness, he says, could prove this, and that is an individual who travelled with him as far as P— and entered into conversation with him. Advertisements have been inserted in all the papers by Fenthurst's legal advisers, for the purpose of discovering the individual in question, but as no answer has been forthcoming, it is generally believed that the whole story is a myth. At any rate there seems but small chance of the alibi being proved at the last moment. The murder was committed February 6. Since his condemnation the murderer has been confined in Silkminster jail, where the execution will take place."

Astonishment and dismay confronted me as I laid down the paper. I was the missing witness they had so vainly sought. I distinctly remembered early in February, running up to town rather late in the afternoon, spending just half an hour there, and returning by the first train I could catch. My landlady didn't even know but that I had been out for a longer walk than usual. I had entered into conversation on the return journey with the only other occupant of the compartment, a young man with a small black bag on which were painted the letters "C. F." I remembered all this distinctly. In order to make sure I snatched up my dairy and quickly turned to the date of the murder, February 6. There was the entry: "Ran up to town this afternoon. Inquired concerning material for chapter 7. Saw B— for half hour. Returned by 6:42 train."

The horror of the situation now flashed upon me. A man's life—the life of an old friend's son—depended upon me. I looked at my watch. It was just 11 o'clock. Hurriedly I dragged on my boots, thinking the while what I should do. My first impulse was to rush to the telegraph office. Then, with dismay, I remembered that it was shut for the night after 8 o'clock and that the postmaster took the 8:30 train to the large town of F—, about five miles off, where he lived, leaving the office for the night in the charge of a care taker, and returning by an early train the next morning.

It was impossible to telegraph. Then I thought of going to the police (there were just two constables and a sergeant in our little town), but what could they do more than I? Country police are proverbial for the leisurely "routine" manner in which they set about the inquiry and it would never do to trust to them. I was in despair.

Madly I threw on my hat and rushed out. I ran in a mechanical way to the post office. Of course it was shut, and if I had aroused the care taker he could not have wired. Besides, all our wires sent first to F—, and, as I have said, all communication was shut off after 8 o'clock. Then I started for the railway station. This was about half a mile from the post office and well outside the town. As I hurried along I thought, with fresh dismay, that this would also prove a fruitless errand, for the last train to Silkminster was the 8:30 p. m., by which I have mentioned, the postmaster always travelled nearly 150 miles down the line.

Should I wait till the morning and telegraph? I remembered that the office did not open till 8 o'clock. I had by this time reached the station. Of course it was all shut up and all the lights were out except those in the signal lamps for the night express. It was now half past eleven. Was there no hope?

At this moment my eye caught a light in the signal box, about a quarter of a mile up the line. I could see the signalman in his box, the outline of his figure standing out against the light within. I looked at my watch. The down express from London was almost due. I would make a rush for that signal box and compel the occupant to put the signal against it and stop it. It was a desperate game, but only get that train to stop for an instant and all would be right. By getting into it I could reach Silkminster in the early morning, and what cared I for any action the company might take if I saved my friend's son? If the signalman refused to pull back the levers the strength born of desperation would enable me to master him and then relax them myself. All this flashed across me in an instant, and I clambered over the railings on the side of the station and found myself on the line.

Even as I reached the rail the semaphore signal that was near me let fall its arm, and the red light changed into a brilliant green. The express was signalled. Would there be time? I dashed along over the rough sleepers towards the signal box. It was very dark, and I stumbled over and over again. I had cleared half the distance when I heard the omnious roar ahead, and in a few seconds could distinguish the distant glitter of the engine's head lamp bearing toward me. The train was just over a mile from me, rushing on at express speed. With a groan I ejaculated, "Too late!"

At that instant my eye fell upon a ghastly looking structure by the side of the track, looming grimly through the darkness. It resembled a one-armed gallows with a man hanging from it! For a moment I thought it must have been a fearful fancy conjured up by the thought of Fenthurst's dreadful fate, but immediately I remembered that this strange looking apparition was none other than a small mailbag suspended from a post—in fact, part of the apparatus by which a train going at full speed picks up the mails. The express train that was coming had a postal car attached to it. From the side of the car a strong rope would be laid out, catching the bag I saw suspended before me.

A mad and desperate idea took possession of me. Fortunately I am a small man. The bag hung just over my head. I jumped at it, seized it, drew myself up parallel with it, held it firmly at the top, where it swung by a hook, and drew my legs up so as to present as small a compass as possible. Then I waited. It was but a few seconds, but it seemed hours. I heard the roar of the approaching train. Then the engine dashed past me. There was a whir and a rush, and all was dark.

When I came to my senses I was lying on the floor of the postal van. Two men in their shirt sleeves were busily engaged in sorting letters at a rack. I felt bruised and stiff all over, and I found that my left arm was bound in a sling made out of a handkerchief.

"Where are we?" I asked.

They turned around.

"Oh, you've come to, have you?" said one of them. "Now perhaps you'll give an account of yourself. Its precious lucky you're here at all, let me tell you, for if you had been a taller man we should only have got part of you in the net. As it is, you've got your collar bone broken. We've tied it up a bit."

I told them the motive that had prompted me to take the desperate step I had done. They piled a quantity of mail bags on the floor and made me a rough shakedown.

A little after three we drew up at Silkminster station. There was a policeman on the platform, and I at once told my story to him, the result being that we drove around to the jail and insisted upon seeing the governor. Of course he was deeply interested in what I had to tell them and at once made arrangements to stop the execution. The home secretary was communicated with by means of special wire. Fortunately he happened to be in town, and after a couple of hours of anxious suspense a reprieve was received from him.

"Well," said the governor, "I don't know which I ought to congratulate most, Mr. Fenthurst or yourself, for you have both had a most narrow escape."

Little remains to be told. I soon identified the condemned man as the person whom I had met on the train. He also turned out to be the son of my old friend, as I had fully expected. After the due formalities he was discharged. Suspicion having strongly attached itself to his name, however, until about a fortnight afterward the real murderer was discovered and captured. Charles Fenthurst and myself became firm friends and although I was fearfully shaken and upset for a few weeks after this adventure I never regretted the night on which I was picked up with the mails.—Strand Magazine.

HUGE BEAR-TRAP DAM

MIGHTY CONTROLLER FOR CHICAGO DRAINAGE DITCH.

Great Dam and System of Sluice Gates Through Which the Water from the Canal Will Pass Into the Desplaines—Remarkable Engineering Feat.

At Lockport, Ill., the great drainage channel ends. There the mighty cut which, beginning near the Bridgeport pumping station at Chicago, extends twenty-eight miles through earth and rock terminates in a solid concrete wall six feet thick at its smallest dimension and backed up by thousands of tons of broken stone blasted from the channel and dumped behind this imperishable barrier. When the channel is completed and the water of the river turned into it were a man to start in a rowboat at the upper end of the channel and let the current carry his craft down stream the nose of his boat would at Lockport bump into this solid wall. It is set directly across the end of the channel, which at that point becomes a basin almost 500 feet wide.

On the north bank of the channel at its terminus is the greatest piece of engineering in the whole gigantic work. This is the "controlling works," the system of sluice gates and the dam through which the waters of the channel will pass into the Desplaines River. For the big drainage canal will not empty into the Desplaines as one river empties into another, or as the Chicago River now flows into the lake at times, simply by a junction of their channels. Every gallon of the water from the channel will pass through the immense "controller," the gates and dam by which the sanitary district can regulate the flow of the channel. It would not do for the trustees to cut their new channel through to the bank of the Desplaines and turn the water in to take care of itself. When the Desplaines is at flood in the spring there would be oceans of trouble were the waters of the channel uncontrolled. Besides all that, the law under which the sanitary district trustees are operating requires them at all times to control the volume of water in the channel. It says that while the population of the sanitary district of Chicago is at its present stage, or approximately so, the channel shall carry 300,000 cubic feet of water a minute. When the population increases, as it will in the course of a score of years or less, to about double what it now is the channel must take care of 600,000 cubic feet of water a minute. It was constructed of sufficient capacity to fulfill the latter requirement when the time comes. Just now it is necessary therefore to control the flow and keep it down to 300,000 cubic feet a minute and this is the object of the controlling works.

The "Bear Trap."

While the seven mighty sluice gates through which a portion of the water will flow on its way to the "tail-race," as the junction with the Desplaines is termed, are remarkable and noteworthy as engineering feats, the feature of especial prominence and the one which stands alone at the controlling works is the "bear trap dam." It is not a bear trap at all. It is not any old kind of a trap. It is a dam with a movable crest, if you know what that is, and this in its general appearance suggests the old-fashioned dead-fall bear traps, with which Daniel Boone used to ensnare the luckless bruins when he wanted a new overcoat. The crest of this dam, which is 160 feet wide, by the way, twice as wide as any other bear trap dam in the world, is made of steel plates bolted together to form a floor, over which the water will pour on its way to the tail race. But that whole dam, weighing 1,000,000 pounds, can be raised seventeen feet by the efforts of two men, with the assistance of a little hydraulic power and a couple of counter weights weighing about 500,000 pounds each. When it will be desirable to check the flow of the channel into the Desplaines, owing to high water in the river, this dam can be raised gradually, reducing the flow from the channel until the desired height is reached. And this is the star feature of the controlling works. The operation of the sluice gates, which are thirty-two feet wide and closed by doors weighing twenty tons each, is ordinary and simple. The doors are raised or lowered by counter weights, according as the flow of the channel is to be raised or reduced. But the elevation of the entire crest of the dam is a matter requiring much more engineering skill.

The Largest Dam in the World.

This is the largest bear trap dam in the world. There is one in France, on the river Seine, and in this country there is one on the Monongahela River and two near the head waters of the Mississippi. But they resemble this only in the general idea that the crest of the dam, that is, the angle over which the water flows, can be elevated to control the flow of the water. Nothing so immense as this dam has ever been projected or so complete as the mechanism by which it is to be raised and lowered.

At each side of the dam a tower has been erected the top of which will be about fifteen feet above the surface of the water when the channel is in operation. In each of these towers an immense bucket of steel and iron weighing close to 500,000 pounds will be placed and the cylinder in which it rises and falls will be connected with the water by gates which can be opened and closed at the will of the operators. When it is necessary to raise the crest of the dam to check the flow of the water in the channel toward the river, as in case of a flood in the Desplaines or other emergency, the gates will be opened and the water in the immense cylinders which buoy up the heavy buckets will escape through a subterranean tunnel to the tail race. As the water descends the buckets will also slowly move downward and the crest of the bear trap dam will rise, gradually checking the torrent of water from the channel, which will be pouring over the dam into the tail race and thence into the Desplaines. At the same time, of course, the sluice gates will be lowered, decreasing the opening through which the water will be rushing and aiding the dam in keeping back the flood from the channel.

When the crest of the dam is at its normal height a foot of water will constantly pass over it, carrying all the floating matter swept down the stream by the current, logs, lumber, and the like, and in winter the ice, which will be broken up as it strikes the steel crest, and carried over a dam into the Desplaines. This is one of the principal needs of such a dam, for this floating matter would not pass through the sluice gates. The water at the gates passes under them and for a depth of a few inches from the surface is almost motionless while the current pours along underneath this "still water," which "runs deep." Of course, floating objects would remain at the surface and could not get through the gates without bobbing under the surface, passing through and reappearing on the surface on the other side. No log of wood or cake of ice could be induced to do this and therefore the dam is being constructed, for over that a current of water a foot deep will pour constantly bearing on its bosom all the flotsam and jetsam of the canal.

Behind the massive controlling works is a deep basin ending at the northern extremity in a high levee or bank. It is almost 600 feet wide and extends in a winding course to the Desplaines River, now twisting its way along a few hundred feet from the sluice gates. All this will be under water as soon as the channel is opened. This will be the "tail race" and into it the waters of the drainage ditch will be allowed to pass from the controlling works is as great volume as the officials desire. Of course the flow can be stopped entirely if need be by closing all the sluice gates and raising the bear trap dam to a point higher than the level of Lake Michigan. In short, through the movable dam and the gates the sanitary district absolutely controls the volume of water that will pass into the Desplaines by way of the tail race. A levee has been built by the trustees along the southern bank of the river just west of the controlling works which extends in a winding course toward the city of Joliet, the smoke of which can be seen five miles away from the big wall which ends the channel proper. It is designed to change the course of the Desplaines so that it will flow directly toward Joliet instead of aimlessly around the country.

Work on the controlling plant was started in 1896, when the sluice gates were begun and the first work on the bear trap dam, which is destined to become a famous piece of engineering, was started in June, 1897.

TALKS ON ADVERTISING

A correspondent of Printers' Ink sends the following to that journal:

West Union, Ia., has a population of 2,000. One of its progressive firms is the dry goods establishment of Thomas & Magner, the latter a young man with a training gained in selling goods for Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co., of Chicago. The writer called upon Mr. Magner recently, and found him engaged in preparing a 6-column advertisement to appear in each of the three county seat papers.

"I have noticed, Mr. Magner," said the writer, "that you are departing somewhat from the usual lines in country advertising. Do you find that the regular use of page ads is helping your business?"

"Well, yes," said Mr. Magner, "something is helping it, and I don't know what else to blame for it. We have been compelled to put on extra clerks this week, and still people have been kept waiting."

"What do you find to be the taking feature of your ads?"

"Prices," said Mr. Magner promptly. "Our advertising is all prices. We quote low figures on goods of known quality, and we set apart a certain hour of the day when we will sell a certain sort of goods at a cut price. We also have special sales, from a week to a month, at which we offer special inducements on special lines."

"Do you find that the trade resulting from this is largely confined to the special lines, or is it general?"

"General. We seldom sell a customer—especially a customer from a distance—only the goods used as a leader. It is my idea that when a farmer comes to town to buy dry goods he has a "little list' that has been in process for weeks, perhaps months. If we can induce him to come to our store, we check off the entire list."

"Then it is your opinion that the making of leaders is as good a plan in the country as in the city?"

"Better. We don't have swarms of bargain-hunters to contend with. A man doesn't hitch up and drive ten or fifteen miles to buy only a few yards of prints. But he does buy the prints."

SERVIAN WOMAN EXECUTED.

Convicted Murderess Placed Against a Wall and Shot.

The people of Servia have no objections to the infliction of capital punishment upon women; or, if they have objections, they were forced to swallow them when Mme. Jevrem was executed for murder recently. She was neither hanged nor placed in the electric chair. She was placed against a wall and shot.

This happened in a Servian village near Prokuplje. A Greek priest named Irie Jevrem had been killed. His wife and a peasant with whom she had become infatuated were found guilty and condemned to be shot. On the day of their fate the two culprits were taken to the public square and faced a firing squad of soldiers with loaded rifles. ehind the squad stood a huge mass of spectators from far and near.

The execution lacked no element of the dramatic. The man wept and lamented and begged for mercy. The woman was calm. The squad had made ready to fire, when an aid came dashing through the square on horseback. His coming merely prolonged the strain upon the two criminals. The man embraced his knees in the hope that he brought a pardon; the woman turned more pale, but was silent. Mercy it was, but only partial. The aid bore a reprive indeed, but only for the man. She begged her companion to remain with her to the end. But the fellow followed the guards away without even addressing one word of pity to the woman. And then—but is there any need to tell the rest?

A DRAMATIC EXECUTION.

A Natural Railway Tunnel.

One of the most remarkable tunnels in the world is the natural railway tunnel on the line of the South Atlantic and Ohio Railway, in Scott County, Virginia. The railway apparently, and in fact, enters a natural cave or grotto, and disappears in the heart of the mountain. The entrance to the cavern is about fifty feet square. Inside of it the railway runs through a series of chambers for about 1,500 feet, when it emerges from the other side of the mountain. The cave-tunnel is all in limestone. It serves not only as a natural railway tunnel, but also a channel for a small stream known as Stock Creek. Virginia also possesses a natural bridge over one of the affluents of the James River, about twenty-five miles northwest of Lynchburg, which is noted for its beauty.

ALONE THROUGH SIBERIA.

Gerard Fowke of Chillicothe, O., Returns from a Scientific Trip.

One of the most remarkable trips ever accomplished alone by a white man has just been completed by Gerard Fowke, the eminent scientist of Chillicothe, Ohio. The trip, which was through a portion of the interior to Siberia, was undertaken under the auspices of the American Museum of Natural History of New York City, and had for its object the discovery of traces of Asiatic emigration to this western hemisphere.

The American Museum of Natural History for a number of years has been sending out expeditions for the purpose of proving or disproving the theory that America was originally peopled from Asia; that the mound builders, the Indians and perhaps other races now extinct, crossed the Behring straits and made their way southward into the present territory of the United States. These expeditions have discovered traces of the mound builders northward through British Columbia, into Alaska and almost to the straits. It became necessary to take up the chain from the Asiatic side, follow it down the great Amoor river, around the Okhotch sea, through Tchuktch and to the straits.

Gerard Fowke was chosen to lead this expedition. For years he has been engaged in studying the remains left by the mound builders and he was admirably fitted for the task. The other members of the expedition were selected, but when the hour for departure came they did not appear and Mr. Fowke determined to make the trip alone.

He sailed to Yokohama and from there to Vladivostok, where he took the trans-Siberian railway for the interior. He reached the Amoor river at Kliabarovsk, many hundreds of miles from its mouth. Here he procured a rude boat made of three poplar boards, and, loading his scientific apparatus, he started to float down the river, stopping frequently to examine its banks and make little excursions into the interior.

It is needless to say that such a trip was attended by the greatest discomfort and no litle danger, but for three months, surmounting every obstacle, Fowke continued his explorations, taking hundreds of photographs and covering the ground so thoroughly that no scientists ever will have to go over it again. He reached Nicolaevsk at the mouth of the river just two hours before the autumn typhoon broke in all its fury.

From a scientific point of view, the expedition was immensely successful. Scientific data of the greatest value were gathered, and an important link was added to the chain of evidence connecting the populations of the eastern and western hemisphere. Next summer the chain will be taken up again and carried north through Siberia to the straits, thus completing it.

Of the personal discomforts and perils of the journey Mr. Fowke is disposed to make light. He was arrested at Vladivostok while photographing a fort; he was compelled to sleep in the open boat and battle with the poisonous insects that infest the Amoor river; the heat was stifling and there were numberless difficulties to overcome. But from the journey Mr. Fowke returned with his hundreds of photographs and a wealth of scientific material and collections, all of which have been turned over to the New York Museum.

Mr. Fowke says that while on the Amoor river he heard of a Russian scientific expedition which had entered the Chinese province of Manchuria. The expedition was guarded by 8,000 soldiers, and a large portion of Manchuria may soon be added to the Russian possessions as a consequence.

Rumor of the Insane.

"I was sitting in my office the other day," said the superintendent of the insane asylum at Parlor City, "when one of the patients, a harmless fellow who is allowed to have the freedom of the building and grounds, came in, pale with indignation, and said that he had a complaint to make.

"'What is it, your Highness?' I said, for it was the Prince of Wales I was talking to.

"'Are the rules of the palace to be observed or not?' he demanded. 'I want to know whether our rules can be broken with impunity.'

"'Certainly not, your Highness,' I said; 'what is it?'

"'I was coming down the corridor this morning,' he said, 'and in a rack on the wall I saw a dozen red pails, marked "For fire only." Now, is that right or not?'

"'It is,' I said. 'The sign is correct.'

"'Well, then,' he said. 'John (referring to a keeper) must be punished. As I stood there he came along and filled the pails with water.'

"'He shall be executed at once,' I said, and the Prince bowed with great seriousness and walked out of the room.'

"This incident illustrates a trick which few people know anything about," continued the superintendent. "That is, that there is more unconscious humor about a lot of lunatics than there is genuine humor among sane people. Some of the things that my patients say and do are funnier than any of the things I read or hear from the outside world. I tell you, life isn't so prosaic as you'd think in an insane asylum."—New York Sun.

Five Lives for One Rifle.

One of the terms of the "pacification" of the Philippine islands required the surrender of all the arms held by the insurgents to the Spaniards. It is believed that this condition was faithfully fulfilled, so that before Aguinaldo's arrival in Cavite there were no modern firearms in the hands of the natives except such as they had captured in hand to hand fights with the Spanish troops. Yet by the time Aguinaldo was ready to move across the bay into Cavite province the rebels had taken 479 Mauser rifles from their oppressors. How was it done? Well, every rifle so captured meant that from one to five Filipinos had been killed in the savage onslaught of half naked men armed only with machetes upon disciplined troops armed with the best magazine rifles. When a small body of Spanish soldiers would be on the march through some narrow defile in the swamps they would suddenly find a hundred rebels swarming around them, and the sharp home-made blades of the natives would cut down from ten to twenty of the Spaniards before the latter could get their rifles at work. If the Filipinos succeeded in getting away with half a dozen Mauser rifles from the men whom they had cut down in their first onslaught they were satisfied, even though the bodies of a dozen of their companions were thrown contemptuously into the swamp after the Spaniards had repelled the attack.—Chicago Record.

BORN TO GRUMBLE.

Grinders Opposed the Fire Department Even After Its Worth was Proved.

In every community there are chronic growlers, always finding fault with the existing condition of things, and no better satisfied with attempts that are made in the line of improvement.

A Western village has been sorely scourged by fire, its principal business portion having been burned twice. There was no fire department, the citizens apparently being of the opinion that it would be too expensive.

Among them was a man of the name of Grinders, who, while invariably grumbling at the lack of enterprise displayed by the business men of the place, opposed any and every attempt to organize a fire department. "We are taxed too heavily already," he said.

But after the second disastrous fire there was such a clamor for better protection that the town trustees purchased a chemical engine, with hooks, ladders and the usual paraphernalia, provided a room, and a volunteer company was organized.

"It's a waste of money," said Grinders. "It will be twenty years before there's another big fire. Mark my words. Lightning doesn't strike three times in the same place. You'll see."

Several years passed without any real occasion for the services of the new fire department. The company, it is true, turned out in response to several false alarms, and always made a creditable display when on parade, but Grinders was irreconcilable.

"Look at it!" he exclaimed. "Five hundred dollars thrown away—absolutely thrown away! I told you we shouldn't have any more fires, but you wouldn't listen to me."

One day, however, a fierce blaze broke out in one of the stores in the rebuilt business district. The fire company was promptly on hand, and by strenuous exertions put out the flames before much damage was done. The work of the "fire boys" was creditable in the highest degree, and it was the general opinion that they had saved the town from a third calamity.

"What do you think of our fire department now, Grinders?" asked one of the exultant merchants—the one, in fact, in whose store the fire had started.

"Humph!" growled Grinders. "How much did you lose?"

"Only about thirty-five dollars," replied the merchant. "Mostly empty boxes. The boys put out the fire before it got into my goods."

"H'mph!" growled Grinders again. "Five hundred dollars to put out a thirty-five dollar fire!"

And after that he grumbled worse than ever.

Horse Meat in Germany.

An increased consumption of horse meat is reported in German cities as a result of the scarcity of beef and mutton. There still exists in the smaller cities of the empire a prejudice against horse meat, and the consumption is not as great in proportion as in the larger places, but it is steadily growing.

The consumers of horse meat in Germany are exclusively the poorer classes, but they comprise nine-tenths of the population, and there is, therefore, a wide field for this food. Most German workmen earn only from sixty cents to $1 a day, and are wholly unable to supply their families with the same quality of meat that the American workman consumes. Beef is from fifteen to twenty cents a pound, and mutton and other meats are correspondingly high. But until recently plenty of horse meat has been procurable at seven cents a pound, and it is still sold for about half the price of other meats. The German workman must keep up his bodily strength, even if his food is of a coarser nature, and this is the reason why cheap horse meat, nutritive as it is, has gradually gained ground in spite of the prejudice against it, until the consumption in the larger cities is almost as great as that of beef or mutton.—New York Sun.

An Uncomfortable Superstition.

A very uncomfortable superstition prevails in the Minich Province. Whenever a pigeon-house is to be made the fellaheen consider that the pottery used in its construction should be baked by the help of a human body. A pigeon-house was to be erected in the beginning of this month at the village of Beni Soomrook, in this province, and this necessary preliminary of its construction was not forgotten. A young child was first caught, and, in spite of his struggles, was put into an oven and burnt alive while the pottery was baked with the aid of this human holocaust. Two men, one of them a potter by trade, have been arrested on suspicion of having taken part in this old custom.—Egyptian Gazette.

The Tocci Twins.

The highest-priced freaks ever shown in this country were the Tocci twins, who received a salary of $900 a week for a four weeks' engagement. They wer two boys with but one pair of legs between them, the bodies connecting at the waist, both bodies and legs being perfect and well-formed. They were constantly worrying about the high price of living in this country, and in spite of their large salary spent as little as they could possibly get along with. They now have a large and beautiful place near their native town in Italy, and are persons of great distinction there.

A bill posting machine, which sticks bills on walls, even as high as fifty feet, without the use of ladder or paste pot, is doing successful work in Paris, France.

For a Third Term.

The Ft. Wayne Sentinel has interviewed Hon. J. M. Robinson as to his aspirations for more than two terms in congress. We quote all that part of the interview relating to this

"I will not be on the election committee next congress, and I believe I am safe in assuming that Speaker Reed (and I believe that he will be speaker without opposition) will give me a promotion. I have tried to do the best I could for my district in this congress, have answered all roll calls, missed no meetings of my committee, and while I cannot hope for an appointment to a first or second class committee, like the appropriations, ways and means and judiciary, yet, I think I can act on a committee near enough to these, to make them next in importance. Only by long service can one secure the best places or do the best service for his people. I advocated this policy for our district when Judge Colerick was a candidate, later when Judge Lowry was and a candidate, and in 1892 before I entered my first race for congress, I visited Judge McClellan and had assurances from him that he did not care to run again. The party owes no man anything; on the contrary, a public man owes everything to his people; but from numerous assurances from the people, I think the Twelfth district is in favor of keeping a pains taking member in congress until under the procedure of the house in the appointment of committee she attains an efficiency. To use the public phrase, a four year man is not in it with the leaders in congress.

"With gratitude to the people for having given me a majority in 1896 of 546 as against 192 for president, and a majority of 1,440 for me as against 371 for the state ticket in 1898. I shall aspire to again represent them, and shall ask their confidence, if I continue to represent them as well as I have tried to do in the past."

Good Words.

Senator Nusbaum has a letter forwarded to him by W J. Frederick of Garrett, which the latter had received from a nephew, W. F. Frederick, a leading railroad union worker at Indianapolis. The letter speaks highly of the two DeKalb members, Senator Nusbaum and Representative Brown, as having been faithful to the interests of labor and unflinching in support of what they believed was right. Coming from such a source, the letter is one to feel proud of and it will no doubt be treasured as one of the few plaudits that follow a conscientious legislator. The COURIER has several times had occasion to mention the good record made by these gentlemen, which we feel sure will bear comparison with any the county ever sent.

Long Watch Chains.

Possessors of the long, plain, old-fashioned gold chains will be glad to hear that they can wear them now with the sanction of fashion. A long watch chain, with perhaps a bunch of charms, a gold buckle in the now common snake shape, and a simple brooch and earrings, are all the trinkets a Parisian elegante permits herself when walking in the street.

COURT NEWS

The criminal docket has been pretty well worked over. Fines for gambling or for permitting it or for renting rooms for that purpose. These were: John Humphreps, $15, Dan. Myers, $10 and costs, Meritt Phelps, $10 and cost. Humphreys also got $10 and costs for selling liquor without a license. The case against Charles Koons on a charge of perjury, he gave bail $500 to appear at court when wanted.

Myrtle Chorpening plead guilty to a charge of petit larceny, and being under 21 and first offense, sentence was suspended during good behavior.

John Custer who has been in jail for stealing coal at Butler, was let off by the prosecutor, as he had been already been punished enough.

Sarah Fountain who had been up for assault and battery, was left off by the prosecutor, as there was probably not much in the case.

MONDAY.

There was a good deal of work at the court room Monday, though it was the sort that could not be made to count of rapidly in finished cases. Court was called at 10:30, as several attorneys had to come down on that train

The most prominent case, was that between Osborn, the mill man at Corunna and L. A. Hartman. They had differed about a lumber deal.

About six years ago, when Hartman was putting up his building in Corunna he had hauled a part of the logs to Osborn's sawmill at Corunna, but afterwards gave Osborn the job of hauling and sawing both. For sawing, what Hartman had already hauled, the price was to be $3 a thousand, and for both hauling and sawing the rest of the logs that were in the woods, the price was to be $5.50 per thousand. Now after some years of disagreeing Osborn sues to recover $5.50 a thousand for all, both what Hartman hauled and what he hauled Hartman refuses to pay this. Witnesses have been heard part of yesterday and so far today, Tuesday. It may take a part of tomorrow.

Karl Nelson was called into court about 5 p. m. as he had indicated a desire to plead guilty. He was subjected to a long course of questioning by Deputy-prosecutor Pomeroy, as well as the Judge, and to all the questions he answered in a mumbling sort of way, standing half bent, with drooping head as if he did not care what was done with him. Sometimes he did not answer at all, and sometimes only after a long wait, or repeated questioning. He often answered so indistinctly that he was compelled to repeat it in such a way his hearers could understand. The points of chief value, were, when he was asked if he struck Keen with the ax. He answered "yes." Why did you strike him with the ax? Ans. "I wanted to make him run to the house." He said, that when Keen over took him, he jumped into the sleigh and began to throw the wood out. Later on, he said Keen was a going to strike him. He said he chased Keen "as far as to that stove," pointing to the north one in the court room. But he did not seem clear on any point except that he struck Keen with the ax He admitted that Keen had been good to him, and had taken him in and provided for him. When asked by Mr. Pomeroy if he had not been arrested before, he admmitted that he had. He said that he had been arrested twice, in Pennsylvania. Once, he was going along the railroad track, when men came up to him with guns and stopped him. They put him in jail five days. Another time he said he was walking along the sidewalk, when some men arrested him. When asked what he was arrested for, he said he did not know. But soon after admitted it was because he was a tramp. After full questioning to see if he understood what he was doing and saying and what it was to go to jail or prison, the Judge sentenced him to the state prison, from two to fourteen years. He gave the man some good advice as to behaving himself to get the lowest term and good treatment. The fellow took it all with perfect indifference and at the close walked out carelessly with Deputy-sheriff Hartford, and was locked up till he can be taken away. The county should be thankful for one thing at least, that is, that he plead guilty and saved all expense of a trial. As it is, the cost is but a trifle.

Accidental Poisoning.

Mrs. Charles McBride, wife of the son of Judge R. Mrs. McBride, died this morning at Indianapolis, as a result of a mistake in medicine. Two or three weeks ago, she took a dose of what she supposed to be quinine, but it proved to be something else, and in spite of all endeavors to save her life, she gradually grew worse till death came, as noted this morning. Her husband was a member of Company I, 157th, the company from Waterloo, he having joined them on account of that being his early home. His aunt, Mrs. John W. Baxter, left this forenoon over the Wabash to attend the funeral.

ATTEMPTED MURDER

Assaulted With a Double-bitted Ax, John Keen Escapes With His Life

There was an attempt at murder, near Corunna last evening, the details of which are these:

Last October a tramp named Carl Nelson came to the home of John Keen a farmer near Corunna and asked for employment or food. He was taken in and allowed to stay and work for his board through the winter. He seemed to be all right, a quiet, good sort of a man, till two or three weeks ago when Mr Keen fell sick with the grip. As soon as the entire work and the chores fell on Nelson he seemed to think he owned the whole farm and that the family were boarding with him, not he with them. He became surly and ill-natured and nothing seemed to suit him. Yesterday, Mr. Keen who had nearly recovered, told Nelson to hitch up the team, go to the woods and get a load of wood and bring to the house have it ready to haul to Corunna this morning. The former tramp, did not seem to care whether he did it or not and kept putting it of till about 4 o'clock, when he hitched up to the sled and started. Mr. Keen called after him telling him to take the wagon as he could not haul a cord on the sled, especially as the snow might be nearly gone by today. Nelson paid no attention to this, and Keen thinking the man had possibly not heard him started on after him and overtook him near the woods, and jumped into the sled. He asked Nelson, if he had heard what he had said about the wagon. Nelson turned and began to curse and swear, and caught up the ax, a double-bitted one, and struck at Keen with it, the flat side of the ax hitting Keen on the shoulder, and knocked him over into the sled. Before Keen could rise, the man struck him again, this time aiming the edge of the ax at Keen's head. Keen threw up his arm to ward off the blow and received a bad gash in the palm of his hand, but saved his life, for again it was the flat side of the ax that struck him, this time on the head, Keen screamed at the top of his voice and the team, a spirited one started on a run through the woods, the sled striking a tree and being wrecked. Keen jumped out to stop the horses, and the man jumped after him, with the ax in his hand, Keen saw he was coming and ran, the man following him a short distance, and then gave up the chase. Keen got to the house, and soon after this Nelson, brought in the team, But by that time the neighbors who had heard Keen's screams for help, had come in and among them constable John C. Shippy, and Nelson was placed under arrest and held. Last night about 11 o'clock Mrs, Keen drove over to Auburn and filed an information in the circuit court, with Deputy-prosecutor Pomeroy and this forenoon Deputy-Sheriff Kutzner went up and got Nelson, brought him back and lodged him in jail.

It was a most brutal attempt at murder and but for Mr. Keen's efforts to keep off the blows of the ax, it would have succeeded, for a blow from the edge of such an ax would easily split his head open.

CLUB NOTES.

The subject for consideration on Saturday at the L. L C. was "The Dakotas" with Mrs. McCord as leader, although a comparatively new section of our country, many facts of interest were brought by the leader and those she had called upon for special topics. Mrs. Guild gave a list of the principal cities and the characteristics of each. Mrs. Mrs. Ford gave a sketch of the Black Hills. The largest gold mines in the world are situated in this region, Mrs Ralston spoke of the division of the state and Mrs. Barns, gave a short description of "Old Fort Laramie." While this historic old fort is not situated in the Dakotas, its influence for civilization reached all that territory now within the bounds of the two states.

The paper "On the Prairies" by Mrs. Josie Brown was excellent and full of interest to all, being her personal experiences of a two months sojourn on the prairies of North Dakota. Her descriptions of sights, places and people were bright and entertaining. Mrs. Mabel Hodge was to have given a paper "Life on a Dakota Farm," but owing to the serious illness and death of her husband's mother, she was excused for the day.

The closing exercise was an original poem by Mrs. Holmes. This was full of beautiful thoughts and given in an impressive and feeling manner, and was a delightful surprise to most of the members. The club asked permission to have this poem published in the COURIER, and it will be given in full tomorrow.

At the close of the exercises the hostess Mrs. Robbins asked the members to remain a short time and surprised them by serving refreshments, a cup of tea and most delicious home-made cookies. The club adjourned to meet next Saturday with Mrs. Schaab.

ST. JOE.

Only three weeks more of school.

The Junior class held a literary entertainment at the Lutheran church Saturday evening.

Pension agent J. D. Leighty and his wife were in the city a few hours one day last week.

Among the sick this week are Grandma Leighty, Mrs. Sam Johnston, Mrs. Emma Woodcox, little Gray Woodcox, and Samuel Easterday.

Three more additions to the M. P. church last Sunday, making to date since the series of meetings, 23 additions.

A. F. Woodcox who has been visiting with his brother at Coldwater, Mich., returned to this place last Saturday.

Arthur Rogers who has been living on the S. L. Widney farm for the last year will move the first of April to a farm one mile south of Butler.

J. E. Dermott and son-in law, have bought what is known as the Darling farm, one-half mile west of Concord, consideration about $2,300.

The following persons have been put in nomination for city officers to be voted for March 20. First district, trustee, A. B. Filley; second district, S. L Widney; third district, William Curie and Abner Copp. For marshall, William Leighty and J. C. F. Abel; clerk, S. S. Widney; treasurer, Herman Grubb, with an independent candidate for marshal It is said that the following will be the School Board, O. H. Widney, 1st ward; H. W. Bowman, 2nd ward and B. S. Sneffer, 3rd ward.

Another great burglary scare last week, the facts of which are about as follows: Coming to town last Saturday evening, Will Lucas who lives one and one-half miles west observed some one leave the railroad track twenty rods west of the Engle crossing and going over to the right of way fence the suspect (for by this time Will's fears were aroused) was seen to hide something behind a little knoll of earth which happened to be at that place. After the suspect had quietly looked for spying eyes and seeing none he came towards town. Mr. Lucas following in his wake coming into town in a great hurry, he made our detective force acquainted with the facts. Of course the chief soon had his force organized and prepared for business. Sol Barney and Joseph Harrod took front ranks and hied themselves to the spot where the suspected articles were hidden. Guards were stationed at or near all the approaches to town. The stores being guarded by men who were known to be good and true. Will Curie and Jim Steward had their guns at present arms in the Big Four store. Tom Abel, George Bleeks and several others guarded the picket line back of Sol Barney's store between the hours of 8 and 9 in almost total darkness. From their hiding places, Sol. Barney and Joe Harrod spied some one approaching the hidden articles. We imagine that at about this time firearms were drawn and hats and hearts were raising, but be that as it may, the suspected was allowed to gather up the lanterns, burglary tools and everything connected with a great burglary scheme, and depart in peace It is said that Joe Harrod wanted to pounce up on the suspect and make him give an account of himself, but this S B would not allow. The suspect was allowed to light his lantern and take his departure going north to White's corners, and then west to other fields, fairer and brighter. Had this suspect but known what a mine of worse than dynamite had been so near, what would have been the consequences, is hard to imagine. As it is this Monday morning, all is cleared up by the announcement that Chastine Johnston, son of W. D. Johnston, proved to be the suspect, and that he merely deposited a lantern and pair of overshoes across the fence while he returned to town for something he had forgotten. The force have all quietly returned to their places of abode, and are patiently awaiting an opening for another encounter We have heard of only one man who is sick over the affair, and that is Frank Barney who was the Napoleon of the whole affair.

HELD UP BY TRAMPS

Three Garrett young men were over here last evening, and made themselves pretty prominent for a time, and were rather reckless in flashing their money About 10:30 two of them Henderson and Cooper started for the Junction to get a train home. When they reached the Wabash track they started to walk down the railroad, and when near the Greenler factory, they were suddenly confronted by two men and ordered to throw up their hands and give up their money. One of them, Cooper, resisted, struck at his man, and a fight ensued, during which the tramp drew a revolver and shot Cooper twice, one ball taking effect in the thigh and the other grazing his foot. The thieves secured at least a portion of the money they were after, and hustled away. The wounded man and his friend managed somehow to get to the Junction, where Cooper was helped on a passing freight and taken to Garrett.

From the Junction a telephone had been sent up town to Sheriff Hathaway and he and Deputy Hartford and Marshal Potter started out to hunt for the footpads. On reaching the Wabash road, the Sheriff and Marshal went down that way and Mr. Hartford went west and towards the Lake Shore tracks. In that vicinity he saw two men a going across the fields as if going to the Fluke woods. As they went to get over the fence, he called them to halt, but instead, they broke into a run. He fired after them in the darkness, a couple of shots, but failed to bring them to or locate them. The search proved fruitless.

This morning, in beating about in various places, Sheriff Hathaway and Marshal Potter found a gang of tramps around a fire in the heavy woods just east of Peter Ditmar's house and arrested the two that best answered the description given by the Garrett men. They were brought up town about ten o'clock this forenoon and are now in jail. They give names as Robert Lytle and John Grogan. In appearance they answer the description of the two men seen by Deputy Hartford. One of them had $47 in his pocket.

BUTLER.

The funeral of Cyrus Samuel Stoy took place from the M. E. church last Thursday, under the auspices of the Knights of Pythias and Masons. Rev. Smith of the U. B. church officiating. Mr. Stoy was well known to all of our people as postmaster under Cleveland's administration. He was about 56 years old, and leaves one daughter, two sisters and one brother to mourn his early and unexpected death. He had been in the U. S. pension service for several years at Indianapolis. Jacob Leighty, pension commissioner, and wife accompanied the remains. The floral tributes were beautiful indeed.

Dr. W. H. Madden lies dangerously sick at his home near Butler.

Frank Stump, John Thiel and a number of others are getting ready to go to the Pacific coast.

O'm Satisfied.

Bert Hull and Daisy DeWitt were parties in 'Squire Walborn's court Monday. Bert was expecting to go to jail for being the head of a prospective family without having invested a cent in revenue stamps. Some one suggested that he marry Daisy. "Do you suppose she'd have me?" said Bert. He was told that faint heart never won fair lady, and he might try. Turning his face hastily to hers, he said bluntly "Daisy, will you marry me?" "O'm satisfied," said the girl, and Rev. J. D. Brosy happening along, they were made one in two minutes. Berts brother, had come on the scene, with money to pay court costs etc., and having some left, Bert paid the preacher half a dollar, saying he was a little short just then, and would try to do better next time. The curtain fell. We hope to hear a good account of Bert and his bride in the near future.

Mr. Purplebeak—"Likely, and I suppose a similar condition exists in that other place with which Texas so often has been compared."

THE FILIPINO CHIEF.

HE'S THE BEST MALAY SPECIMEN IN HISTORY.

Of Doubtful Parentage, the Filipino Leader Is Well Educated, a Lover of Freedom, a Great Organizer and a Cunning Diplomat.

Aguinaldo is a highly interesting character. He has had a remarkable career for so young a man, and events seem to point to him from the first as a man of destiny. His complexion is about half way between the reddish-brown of the Malay and the olive of the Spaniard. There is a yellowish tinge about it which, taken in connection with his forehead, would lead one to infer that a modicum of Chinese blood flowed in his veins, and that in his pedigree was some individual of Igorrote-Chinese or of Tagalo-Chinese characteristics. Upon this point it will be difficult, if not impossible, ever to learn the exact truth. So deep has been the moral mire of the Philippines under Spanish rule, so universal the immorality of the dominant race, that neither the civil nor religious authorities have ever cared to keep any record of the alliances and misalliances, the births legitimate and illegitimate, the wives, concubines and mistresses, slaves and abducted women who have filled the long years of Spanish rule.

In his features, face and skull Aguinaldo looks more like a European than a Malay. He is handsome, according to Spanish standard of masculine beauty. Friends and enemies agree that he is intelligent, ambitious, far-sighted, brave, self-controlled, honest, moral, vindictive, and at times cruel. To those who like him he is courteous, polished, thoughtful and dignified. To those who dislike him he is insincere, pretentious, vain and arrogant. Both admit him to be genial, generous, self-sacrificing, popular and capable of the administration of affairs.

His friends say that he was the son of a Spanish general; his enemies in Manila that he was the offspring of a dissolute but learned Jesuit. At the age of 4 he was a house boy in the home of a Jesuit priest in Cavite. A house boy in the Philippines, as in China, plays the part of a house dog rather than that of a domestic servant. If the head of the house is cruel he is kicked and cuffed by everybody and lives on short commons; if his master is kind and affectionate he enjoys about the same attention as one of the children of the family. The only work which he does is to run from one part of the house to the other or from the house to any part of the grounds within the compound or space inclosed by the walls around the entire establishment. He helps the table boy to clean the silver, to scour the knives, and to set and unset the table. Aguinaldo's master was a very kind man and took a deep interest in the welfare of his little protege. He dressed him well, so much so as to excite the notice and even the wrath of some neighbors. More important still, he gave the boy an education, which, though unequal to what every child receives in the United States, was a hundredfold better than what is bestowed upon the little Tagals of Luzon.

Aguinaldo was an apt scholar. He was precocious like the Malay, ambitious like the Caucasian, and had a memory like the Chinaman—the greatest memory possessed by man. At the age of seven he was the equal of most half-breed boys of 12. At 10 he was mentally the superior of most of the half-breeds of his district. When he was 14 or 15 he was enrolled in the medical department of the Pontifical University of Manila, under Profs. Nalda and Buitrago. He was a bright student, but nothing is known of his college career. Shortly after this time he committed what is an unpardonable sin, both secular and religious, in the Philippines by joining the Masonic order. Masonry was a prohibited thing in the Philippines under Spanish rule, and any man joining the organization might under an ancient law be tortured and executed. About this time (in 1888) he got into some trouble with the Spanish authorities and went to Hong Kong to escape their tortures. While here he took advantage of all the educational privileges that came in his way. He attended the drills and parades of the British garrisons, frequented the gunshops on Queen's road, purchased firearms for his own use, and in every possible way increased his fund of practical knowledge. He entered the Chinese army and learned all he was permitted to learn there. Then he joined the navy and gained all the knowledge he could of naval warfare and equipment. He studied the lives and campaigns of Bonaparte, Wellington, Von Moltke and Grant. He also picked up at least a smattering of English, French, Latin and Chinese.

At the outbreak of the great insurrection in 1896 he held some political position in a provincial town. He was very popular with all sections of the people except the order of Dominican friars, whose tyranny he openly denounced. He gradually came to the front as a leader of a section which was willing to exhaust diplomacy in dealing with Spain before resorting to arms. He exhausted diplomacy completely and then prepared to fight. As an organizer of the natives he was a wonder. Like Bonaparte, he seemed to exert a strange fascination upon his people. Wherever he went he was followed by troops of admirers, and while other generals suffered at times he and his camp were always supplied with the choicest supplies and comforts. Nor was the feeling of more than admiration confined to the Tagals, stolid Igorrotes, and half-naked Negritos. Cunning and skeptical half-breeds, and even Spaniards themselves, seemed to share in this odd hero-worship.

ILOILO, THE FALLEN FILIPINO STRONGHOLD.

FRANCE'S NEW PRESIDENT.

He Is a Poor Man and Will Have to Practice Economy.

The new President of France is far more democratic and less inclined to ostentation than was his able but somewhat ridiculous predecessor. M. Faure courted the friendship and mimicked the ways of royalty and otherwise conducted himself as though ruling by divine right rather than by the will of the people. His chief pleasure was to kiss the hand of royalty, and he established a rule at the Elysee, the Paris residence of the President, that no one should presume to address the chief executive without being first spoken to by the latter.

M. Loubet is just the reverse of M. Faure in habit and inclination. He is a man of the people. Faure came up from the ranks, but his immense fortune and political power led him to forget his origin. Loubet is comparatively poor.

The Paris monarchical press cartoons Loubet as wearing felt slippers and tucking a corner of his napkin into his shirt collar. But instead of this rendering the new President ridiculous in the eyes of the masses, it only increases his popularity. The common people think no less of him because his aged mother still lives on a farm and wears peasant garb.

M. Loubet has no large private fortune and he will have to practice economy and conduct his office on a far different scale from that of his predecessors. France pays her President $125,000 a year in salary, and fully as much more in allowances of one kind or another, and yet this enormous income of a quarter of a million dollars has never been sufficient to meet the expenses of the French chief executive. Every one of the Presidents, from Thiers to Faure, was immensely rich and all but one drew largely from his private fortune. President Faure is known to have spent in the neighborhood of a quarter of a million dollars over and above his official income in doing the honors to the Emperor and Empress of Russia on the occasion of their visit to Paris, while Marshal MacMahon found his salary and allowances so inadequate, especially during the exhibition of 1878, when he was called upon to welcome all sorts of foreign royalties to the French metropolis, that when he finally retired into private life he found that more than half of his large fortune had been spent at the Elysee. Mme. Carnot, who was a most careful manager, made no secret of the fact that her husband was obliged to dip heavily into his private income each year that he remained in office, and indeed the only President who managed to make both ends meet was the rich Grevy, who, like Loubet, was fond of wearing felt slippers, and who, more than once, was seen promenading in the gardens of the palace looking exceedingly comfortable, the aforesaid slippers being completed by a much worn jacket and a velvet smoking cap.

M. LOUBET.

Matches Without Phosphorus.

Kohlmann Rosenthal, an Englishman, and Dr. Von Komocki, a Berlin chemist, assert that they have invented a match that will strike anywhere and no phosphorus is used in it. This invention, they say, will do away with the horrors of necrosis, to which employes in match factories are subject.

It sometimes happens that a divorce is the part of wisdom.

AMERICA'S THREE GREAT ADMIRALS—FARRAGUT, PORTER, DEWEY.

David Glasgow Farragut, first admiral of the United States navy, was born in Tennessee. He entered the navy as a midshipman and fought his first battle on the Essex in 1814. He served in the navy fifty-eight years. He was 60 years of age when the civil war came. His first orders in that conflict were to capture New Orleans, which he did under heroic circumstances in 1862. In this battle he destroyed forts carrying 120 guns, twenty armed steamers, four ironclads and a multitude of fire rafts. He was made a rear admiral for this in 1862. In 1863 his fleet aided in the capture of Vicksburg and Port Hudson, and one year later captured Mobile. It was at Mobile that he was lashed to the rigging of his flagship, the Hartford, while under fire. For his bravery Congress made him a vice-admiral in the fall of 1864, and in 1866 the office of admiral was especially created for him. After his elevation he was placed in charge of the European squadron of this Government. He died at the Portsmouth navy yard unexpectedly in 1870.

David Dixon Porter, second admiral of the United States navy, succeeded Farragut in that office, his commission dating from Aug. 15, 1870. He was born in Pennsylvania and entered the navy as a midshipman when he was 16 years old. He was a lieutenant in 1841. In the first eighteen years of his service he was ten years in the Mediterranean service and the remainder of the time on duty with coast surveys. He was in command of the mortar flotilla at the capture of New Orleans, and in 1863 was made an acting rear admiral and assigned to command the Mississippi river squadron. For his services in reducing Vicksburg he was made a rear admiral in 1863. In the spring of 1864 he fought with Banks on the Red river expedition. The North Atlantic squadron was placed in his charge in 1864, and he attacked and captured Fort Fisher, protecting Wilmington. The fight lasted twenty days and was very bloody. He was made vice-admiral in 1866 and soon after was placed in charge of the naval academy at Annapolis.

George Dewey, third admiral of the United States navy, is a Vermonter by birth. He is in his sixty-first year of age. He graduated from the academy at Annapolis before the civil war and immediately sought active duty with the Union fleets of Foote and Farragut, then pressing the Confederate navy in the South. He served with such gallantry under Farragut that he was especially commended in writing by that eminent commander. At the end of the war he cruised in European waters and was with the Asiatic squadron for a time. Returning to the United States, he was given shore duty, which was not to his taste, and he returned to the sea. In January, 1898, while on land duty at Washington, he requested to be sent to sea again. The Secretary of the Navy decided to place him in command of the Asiatic squadron, with little thought as to what that would in the end mean for this country. Dewey on taking charge of the Asiatic squadron was a commodore. For the battle of Manila, May 1, 1898 he was made rear admiral.

PIGMIES OF AFRICA.

Mr. Alfred B. Lloyd Sees and Talks with Many of Them.

The English traveller Mr. Alfred B. Lloyd, made the journey from Victoria Nyanza to the mouth of the Congo in three months, the quickest time on record, using the Congo steamboat service and railroad for two-thirds of the way, traveling through the great equatorial forest of which Stanley gave so vivid a description. His route was a little to the south of Stanley's road, and he saw much of the dwarfs who inhabit the forest region.

"I was three weeks crossing the great forest," he said. "Often the darkness even at midday is remarkable. Sometimes I was unable to read at noon, when as you know the sun near the equator is almost directly overhead. One day I tried to photograph my tent, but failed on account of the dimness of the light. I walked throughout the forest journey, though I had a saddle ass with me. I could not use him without constantly exposing myself to the danger of being unsaddled by the vines that hung over the path. We sometimes narrowly escaped being killed by the fall of enormous trees, some of whose trunks measured over 20 feet in circumference. The silence of death reins in this forest unless broken by animals or the fall of trees."

Mr. Lloyd saw many more dwarfs than Stanley met in the same region and thus described them:

"I saw a great many of the pigmies, but, generally speaking, they kept out of the way as much as possible. At one place in the middle of the forest, called Holenga, I stayed at a village of a few huts occupied by so-called Arabs.

MR. LLOYD RECEIVING VISITORS IN CAMP.

There I came upon a great number of pigmies who came to see me. They told me that unknown to myself they had been watching me for five days, peering through the growth of the primeval forest at our caravan. They appeared to be very frightened, and even when speaking covered their faces. I slept at this village, and in the morning I asked the chief to allow me to photograph the dwarfs. He brought ten or fifteen of them together, and I was enabled to secure a snapshot. I could not give a time exposure as the pigmies would not stand still.

"I was amazed at their sturdiness. Their arms and chests were splendidly developed, as much so as in a good specimen of an Englishman. These men have long beards half way down the chest, which imparts to them a strange appearance. They are very timid, and cannot look a stranger in the face. Their eyes are constantly shifting, as in the case of monkeys. They are fairly intelligent.

"I had a long talk with the chief, and he conversed intelligently about the extent of the forest and the number of his tribe. Except for a tiny strip of bark cloth, men and women are quite nude. They are armed with bows and arrows—the latter tipped with deadly poison—and carry small spears. They are entirely nomadic, sheltering at night in small huts two feet to three feet in height. They never go outside the forest. During the whole time I was with them they were perfectly friendly."

"CZAR" REID, NEWFOUNDLAND.

He Is One of the Greatest Land Owners in the World.

At the present moment, when Newfoundland and the Newfoundland difficulty with the French are on everyone's lips, it is interesting to recall that this island—the "tenth island" of the world, as Beckles Willson has reminded us in his recently published work—is to all intents and purposes in the hands of a single man, and that man, by birth at least, is a Scotsman.

To convey an idea of the real size of Newfoundland it may be as well to state that it is a sixth larger than Ireland. But it is doubtful if Robert Gillespie Reid's 5,000,000 acres, were they even in Ireland, would possess the value which that extent of territory promises to possess in Newfoundland. For since the colony, tired of official inertia and the lack of capital, decided to turn over its assets to a private capitalist by means of the measure known as the Reid contract, it has been discovered that Newfoundland is not only a rich country, but one of the richest on earth.

Everyone must remember Gilead P. Beck in that entertaining work, "The Golden Butterfly," and of his marvellous discoveries of oil in a certain waste territory in Canada. Mr. Reid is said not only to have "located" nineteen oil wells on his land, but enormous quantities of coal, iron, copper and asbestos as well. "Czar" Reid, as this quiet, unassuming man has already come to be called, has already refused several millions sterling for his property, and in spite of the agitation in the colony to rescind the bargain there seems every reason to believe that Mr. Reid will live to enjoy one of the largest private fortunes of the period, and to acquire a European reputation for his sagacity in exploiting a huge island which was barren when he appeared on the scene.

But this singular man has had, in a measure, to pay the penalty which fortune so often exacts from the successful. His career from the day, forty years ago, when he left his native Scotland to seek his fortune, has been full of many of the rough spots of the earth and hard work and exposure, especially in Newfoundland and Canada, have obliged him for a time to relax his energies. But even while he is thus forced to seek an Algerian retreat, the mighty work of developing so vast a property goes unceasingly on. Reid possesses pluck as well as ability, for upon a recent occasion he ventured into a mine whence no one of his workmen would follow him, and in the subsequent explosion sustained severe injuries—especially to his eyesight.

There is one thing that is true of a widower: he is always wondering if he can bite at a bait without getting caught in the hook.

MACHINE KEEPS BOOKS.

Ingenious Device in a New York Bank Is Operated by Electricity.

An adding machine in use in the Union Dime Savings bank, New York City, is operated by electricity. It marks in a depositor's book the amount of his deposit, and makes a duplicate of the entry on a tape locked in a box attached to the machine. At the same time the amount of the deposit is automatically added to the total of the bank's transactions, so that a glance at the latter would tell just how much money the bank had received since its organization.

The machine is placed on a table at the teller's right hand. In front of it is a keyboard, with rows of figures arranged like the letters on a typewriter. When a deposit is made the teller places the depositor's book under a cylinder filled with movable figures on the side of the machine. Then he pulls the figures on the keyboard that represent the amount of the deposit. These figures are connected by wires with the figures on the cylinder. The teller next moves a lever and that sets the machine in motion. The amount of the deposit is printed on the book and at the same time on a tape locked in a box placed just above the cylinder, so that a double entry is made. Should the teller make any mistake there is an ingenious contrivance attached to the machine that would prevent it from working and thus notify him of the error.

After the entries have been made in the depositor's book and on the bank's tape another cylinder is set in motion. This is in the middle of the machine and contains movable figures running up into the millions. These figures tell the total of the bank's receipts since it was organized and the amount that has just been deposited is added to it.

At the end of a day's business the officials of the bank add together the totals registered on the two receiving machines, deduct from them the total registered on the paying out machine and strike a trial balance in a moment. The machines are inclosed in glass cases, so that every part can be readily seen.

USUAL METHOD OF ACTION.

Bashful Youth's Explanation of a Sudden Assumption of a Seat.

He is an extremely diffident fellow, this South Side youth, but is also enamored of a fair maiden. She likes him right back and is not averse to giving him help in emergencies. But she finds it a difficult matter to get her admirer to respond to the calls of society, for he sinks into a condition of too many feet and hands when in the whirl social. But she has her hopes.

Not long ago, when the chill winds had reduced the previously deposited snow into glaring ice, they set forth to walk to a near-by home to engage in the attractions of progressive euchre and chocolates. He was very tender and solicitous lest she tumble, slip and fall upon the icy sidewalk. Not being endowed with the certainty of footing of the patient burro himself, fate overtook him and he smote the earth with a crash heard blocks away.

Thereupon a look of intense anguish sped over his face, for his spine seemed shortened. The "girlie" was in tears of pity. She clasped her hands and loved him for his woes.

"Oh, Charlie," she murmured brokenly, "does it hurt?"

"No," he gasped with a sickly grin. "Of course not. You see, I always sit down that way."

Now she loves him for his courage and ability to tell a fib to extricate himself from a painful and unpleasant position.—Chicago Chronicle.

CURIOSITIES OF LIQUOR TAXES.

Their Relation to the Payments for School Support.

The total payments in the United States for school support and for liquor taxes and licenses are in excess of $350,000,000, and it is somewhat curious and instructive to note the relation which these two items bear to each other.

At the head of the states disbursing public moneys for educational purposes is, of course, New York, with a total of $26,500,000, and with liquor collections of $27,000,000, or $500,000 more. Pennsylvania expends for schools $20,000,000 and collects from liquor licenses of various sorts $11,000,000, the disparity being in part explained by the fact that the large breweries which increase to so great an extent the government collections from New York, are not to be found in the Keystone state. In Ohio the school expenses are $13,800,000 and the liquor tax revenues $12,200,000, a difference smaller than in Pennsylvania, but materially larger than in New York.

Massachusetts expends for educational purposes $13,600,000 in a year, while the liquor tax collections are only $5,500,000. On the other hand, Illinois, now the chief state of whiskey distilleries, expends $16,000,000 a year for education and collects $32,000,000 a year from taxes on the sale or manufacture of liquors, or twice as much. Missouri expends $7,000,000 a year for educational purposes and collects $6,000,000 from liquor taxes. In Kentucky, in which the school expenses are $3,000,000, the liquor collections are in excess of $12,000,000. In California, now distinguished as the wine state, the collections from liquor taxes last year were $3,500,000 and the expenditures for educational purposes $6,000,000. In Texas the educational expenses are $4,500,000 and the collections from revenue taxes are $1,100,000, or about one-quarter as much. In Georgia the educational expenses are $1,800,000 and the revenues from liquor taxes are nearly $900,000. Connecticut expends $3,000,000 for educational purposes and collects $1,500,000 from liquor taxes. Tennessee expends $1,600,000 for educational purposes and collects $1,100,000 from liquor taxes. Maine, a prohibition state, expends $1,600,000 for purposes of education and collects $35,000 from liquor taxes, mostly those imposed by the United States government. Iowa expends $8,500,000 on education and collects $1,300,000 from excise taxes. Kansas expends $4,500,000 on education and collects $65,000 from liquor taxes. Vermont collects $32,000. Mississippi $133,000 and the Indian Territory $1,000. Mississippi expends $1,500,000 for education and Vermont expends $1,000,000. New Jersey spends $1,000,000 a year more for educational purposes than it collects from liquor revenues. North Carolina collects $1,100,000 from liquor taxes and expends $850,000 for education.—New York Sun.

Endless Chain Plan For Meals.

That figures are sometimes wonderful things is illustrated by the following actual occurrence in a nearby college town a number of years ago. A student in the university was a member of an eating club of twelve members which regularly patronized a certain little hostelry. He was lucky enough one day to become the recipient of a legacy amounting to $1,000, and, showing the sum to the hotel-keeper, agreed to give it to him on condition that the sum be accepted as payment for meals eaten by the students until every possible combination of the seating arrangements of the boys had been exhausted, the order of seats occupied by the boys to be changed at each meal.

The hotel-keeper thought it a most profitable deal, but a friend of his with a mathematical turn proved to him that it really would mean ruin, as no less than 479,001,600 arrangements were possible, or a total of 5,748,019,200 individual meals, would represent a value of the tidy sum of $547,801,920. The contract was carried out for four years of the boys' student life, when it really drove the hotel man from business, as, reckoned on a basis of two per week per student, the hotel man had lost $3,992, while the students had only eaten 52,416 individual meals and had still a credit of 5,748,906,784 meals, or enough to give them three meals a day of 438,718½ years.—Philadelphia Record.

The Food Supply of Australia.

The Australian colonists are described as being among the best fed in the world, especially those resident in New South Wales and Queensland, where the meat supply is enormously in excess of the possible local consumption. The principal articles of food are meat and bread, which, in the parent colony, represent, taking the retail value, about 41 per cent. of the total expenditure on food. The production of wheat in New South Wales is now in excess of local requirements, consequently the colony has practically become independent of supplies from elsewhere. Oatmeal and rice are largely consumed, the latter being imported principally from China and India. The consumption of meat of every kind is extremely great, its abundance and cheapness bringing it within the reach of the poorest, beef and mutton costing two-thirds less than in the United Kingdom. The average quantity of meat consumed per head is more than double that in the United Kingdom, and considerably larger than in the United States.

A Cromwellian Collector.

Sir Richard Tangye is an Englishman who has a "craze" about Cromwell, and who has been collecting for twenty years a mass of portraits, books and other relics connected with the Commonwealth period. He has 400 framed engravings of that period, 200 of them being portraits of Cromwell. He has, moreover, 600 volumes relating to the Commonwealth, four Cromwell letters, several manuscripts of the time, and various letters written by Cromwell's sons. He also owns one of the three death masks of the great Protector.

LESSONS IN ORATORY.

New Commoners Take Lessons of a Retired Doorkeeper.

Certain new members of the House of Commons, and several old ones, also, have sat at the feet of an ex-doorkeeper of the House to learn from him the art of Parliamentary oratory. A writer in the Windsor Magazine says that the ex-doorkeeper, whose name is Simpkinson, begins his private lessons thus:

"You will soon find that it matters but little what you say in the House of Commons, while everything depends on how you say it. Acquiring what is known as 'the House of Commons style' is more than half the battle. Give 'em plenty of 'hum' and 'haw;' to 'er, er' is human, you know." He would invariably laugh at this ancient little jest, though he had made it a hundred times.

The one instruction which all his pupils faithfully carried out was contained in the hint that the House of Commons was always impressed when a speaker did not appear to know what he was talking about, and had no notion what to say next.

Having thus grounded the beginner in the first principles of House of Commons oratory—hesitation, a little stammering, endless repetition, a reasonable amount of self-contradiction and any amount of "hum" and "haw"—Mr. Simpkinson would proceed to teach a few of the more necessary formulae.

How and when to remark, "I venture to say," or, "I have yet to learn," leading up by many a subtle gradation to that final climax reserved for very special occasions, "I even go so far as to venture to think"—all this was carefully explained.

"All this sort of thing," he would say, "may seem trivial to a stranger, but it makes all the difference between success and failure in the House. For instance, if you were to ask pointblank, 'Will any man affirm that two and two make four?' most likely some member would call out 'Yes.'

"'But if you put it like this, 'Will any man come down to this House, and stand up in his place, and venture to say that two and two make four?' they'll all sit mum. It impresses 'em; I don't know why, but it does.

"Again, supposing you say something which is not quite accurate—you know what I mean—and the other side calls out, 'Oh, oh!' all you have to do is to turn to your men and say very indignantly, 'I am within the recollection of the House,' and if your side knows its business it will cheer like mad."

From Alaska.

It may be a matter of astonishment to many people to know that more than one-half the salmon pack of the United States and nearly half the world's supply of canned salmon now comes from Alaska. The capital invested in the Alaska salmon fisheries is said to be more than three million dollars, and the value of a season's catch, not including the manufactured products therefrom, comes to about two million dollars. Last year there were twenty-two canneries in operation, which packed six hundred and forty thousand cases, and twenty-four salting establishments put on the market twenty-one thousand barrels of salted salmon.

ATTACK BY REBELS.

FILIPINOS FAIL TO TAKE MANILA WATER WORKS.

Repulsed with Considerable Loss—Volunteers Meet Advance Like Veterans—Insurgents Have Secured Modern Artillery—Fight with Hale's Men.

After an all-night battle, waged at two points for possession of the Manila water works, the attacking rebels were dispersed in a gallant charge made by portions of Gen. King's brigade. The enemy opened the attack suddenly in the night, hoping to capture the water works, which are looked upon as the key to Manila, and possession of which would enable the insurgents to poison or shut off the water supply of the city.

The double attack was carefully planned, and would have been successful but for the admirable discipline and watchfulness of the American troops. The rebels were encouraged to make the attempt by the possession of two new cannon of modern type, which they had acquired in some unexplained manner, and which were used for the first time. In the fighting three members of the Nebraska regiment, two Wisconsin volunteers, and two ambulance men were wounded.

The opening attacks by the insurgents in the night were made simultaneously at a point six miles from the city, commanding the water works, and at San Tolan. Under cover of darkness the main force of the insurgents approached to within a short distance of the outposts of the Second Oregon and a battalion of the First Nebraska Regiment. They suddenly opened fire along a line of considerable length. The outposts returned the fire immediately, and for a long time the contest was maintained at a furious pitch.

The fire of the Filipinos, which is growing more accurate, was severe, and two Americans were wounded. Seventeen rebels were killed on the fighting line. Many were wounded, and the insurgents retreated a short distance, keeping up a fire until they were out of range.

Hot Fight with Gen. Hale.

The Filipinos at San Juan del Monte, numbering several thousand, were driven from their positions with great loss. Gen. Hale's brigade, which has been holding the water works, advanced on San Juan del Monte. Hale's men swept forward in the form of a "V," so that the entire rebel force might be encompassed and driven away in a body.

As soon as the lines were well under way, the Wyoming regiment closed in, firing rapidly. Suddenly one of the companies sprang from the line with a cheer and dashed toward the insurgent trenches. It was Company C, and the action electrified the American lines. The other companies of the Wyoming regiment leaped to the front, and the entire line swept down upon the Filipinos. Maintaining their fire for only a short time after the charge, the rebels leaped from their earthworks and fled, closely pursued. Retreat was cut off in all directions save toward the Pasig River, and as the insurgents turned that way they were met by a pitiless shelling by the gunboat.

In the woods the rebels were scattered into small bands and driven along the river front. The loss of the insurgents was heavy. The only casualty to the American forces was the wounding of Private Speach of the Nebraska regiment.

REFUSES ITALY'S DEMAND.

Chinese Government Declines to Lease San Mun Bay for a Coaling Station.

The Italian demand on China has been refused, and the result may be a combine between Italy and England against the Flowery Kingdom which may result in the dismemberment of China.

Dispatches from Pekin say: "The tsung li yamen (Chinese foreign office) has returned to the Italian charge d'affaires, Marquis Salvago Raggi, his dispatch containing the demand of the Italian Government for a lease of San Mun Bay on the same conditions as those under which Germany holds Kiao-Chou Bay, accompanying it with a letter declaring that the Chinese Government is unable to grant the request.

"The demand of the Italian Government for a ninety-nine-year lease of San Mun Bay, province of Che Kiang, as a coaling station and naval base, included also a demand for the concession of three islands off the coast of Che Kiang, with the right to construct a railroad from San Mun Bay to Po-Yang Lake and to preferential railroad and mining privileges within a sphere of influence covering the southern two-thirds of Che Kiang province.

"According to the dispatch the action of the Italian Government had caused great excitement there, not only among the Chinese but also among the foreign diplomats, the Chinese being convinced that Great Britain was chiefly responsible for the demand and that it had been made to emphasize Great Britain's displeasure at the turn which the northern railroad question had taken."

FRIENDS SHOW NO SURPRISE.

Wolcott Divorce Proceedings Have Been Looked For.

The friends and acquaintances in Washington of Senator and Mrs. Edward O. Wolcott are apparently not surprised at the news that they have arranged for the bringing of a suit for divorce. Since their marriage nine years ago the Wolcotts have been prominent socially, and those who know them intimately were aware that they were living on anything but amicable terms.

There is the highest authority for the statement that no charges except incompatibility of temper and desertion are contemplated or justified. The suit will be brought in Colorado and Senator Wolcott will make no defense.

PLANS FOR SIX CRUISERS.

Chief Constructor of Navy Starts Drawings for Vessels.

Rear Admiral Hichborn and Rear Admiral Melville, chief constructor and chief engineer of the navy, promptly have given orders for the preliminary work in drawing the plans for the six small cruisers of 2,500 tons displacement, authorized by the naval appropriation bill. They say it will take three or four months to complete the plans and advertise for bids. They will ask builders to finish the ships in a year after they are begun.

Nothing will be done at present with the six armored vessels authorized, and it is not considered likely that any steps will be taken regarding them until after Congress meets and provides a price for armor which manufacturers will accept.

Memorial to Miss Willard, the First of a Woman at Capitol.

The appropriation of $9,000 by the State of Illinois, to be devoted to a memorial at the capital of Miss Frances Willard of Woman's Christian Temperance Union fame, has aroused a discussion of the question whether or not her statue may occupy a position in statuary hall. It would be the first one of a woman to be placed there. Senator Mason says there can be no objection in law.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Family Narrowly Escapes Death from Poisoned Coffee—Coal Strike Ended at Washington—Monopolists in Dog Show Business—State Law Is Void.

Alonzo Wallet, his wife and Mrs. Wallet's sister, Mrs. Sarah Kline of Logan, Ohio, who was visiting at the Wallet home in Marion, were poisoned by drinking coffee made from a package found on their doorstep. A recent announcement in the local papers by a new coffee and tea house that they would furnish each house in the city with a trial package of coffee led Mrs. Wallet to believe that the package found was for trial, and she made enough for the family for breakfast. It is learned that the tea and coffee firm has not yet put out any samples.

Miners Long Strike Ended.

Indiana's long coal miners' strike was terminated at Washington by an agreement of the differences. The strike began nearly two years ago by the refusal of Cabel & Co. to pay for the removal of what is known as "dead dirt." The agreement entered into now provides that the company shall adhere strictly to the Chicago national agreement; shall pay for the removal of "dead dirt" and put in one and one-fourth inch screens to take the places of the one and a half-inch screens.

Corner on Dog Show Business.

The Gentry Brothers, the great Indiana dog show managers, have run a corner on the dog show business of the country by absorbing Sipe & Dolman, Sipe & Blake, Norris Brothers, Westlake Brothers, Sig Cannon and C. E. Rice. The Gentrys now own over 400 ponies, 600 trained dogs, 100 monkeys, eight elephants, three zebras and one goat. Their homes are at Bloomington.

Says State Law Is Null.

Glawser and his wife had lived on Mrs. Kinchloe's farm since their marriage a year ago. They often quarreled over religion, it is said, Glawser being a Catholic and his wife a Protestant. There has later developed a strong belief among the farmers living around Poseyville that Stephen Glawser did not kill his wife and mother-in-law and commit suicide, as reported, but that the three were murdered and their house set on fire. A young man who formerly worked for Glawser on his farm had a falling out with him and is said to have threatened to kill Glawser and his family. The young man has disappeared and cannot be found.

E. G. Runyan, drummer, Jeffersonville, dreamed that he saw his mother a corpse, and four hours later received a message that she was dead.

The suit in the Dearborn County Circuit Court between Allen S. Hisey of Dillsboro and his 3-year-old motherless daughter, Elsie May Hisey, ended in a verdict for the child-defendant. The suit was brought by Allen Hisey for property that came to the child from her dead mother, who before her marriage to Hisey was a popular young woman of Effingham, Ill., and who died less than a year ago. The child by the ruling of the court will receive two-thirds of the estate devised to her by her deceased parent.

PERFECT womanhood depends on perfect health.

Nature's rarest gifts of physical beauty vanish before pain.

Sweet dispositions turn morbid and fretful.

The possessions that win good husbands and keep their love should be guarded by women every moment of their lives.

The greatest menace to woman's permanent happiness in life is the suffering that comes from derangement of the feminine organs.

Many thousands of women have realized this too late to save their beauty, barely in time to save their lives. Many other thousands have availed of the generous invitation of Mrs. Pinkham to counsel all suffering women free of charge.

PERFECT WOMANHOOD

MRS. H. J. GARRETSON, Bound Brook, N. J., writes: "DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I have been taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with the best results and can say from my heart that your medicines are wonderful. My physician called my trouble chronic inflammation of the left ovary. For years I suffered very much, but thanks to Mrs. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and kind advice, I am today a well woman. I would say to all suffering women, take Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine and your sufferings will vanish."

MRS. MAGGIE PHILLIPPE, of Ladoga, Ind., writes: "DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—For four years I suffered from ulceration of the womb. I became so weak I could not walk across the room without help. After giving up all hopes of recovery, I was advised to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and wrote for special information. I began to improve from the first bottle, and am now fully restored to health."

Doctor Holmes' Partner.

The following flash of wit proves beyond a doubt that the late Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes was occasionally associated with another as brilliant as himself:

He used to dabble a little in photography, and once when he presented a picture to a friend, he wrote on the back:

"Taken by Oliver Wendell Holmes and Sun."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

No Such Thing as Depravity.

Forain, the French caricaturist, was recently asked whether he found depravity the deeper among the rich or the poor. "There is no such thing as depravity," he replied with all the disdain he could put into his voice. "At the top it is diseased nerves; at the bottom hunger."

Cured by "5 DROPS" After Physicians and All Medicines Fail.

SWANSON RHEUMATIC CURE CO., CHICAGO: Gentlemen—This is to certify that "5 DROPS" cured my wife of a very severe case of Rheumatism. I had used various liniments and patent medicines, and had the best physicians in West Texas on her case, all with no effect. She grew worse all the time and got so she had to be turned in bed; had no use of herself and one side, the arm, leg, etc., looked as though it never would be restored. This looks pretty "thin," but it is a fact and if any one doubts it, affidavit can be made as to its truth. Should anyone wish to know about this God-sent remedy let them write me, inclosing self-addressed stamped envelope, and I will prove it.

Gratefully, JOHN OLIVER, Huckabay, Texas.

Have You Heard Of It?

You may have heard about SCOTT'S EMULSION and have a vague notion that it is cod-liver oil with its bad taste and smell and all its other repulsive features. It is cod-liver oil, the purest and the best in the world, but made so palatable that almost everybody can take it. Nearly all children like it and ask for more.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

looks like cream; it nourishes the wasted body of the baby, child or adult better than cream or any other food in existence. It bears about the same relation to other emulsions that cream does to milk. If you have had any experience with other so-called "just as good" preparations, you will find that this is a fact.

The hypophosphites that are combined with the cod-liver oil give additional value to it because they tone up the nervous system and impart strength to the whole body.

J. A. Brent in Luck.

Many of our people know J. A. Brent, who married one of the daughters of the late William Shutt. He has often been here since his marriage, the last time being, when, on the death of his wife, he returned here for her burial. But he has all the time been in the gold mining business, and it will be of interest to know how he is succeeding. So we clip the following from the Salt Lake Daily Tribune of March 3:

For a quarter interest in the big Ivanhoe mine, near Plymouth, Amador county, Cal., Hal W. Brown of this city shelled out nearly $100,000 the amount going through the Utah National bank to the credit of J. A. Brent, a co owner of the bonanza. With the principals in yesterday's transaction, the ownership is now held by four persons, the others being Clarence K. McCornick and Gill S. Peyton.

It was about a year ago that the attention of Messrs McCornick and Peyton was called to the property that then presented a large body of low grade ore, a trade was closed in which the ownership was divided between them and Mr. Brent. With new talent behind him, Manager Brent stimulated his energies, and before the close of the season a twenty-stamp mill, capable of handling over 100 tons daily, was in operation. Since then they have been turning out a steady stream of gold bullion, while the capacity of the plant is to be doubled at once. The Ivanhoe is another of those proposition that present an almost exhaustless volume of ore of an average of about $4.50 in gold per ton, and from which the ores are literally quarried. Describing it yesterday, Mr. Peyton said it was no less than 40 feet between walls, and that ploughed from its confines the ores were simply shoveled, with practically no expense, into the mill. In his judgment, the proposition is the making of one of the most sensational in the annals of California.

Parsnip Complexion.

It does not require an expert to detect the sufferer from kidney trouble. The hollow cheeks, the sunken eyes, the dark puffy circles under the eyes, the sallow parsnip colored complexion indicates it.

A physician would ask if you had rheumatism, a dull pain or ache in the back or over the hips, stomach trouble, desire to urinate often, or a burning or scalding in passing it; if after passing there is an unsatisfied feeling as if it must be at once repeated, or if the urine has a brick dust deposit or strong odor.

When these symptoms are present, no time should be lost in removing the cause.

Delay may lead to gravel, catarrh of the bladder, inflammation, causing stoppage, and sometimes requiring the drawing of the urine with instruments, or may run into Bright's Disease, the most dangerous stage of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great discovery of the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, is a positive remedy for such diseases. Its reputation is world-wide and it is so easy to get at any drug store that no one need suffer any length of time for want of it.

However, if you prefer to first test its wonderful merits, mention The Auburn Courier and write to Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghampton, N. Y. for a sample bottle and book telling all about it, both sent absolutely free by mail.

A Frightful Blunder

Will often cause a horrible Burn, Scald, Cut or Bruise. Bucklen's Arnica Salve, the best in the world, will kill the pain and promptly heal it. An Old Paper.

By the kindness of L. Bowers we have an old copy of the Auburn Democrat, the date being March 8, 1866, thirty-three years ago. This copy is a seven column folio that is, just half the COURIER'S present size, of seven-column quarto. But it is full of interest matter, and was in its day, a creditable newspaper.

Andrew Johnson was president, and a good deal is said as to his administration, and the new laws that were then being discussed. Negro suffrage has a prominent place, and the "reconstruction" acts, are freely commented on.

The paper discusses the proposed adoption of the Maine Liquor Law.

It also gives the latest news from Mexico, which was then occupied by the French, and speaks of additions to the French army there making it now, over 7,000 men. It adds, that "the evacuation of Mexico by Napoleon is not going to take place in a hurry." How strange all this sounds now

The call for the democratic state convention is in this number, the convention to be held March 15.

Local matter is not given much space in this number, as a whole page is devoted to a speech by President Johnson. But we find a notice, to township trustees, signed by Spencer Dills as examiner. He urges the formation of the trustees into a County Board of Education, a plan that has been followed up and developed more or less by every examiner or county superintendent since. A meeting was called for Thursday at 1:00 p. m. to Friday at noon and we find to Trustee Eber Coil of Troy, was assigned "Proper Time for Opening Schools;" to John Nessel of Fairfield, "The importance of a Township Board of Education." The examiner had the subject of a County Board." J. W. Swaysgood, had "Township Examinations;" and there was a discussion as to wages, opened by Wm. Hubbell of Wilmington, "Apparatus for schools" was discussed by John Jackman of Franklin; and "Rules and Regulations for Teachers," by Joseph Walter of Jackson.

As to advertisements, this old paper was well patronized.

W. H. Dills advertises various pieces of real estate.

S. W. Sprott advertises for the Woolen Mills and says they will card all kinds of wool, spin yarn, weave and color cloth, etc.

C. S. Hare advertises his boots, shoes, leather, etc.

Jacob Snyder sells reapers, mowers, etc, etc.

Wolf & Lauferty have a half column for dry goods, clothing, groceries, etc

Albert Robbins was in the grocery buiness. His advertisement says he has bought the entire stock of J. E. Leopold, and is located second door south of Wolf's store, on Main-st.

H. Wartensleben does painting.

Dr. Simpson is a dentist.

L. J. Blair as county treasurer, calls certain outstanding orders, the same is still done by treasures.

Elizabeth Dunn advertises a sale of personal property.

John Ralston's name as couhty clerk, is found on seveard legal notices.

Elson & Jennings keep groceries, notions and clocks.

Mexican Bonds are advertised for sale, at 60 cents, drawing seven per cent interest, the principal and interest being both "payable in gold."

Wm. Sherlock says he will do butchering, etc.

Best and McClellan are attorneys at "Waterloo City."

C. & M. Sheets of the Auburn Mills, do grinding, sell flour, buy wheat, and cord wood, etc.

Waggoner & Barney advertise their groceries extensively.

J. O. P. Sherlock gives a good ad. for his marble shop

C. C. Shaffer has a half column for his furniture store and cabinet shop.

Mrs. McDowell has a millinery store, that she has just removed to the room formerly occupied by the law office of T. R. Dickinson. Some of these ads had a date of six months before, showing that the printer had an easy time handling them.

Of hotels, we find a card for the Great Western at Butler, kept by J. R Jackson, the city Hotel at Waterloo City, kept by Theron Storrs, the Phillips Hotel, Fort Wayne and French's Hotel, N. Y City, this last being to catch patronage from Auburn merchants, the most of whom made regular trips east for their goods.

D. J. Swarts, Keesler and Lyttle, have physisians' cards.

Of attorney cards, we find Guy Plum, Morris & Dills, Morrison & Hodge, John W. Rickel of Auburn and Geo. W. Maxwell of Butler.

Francis Picker advertises brick and stone work and plastering.

Phillip Fluke advertises the "Pioneer Tannery."

There are quite a number of ads. for distant cities like Toledo and New York, and a good many for patent medicines.

The County Commissioners were in session and had just granted liquor licenses to Ben. Bowman, H. J. Miller and James I Dirlan at "Waterloo City"

Haverstock and Fay of Butler, have a good ad. as also, Stiefel & Ochs of the same place.

The circuit court was to meet Apr. 16. There was then twelve grand jurors as well as twelve petit jurors. The following are the men drawn for each:

COURT NEWS.

Thursday's Daily.

The grand jury had the women testify in the murder case today, but of course no one knows the nature of what was brought out. It is likely that they told about the same story they did at the examination before Justice Walter as given in full in the COURIER at the time.

One girl, Sophie Maxwell has been bailed out by her father who lives at Churubusco. The other girl, Laura Wilson, will be bailed out tomorrow, both giving $200 bonds for appearance when wanted as witnesses. Mrs. Fish, the mother will be discharged as soon as she is examined. She gives no bond as it is to her interest to appear and testify for her son.

Friday's Daily.

Preliminary work was begun yesterday in the case of Anderson vs L. S. Ry Co., arguments and presentation of of the case being made by the attorneys Cyrus Cline and Wm. M. Brown of Angola for the plaintiff and R. C. Bell of Fort Wayne and C. E. Emanuel of this place, for the defendant railway It appears that Anderson shipped a lot of hogs over the Lake shore route to Buffalo, but sent no one with them. They went under a special contract by which the railroad gave a low rate of freight, by reducing their own risks at the same time. There was a delay some where along the line, our understanding being that the delay was between Buffalo and East Buffalo. And there came an extreme hot spell and the poor hogs many of them, died. This suit is to recover the value of the hogs lost. But the company claims that the special contract releases them. They say the hogs were given water at three different points along the route, but Anderson claims none would have died, had they been properl cared for. It is likely to be a hard fight.

The grand jury finished their examination yesterday, as to the Garrett case. They made the required trip to the poor farm yesterday, and this forenoon visited the jail. This afternoon, there being no further work, they were discharged. They have found an indictment against Ben. Fish who killed Dutton, for murder in the second degree. Twelve other indictments of various offenses have been found.

This forenoon came up divorce cases. Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Smith, well known citizens, were granted a divorce. These cases are generally lamentable ones, and this one especially so. They were once a prosperous and happy family but he gradually took to drink and then neglected his family, who had to then make their own living, which they are doing neccessfully. The children are grown, one daughter being married to a highly respected young Auburn man, and the other is doing her full share to help her mother, who is also an industrious woman, to gain a livelihood. The families of both husband and wife, are also highly respected citizens. But things had come to such a state, that a final separation was the only course left.

The next case was that of Mrs. Cadmar Walter who also procured a divorce.

D. R. Best as special Judge rendered his descision, this afternoon in the Stamets case. This was the one tried at the last term, but judgment not rendered. The point to this case is as follows: In 1857 Jacob Stamets was married in Ashland Co, O., and his wife was given about $3000 by her father. He came to Auburn to buy land, and she thought as the money was all hers, the deed should be in her name. He however, carried the idea to her that he would get a joint deed in both names. He bought the farm south of Auburn, and took the deed in his own name and soon after, they moved to this place and have been here since. A part of the land has been sold off in town lots, but until last March or April Mrs. Stamets supposed the deed was in her name. When she found it was not, she at once requested him to make the deed to her. He agreed to do this and got one of his sons to come up town and have Attorney Pomeroy draw up the deed. This was done in June of last year. Soon after this, Mr. Stamets was declared of unsound mind and Dr. D. N. Fitch appointed his guardian. Last term of court, Dr. Fitch, to test the validity of the deed that Stamets gave his wife in June last entered suit to have the deed set aside on the ground that Stamets was not in a fit mental condition to make a deed.

The case was tried at some length last term and much testimony for and against was introduced. Today the Judge, gave a long, written opinion at the close of which he stated that the deed must stand good, as at the time it was made, although Stamets was weak mentally and physically he understood what he was doing.

Saturday's Daily.

The arrest of Mrs. Fisher yesterday, calls attention again to the Garrett murder case. She was set free as noted in the COURIER at the time, without giving bond, as she would be sure to come in as witness when the trial for her son, Ben. Fisher took place. The two girls were put under $200 bonds to appear as witnesses. Yesterday, Mrs Fish and the girl still with her, May Wilson, were arrested on a charge of keeping a house of prostitution and are now in jail. The Maxwell girl is with her folks at Churubusco, and we do not know whether she will be arrested or not.

Yesterday was a busy day. Besides a number of fines imposed for the violation of the liquor laws, there were seven divorces granted. They were Cora and John W. McCurley, Blanche and J. H. Heighn, Minnie and Bert Baker, Sarah E. and John W. Smith, Louisa and Wm. Moorehouse, Alice and Cadmar Walter, Rebecca and Wm. Swank.

Thursday's Daily.

The Town of St. Joe.

The COURIER is looked to, to give all the news, and so we lay before our readers the plat of the territory now embraced in the title "Incorporated Town of St. Joe." The plat accepted and legalized by the Board of County Commissioners on Monday, March 6, 1899, reads as follows:

Beginning at the southeast corner of section 16, Township 33 north, of Range 14 east, in Indiana and running thence, west 1309 feet, thence north 1664 feet, thence east 5337 feet to the east line of the west half of the southwest quarter of section 15, of township and range aforesaid, thence south 1674 feet, thence west 4042 to the place of beginning, containing 204 and 54 hundredths acres."

Before accepting the above, the men who had been officers at the election held in St. Joe, January 11, made their report, showing that out of a total of 105 votes, 65 were "yes" and 40 "no," giving a plain majority for the incorporation. D. F. Benninghoff was clerk of the election and Jacob Sechler and Edwin Berry were inspectors, and made oath to the correctness of the returns.

E. W. Fosdick Dead

Edward D. Fosdick died at his home at Butler at 8:30 this morning.

As already noted in the COURIER he has been lying in a critical condition for some days, with little or no hope of recovery. Yesterday it became plain that the end was near. It came as noted, and one of Butler's most prominent citizens was no more.

Mr. Fosdick was one of the oldest attorneys of the DeKalb County bar, and has long been a prominent figure in our court room. But for a few years past it was noticed his appearance at court became less frequent, and for the last term or two, he was scarcely seen.

When the news came here this forenoon, action was taken at once to call a meeting of the bar, which was held at one o'clock. J. E Rose goes over to Butler this evening and after his return further action will be taken.

Auburn Boys

DeKalb county is well repesented abroad. This idea struck us, as we looked at a letter head in the hands of Rev. W. L. Meese It is "Eaton & Company, Publishers" and shows the name of Ira T Eaton, president and W. L. Eaton, treasurer; Geo. I. Talbot being secretary. Mr. Eaton is well known here, having married the second daughter of Mr Meese while the latter was sheriff, W. L. Eaton, is their oldest son, now twenty-one. He was born in Auburn, when they lived in the small red house, that stood where Charlie Bartel's, new residence is, but is now moved to the west end of the same lot. Mr. Eaton has compiled or got control of a number of text books, including the New Era series of readers and penmanship, Burton's U. S. History and other works. We hope to hear that they are successful.

A Thousand Tongues

Could not express the rapture of Annie E. Springer, of 1125 Howard-st., Philadelphia, Pa., when she found that Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption had completely cured her of a hacking cough that for many years had made life a burden. All other remedies and doctors could give her no help, but she says of this Royal Cure—"it soon removed the pain in my chest and I can sleep soundly, something I can scarcely remember doing before. I feel like sounding its praises throughout the Universe." So will every one who tries Dr. King's New Discovery for any trouble of the Throat, Chest or Lungs. Price 50c. and $1.00. Trial bottles free at H. B. McCord's drugstore, every bottle guaranteed.

Commissioners.

This was license day, and the great strife was over Bowles of Corunna and Mercer of the same place. Both had slyly put their notices in the Butler Herald which does not circulate outside the east half of the county, and they expected to sneak in in this way. But the Richland folks were onto the scheme and got up a bigger remonstrance than before. The vote of the township is 325 and 163 remonstrants would be enough. But they had 205 Neither applicant, however, appeared in person, though L. J. Gengler appeared for the two men and J. W. Baxter was for the remonstrants. The case went against the applicants, by default.

Liquor Licenses

The Board of Commissioners yesterday granted liquor licenses to Al Zerwes, Auburn; Peter Behler, John Sobraske and John H. Zeek of Garretts W. F. Shaver and Al. Parks, Waterloo, and Phil. Watters at Auburn. Junction. John Berg was given no license, owing to fines against him in the past two years. In cases of C. E. Mercer and John Bohls of Corunna, N. R. Dean of Newville, no license was given as a majority of the voters remonstrated.

Robbery at Garrett.

Burglars broke into Sherm McCullough's residence at Garrett last night and made a big haul. They got $100 in money belonging to Mr. McCullough and $485 cash belonging to Elsa Most, who is the local agent for the Centliver Company. They also got two watches. McCullough is a B. & O. conductor. As soon as the loss was discovered, the officers began a hunt for the thieves.

Dr. Adams was called and set it and the horse, which is a good one, will live though she may not be as useful as she would be had the accident never happened.

—The war at Manila is to be pushed rapidly. It is well known that some one in this country is sending treasonable dispatches to the rebels there, telling them that if they hold out a short time McKinley will yield. It is also true that the war is kept up by a few ambitious native leaders who want prominence and power. They also hope to get money. Once they find they will get nothing out of the war, they will disappear, Little or no fighting is expected anywhere else except near Manila.

IN OLD MEXICO.

A DeKalb Boy Writes of Our Sister Republic.

(Fort Wayne Sentinel)

Mrs Mary McOscar has received a letter from her son, Dr. E. J. McOscar, who is a member of the Gates touring party now traveling through Mexico. It is dated at Chapala, February 24, and gives a few interesting details with regard to Mexico. He says:

"We arrived here yesterday afternoon by lake steamer from Ocatlan and experienced our first Mexican hotel life. The lake is about 100 miles long and thirty miles wide, and is bordered by small farms which are owned by natives who carry water from the lake in jugs for irrigation purposes. Chapala, which is a place of about 3,000 inhabitants, is a beautiful town and contains a handsome hotel of white stone with a large dining room whose doors open upon gardens of the most fragrant flowers. The natives are of a most entertaining disposition and answer all questions with 'no savey.' On Wednesday we visited the city of Leon a city of about 80,000 people and had an audience with the mayor who is a most refined and polished gentleman and whose office is gorgeously furnished. We attended pontifical high mass at the cathedral and witnessed a Mexican funeral afterward. The coffin is rented for the occasion and at the grave the body is taken out and the coffin returned for future use. This is only among the lower classes. An interesting and ghastly spectacle is the pantheon or cemetery at Guanajuato, which is entered by a winding stair. In one chamber the dried forms of the former citizens stand around the walls and in another a heap of bones represents the remains of over 40,000 people. At San Luis Potosi we called on the bishop, whose palace adjoins the cathedral and a few of us had an audience with him. We found him to be a most entertaining gentleman who spoke English very well and his palace to be a large and handsomely furnished one On Wednesday we visited the silver reducing works and saw the natives working out the white metal the same way their forefathers did centuries ago.

Chapala is 5000 feet above the sea level and has a temperature of 70 degrees. The members of the party are enjoying the trip immensely."

COURT NEWS.

Thursday's Daily.

We have got a little behind on court affairs, as our paper was getting crowded. We shall give it all, however.

Barbara Miller vs John E. Miller for divorce, was finished Tuesday evening, the wife getting a divorce and $900 alimony, Mr. Miller paid in a part of it right away.

Dibie vs C. O. Willis for divorce goes over to next term of court on the first day.

The case of Sheets vs Rader is set for March 27. On that date Judge Adair will be here to try it and several other cases, including the damage case of Haskins vs town of Butler, a case of injury from a defective sidewalk.

Today, Thursday, the case between Osborn and Hartman was finished and the Judge has taken it under advisement.

Following this came the divorce case of Lizzie B. vs L. H. Klotz. Her attorney was W. H. Leas of Waterloo, while Karl Gerner of the same place represented Mr. Klotz. The divorce was granted.

Court then adjourned for the day.

Friday's Daily.

To the surprise of many, steps were taken yesterday afternoon, to secure a divorce form her husband, by Mrs. G. W. Askew. It had been known for a long time that there was trouble between them. He has been charging her with unfaithfulness and she him with drinking and cruelty. Last evening her attorney, J. W. Baxter, filed a suit for a divorce for her, and today the matter came up before Judge Hartman. D. M. Link represented Mr. Askew in the case, but no objection was made to her getting a divorce It is understood that he is willing to give her the home and $600 in notes, and some other articles, and let her keep the two girls. Judge Hartman examined the matter very thoroughly, but preferred to study it over awhile before settling the case. It is a lamentable and unfortunate affair, but perhaps as things are going, a divorce is the best thing.

After this came on the case between Ober and Broderick. Ober sues Broderick on account. It relates to the business of their former partnership.

Wiser, but not Prettier.

Ben Stiefel and his side partner Johnny Black over at Butler hied themselves last evening up into the law office of Holmes and Dunton two young attorneys of that place, with the determination of throwing them out of their office window. But like Napoleon, they met their Waterloo, for Mr. Holmes took care of Mr. Black in fine style, while Mr. Dunton although thrown to the floor by Mr. Stiefel, caught up a heavy square cornered glass inkstand, in falling, with which he gave Stiefel some ugly marks, which he will carry for some days. Mr. Stiefel had said to some bystanders, that should they see either of the attorneys come flying out of the window, they would know who had done it. But alas! they came down the stairs with their life's blood flowing only too freely.

Story of a Slave.

To be bound hand and foot for years by the chains of disease is the worst form of slavery. George D. Williams, of Manchester, Mich., tells how such a slave was made free. He says: "My wife has been so helpless for five years that she could not turn over in bed alone. After using two bottles of Electric Bitters, she is wonderfully improved and able to do her own work." This supreme remedy for female diseases quickly cures nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy. headache, fainting and dizzy spells. This miracle working medicine is a godsend to weak, sickly, run down people. Every bottle guaranteed. Only 50 cents. Sold by H. B. McCord the Druggist.

Should not Complain

Township trustees, many of them at least, complain that the new law seems to suspect them of dishonesty. If this is so, it is largely their own fault. There was one thing above all others, that gave rise to such nufavorable comments. A law was passed several years ago, making it the duty of trustees to publish a full financial report each year Only a few of them did this. The rest merely published a partial report or refused in most cases, to publish any. Quite a number were forced by legal process to come into court and show cause why they had not made a public showing A trustee who is doing his work properly need not fear having the public see his accounts.

Found His Harness

Today, A M. St. Clair was here and Sheriff Hathaway gave him a card he had received from Sheriff Melching of Allen county describing a set of double harness he had found. It describe's the set that was stolen from Mr. St. Clair a short time ago. He will go to Fort Wayne after it tomorrow. It appears the thief stole one horse at Hillsdale and the other in Allen county.

OBITUARY

David Goodwin was born in Ashland Co., Ohio, Nov. 5, 1826, died in Waterloo, Ind., March 9, 1899; aged 72 years, 4 months and 4 days.

The early part of his life was spent in his native county, he being one of a family of nine children three brothers and five sisters, of whom Daniel and Mrs. Mary Stroh are still living. On the 25th day of May 1853, he was joined in marriage with Miss Sarah Wiltrout. After six months they came to DeKalb county. and in the fall of '55 they moved upon the farm which has, for the past forty-four years, been their home Four children were born, Mrs. Mary Dilgard, Elmer, Mrs Allie Gavitt and Frank., who with the faithful wife and mother, still survive to treasure up the memory of an industrious and kindly husband and father. He was a man of considerable enterprise and thrift, though the most of his accumulations are the results of hard labor and economy. He and his thrifty wife cleared and tamed the farm which was in the state of nature when they took possession.

In the early days of their residence here he was converted to the religion of Christ, and was one of the first men to join the Waterloo class of the U. B. church, and when at last they built their house of worship, he was one of the liberal donors. He has, ever since his conversion, maintafned his membership with the church of his choice. A slow and insidious disease affected his brain several years ago, and has steadily progressed until at last Death mercifully ended the unequal struggle. Cottage services were largely attended at the old homestead, which were conducted by Revs. Moorman and Butler, and the burial was made in the Waterloo cemetery.

Meekison of Ohio

Has Been Greatly Benefited by Pe-ru-na.

Congressman D. Meekison of Ohio, writes the following letter to Dr. Hartman.

Dr. S. B. Hartman, Columbus, O.

DEAR SIR:—I have used several bottles of Pe-ru-na and feel greatly benefited thereby. I have been afflicted with catarrh of the head and feel encouraged to believe that continued use of Pe-ru-na will fully eradicate a disease of thirty years' standing.

Hon. D. MEEKISON.

Yours sincerely,
D. MEEKISON.

The continued receipt of endorsements like this for Dr. Hartman's great catarrh remedy, prove its value beyond question. Men of prominence everywhere are recognizing the merit of Pe-ru-na and are willing to give expression to their judgment because a certain, absolute cure for catarrh is a public good. In the matter of the Phillip Carper petition to vacate a road in Jackson township. the viewers, F. C. Waterman L. F. Stamets and Wm. Ashelman reported favorably, and it was decided that Mrs. Harriet J. Brown was damaged $300. This is to be paid by the parties and not by the county.

The J. H. Smith drain came up. Smith remonstrated; reviewers were appointed. James Bair, Henry Hood and Alonzo Barnes. Meet at source. April 24.

The Jacob Bryant road case is continued till next term.

Among the work done by the commissioners and not heretofore published we find these items:

G. W. Crooks reported to the Board that he had buried Stephen George, an old soldier, from public funds as allowed by law. A. E. Chapman trustee of Newville reported the same of Nelson Fusselman.

John Shippy filed a petition to have a street in Corunna vacated. Dr. Mercer and others filed a remonstrance So the matter goes over to next term.

Wm. Marea and J. H. Smith were appointed constables in Keyser township.

Mr Bartels, Superintendent of poor farm made his report, as did all the county officers, each one reporting the amount of fees he had collected and turned into the treasury. The clerk had to report the fees he had received for Sheriff Hathaway as well as some back fees for Stroh.

Commissioners' Special.

Today there waas specil session of the Board to consider the matter of improvements for the court house. There has been some talk of putting up an addition to the court house, to use as a fire proof vault for the various records, and in connection, there was talk of a water closet. But we understand they did not think it wise to build an addition to the court house, and we fully agree with them. If sush a building is to be put up at all, we think their other plan far wiser. And that is, to put up a new, but not large, building east of the jail, and here the vaults could be made for the records that are not much used, and also, the water closets. In the basement of this room could be put the boiler for heating both the jail and court house.

What they Decided On

The Commissioners yesterday decided they would not build an addition to the court house, but a separate building, 27x33 feet, located east of the jail, It is te be a neat, tasty and permanent building, but not a costly one- It will have a basement in which will be placed the new boiler that has to be had to take the place of the one now in the jail basement, which is playing out and is not large enough, The building will be in the right place. also for a permanent public water closet. Then they will repair the jail and give it a new roof. They will repair the roof on the cupola on the court house, which now leaks badly. The woodwork on the inside and out will be painted, and the foundation fixed if need be. In fact all will be put in good repair at as little cost as possible for a good job. We think their plan a good one, and believe the people will be suited.

A Legislative Blunder

—Kendallville Sun:—House bill, No. 423, which provides for the establishment of a hospital for the insane at Jeffersonville and carrying an appropriation of $25,000, passed the house and was killed by the senate, but by a mistake, perhaps by some clerk, an entry was made showing that it had passed the senate. In this form it was taken to the governor who signed the bill and later it was endorsed by the lieutenant-governor just as if it had passed the senate. The one redeeming feature of the case is that the Reformatory officers have not commenced the building yet and the matter can be called off without serious injury, but it was a ludicrous blunder, just the same, even if the blunderer cannot be located.

Pay For Clothing.

Capt. Frank Lahnum has received from Adjutant-General James K. Gore, the following circular, which all the boys of Company K, will understand as well as he. It will not pay to be to any trouble in calling on, or writing to officers now. Some time in June probably, the law will go into effect, and then the matter will be attended to and the boys will get the money that was kept back out of their pay for clothes.

THE CIRCULAR.

INDIANAPOLIS, March 10, 1899.

SIR:—You are informed that Senate Bill 293 (Senator Gilbert) makes provision for refunding the money charged against volunteers for clothing issued by the State of Indiana and which was deducted from the pay of officers and men by the United States.

SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, That there is hereby and shall be appropriated out of the revenue of the State not otherwise appropriated by law, the sum of forty thousand dollars ($40,000,) which said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be paid out upon orders of the Adjutant-General of the State of Indiana to such manner as in hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. It is hereby made the duty of the Adjutant-General of the State of Indiana to accept from each commanding officer of companies of said regiments and batteries, and from each officer of the field and staff of said regiments, vouchers for the amounts of said clothing and equipments charged up to them as shown by the books and papers on file in the office of the Adjutant-General and Quartermaster-General of the State of Indiana.

SEC 3. The Adjutant-General of the State of Indiana shall deposit said vouchers when so received with the Auditor of State and shall be entitled to draw from the funds appropriated by this act such amounts as are covered by such vouchers, and it is hereby made his duty to transmit to the persons executing the vouchers the amounts for which said vouchers so accepted call.

SEC. 4 Any amounts of the sum appropriated by this act remaining in the treasury upon the first day of January 1900, shall revert to the general fund.

This law will not be in effect until after the Govenor issues his proclamation that the laws passed by the Sixty-first General Assembly have been printed and a copy receipted for by the Auditor of each county in Indiana, which will probably be about June 1.

As soon as possible blank vouchers will be mailed to the commanding officer of each company, to be executed; and it will be of no use to write to this office concerning this money, as full instructions will be given each commanding officer.

Very respectfully,
JAS. K. GORE,
Adjutant-General.

County Orders Above Par

Our county debt is getting so low, that offers have been made to pay a premium of 2 cents on county orders. After this summer there will not likely be any order on sale. Now if we avoid any other expenses that can be got along without, we shall begin to receive premiums instead of paying interest and losing a discount. Every officer will no doubt feel it a duty and a pleasure to put up with any ordinary inconvenience in order to help bring about and keep up this good condition. Then in a few years, we can begin to lay aside a little sum each year, a sum so small the taxpayers will not feel the burden. And then after a time there will be saved up ahead, enough to start in on a new court house, not a palace, but a good comfortable up-to-date court house. Such a one can be had in time and the burden would hardly be felt.

A Dog's Gold Tooth

E. M. Bishop, while at the great dog show, saw the famous $500 English bull terrier dog, Clipper II. that has the two gold teeth. They are the long teeth, one on each side of the upper jaw and are nicely built up on decayed teeth and being three fourths of an inch long show nicely and the dog seems proud of them. The teeth were put in by Dr. Leon Young who has a dog hospital in the city. The first thing done was to take an impression of the shape of the decayed teeth in wax and on this they made a plaster cast, then made the gold tooth to fit it. Then they put a stick in the dog's mouth so as to hold the mouth open, and then with the usual machine, ground off the snags to proper shape, the dog now and then giving a yelp of pain. Then they gave him ether, as he must be held still while they bored holes in the snags, attached the gold teeth and riveted them on. The teeth were then polished and while doing this, a snap shot was taken a copy of which Mr. Bishop has cut from a daily paper. The dog seemed pleased when it was over.

Time's Up, Sandy.

The time of the groundhog's sway, expired yesterday according to Constable Stoner, and we think he is right. But the groundhog seems to have overlooked this fact, for his ridiculous weather goes right on. It is time for him to wake up and put a stop to it. We feel like serving him as did the newsboys, who were being addressed by a redheaded preacher. He began by saying he would speak only five minutes The little hoodlums watched him carefully, and at the very minute one yelled out "Time's up Sandy."

Bismark's Iron Nerve

An Innovation in Sleeping Car Service Introduced by the Baltimo & Ohio Railroad.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad has introduced a new feature in its sleeping car service on through trains between Newark, Ohio, and Baltimore, Md., and Chicago and Pittsburg, inaugurating what will be known as the "Ordinary sleeping cars in addition to the regular Standard sleeping cars.

One of these cars will be attached to No. 8 leaving Newark at 10:22 a. m. next day.

Also on train No. leaving Chicago at 3:30 p. m. arriving Pittsburg at 6:40 a. m. (Central Time), and returning on train No. 5 leaving Pittsburg at 7:20 p. m., arriving Chicago at 10.00 a. m.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad is the first line to introduce this service in the eastern territory for special accommodation of the traveling puplic. In these "Ordinary sleepers the Pullman rate is reduced one-half, so that passengers have the choice of paying the higher Pullman rate and occupying Standard car or take advantage of the cheaper rate and occupy the "Ordinary" sleeper. These latter cars are available to passengers holding either first or second class tickets.

These sleepers are new, have been especially constructed for this service and differ from the Standard sleeping cars only being less elaborately furnished. The seats are upholstered in rattan, and the sleeping berths, when made up, have all the comforts and conveniences of the Standard case.

SMOKEESS POWDER FOR NAVY.

New Product Meets the Test of All Service Conditions.

The Navy Department is ready to take whatever steps may be necessary in carrying out the provisions of the naval bill for the purchase of smokeless powder during the coming year. It is not intended to antagonize the commercial interests involved in this line of manufacture by throwing the whole burden of production upon the Government plants. The Government has a plant at Indian Head which, when completed, will turn out a maximum amount of about 3,000 pounds a day. But this will in no way compete with the private manufacturers. The navy now has a powder known to the profession as pyrocellulose, which is equal to, if not better than, the smokeless product used by foreign powers. The new powder, which has been tested by the navy under service conditions, has been so nicely adjusted to their requirements that it has increased their efficiency an average of 500 second feet.

General Gomez Is Chief.

A Havana special telegram says: Gen. Gomez has decided to proceed with the plans agreed upon for distributing $3,000,000 to the Cuban troops, on disbanding, as though the military Assembly did not exist. He conferred with Governor General Brooke regarding details. Gen. Brooke asked Washington several days ago whether in case he dissolved the Assembly, his action would be approved. The reply authorized him to dissolve that body, if in his judgment such act is necessary. He hopes the Assembly will soon cease of its on accord to hold its sessions, but should its sessions become disquieting to the public mind, he will intervene.

The United States military authorities publish the following statement:

"We are officially authorized to say that the President of the United States will not recognize any obligation incurred by the Cuban Assembly.

Murdered in Cold Blood.

Palmetto (Ga.) special: Nine negroes were the victims of masked white caps here Friday morning. The negroes were charged with burning the town last January and were imprisoned under guard in an out-house. A gang of 200 men overpowered the guard and the negroes were shot down. Six are dead and the others will die.

The negroes of the town threaten vengeance and the people are arming. Gov. Chandler promises to send troops immediately.

The trouble arose originally over the prohibition laws. The negroes carried whisky bottles and glasses and sold drinks. Many were arrested. They threatened to burn the town, and fires followed. The nine men arrested for arson, with the lynching, was the next chapter.
